"BULLY BOTTOM"

SELDOM has a more touching plight among the oppressed classes been brought to light than is afforded in the situation which has driven Mr. James Cagney of Brooklyn and Hollywood to the law courts for protection.

Young and innocent and trusting, Mr. Cagney permitted himself to be lured from the comfortable, assured and august position of a song and dance man in vaudeville to the slavery of the motion picture mills of Hollywood, under the veritable press gang contract now calling for forty weeks of services a year at $4,500 a week, renewable at $5,000 a week.

If one may read aright the pleadings in his action against the masters to whom he is bound, Warner Brothers, Mr. Cagney is under the impression that someone promised that he would be required to work in only four pictures a year, and yet in spite of that he has delivered himself, soul and body one may suppose, in fourteen pictures in three years.

The sympathetic observer of the scene will recall with what diligence Mr. Cagney smacked and kicked his way to fame and fifteen hundred dollars a week, submerging, one may fancy, at great cost, his own interior delicate gallantry, while he sacrificed the curving anatomy of Hollywood femininity to his art. And one must not forget, too, how Warners so ruthlessly invaded Mr. Cagney's natural violet-like modesty and policy of self-effacement by bringing to bear on his product prodigious publicity and selling efforts, thereby destroying for him any possibility of that anonymity and seclusion that every actor holds dearer than life itself.

At a time like this, Mr. Cagney's friends should sympathetically recall also that day when he was crying out on a mere pittance of $1,400 a week, giving voice to his woes, and ruthless, cruel, unthinking breadliners made his life bitter with unkind mail and threw mud at his billboards. Mr. Cagney has suffered.

Also it is probably certain that the employers of Hollywood have no adequate appreciation of Mr. Cagney's contributions to the actor state of mind in those parts. It is said that they tend to regard as remarkable the coincidence that arguments with other players, including notably Miss Joan Blondell and Miss Bette Davis, came in sequel to their appearing in stage contact with the oppressed Mr. Cagney. Even some of the "grips", "juicers" and "prop men" have been unaware of how much they were in the clutches of the bosses until a fellow sufferer explained.

If, as a result of his current manful uprising, Mr. Cagney comes away with anything less than absolute authority over his pictures, casting, story, cameraman and director, hours and periods of work, and number of releases per season, something less than the sort of justice he seeks will be had. It is to be presumed that his employers will be permitted to supply the studio and the capital.

It is at the moment interesting to remember Mr. Cagney in one of his best roles, that of "Bottom" the transmuted ass of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," as he emerged saying: "Methought I was—methought I had—" and reached for his ears.

Some dreams come true.

AT UNITED ARTISTS

THE acquisition of Mr. George J. Schaefer, as vice-president and general manager, by United Artists Corporation, brings attention to the fact that within the last few months the aspect and import of that organization has been vastly, if not spectacularly, changed.

Indications are that from that sector the industry will see considerable extension of activities, in both production and distribution, and a new aggressiveness in the world market.

It is to be observed that through all the years that "unit production" has been a subject of discussion in the industry, United Artists has been producing just that way. Now there is an increase in the number of units and important increase in creative manpower of the first rank.

Some of the circular motion of destiny is indicated in the fact that in going to United Artists Mr. Schaefer is again in contact wth many of the figures of his earlier days at Paramount, and that his new desk stands precisely where his friend, the late Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, once presided over another corporation, the same "L. J." in whose service Mr. Schaefer entered the industry at World Film Corporation twenty-one years ago.

THE PARENTS' JOB

WITH so many movements continuously beating the air with drives to make the movies safe for the young, etc., by special enactment of laws and assorted devices of censorship, there is pleasant re-statement of a sound contention in the utterances of Rabbi Lee J. Levinger of Columbus, Ohio, who wrote in the Sunday Star the other day:

" . . . it is merely mental laziness that makes most parents bewail the effect of the movies on their children, declaring that Hollywood is a debaucher of the young. Censorship, like charity, should begin at home. If the parent is really on the job the movies will not hurt his child. In fact, instead of a curse, they may easily become a blessing."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Mae West and Block Booking

The case of compulsory block booking and blind selling was again tried, before a sub-committee of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the United States Senate at Washington, this week, independent exhibitors and their friendly "outside" interests appearing as the proponents of a bill (Neely-Pettingill) to legislate the practice out of existence, as against the opposition of all distributors and producers and the majority exhibition interests and their "outside" supporters.

Basically, the argument advanced was that block booking forces exhibitors to play or pay for the "Mae West Picture," which distributors denied was the real issue. Exhibitors themselves, the distributors charged, ask for the "Mae West Picture" ahead of any other kind and cancel the "quality" type that has good moral standing but questionable commercial appeal.

A score of arguments were advanced by one side or the other and were refuted as quickly as they were submitted as testimony for the Senate record. The case is reported on page 13.

Mae West also figured in the news of the week when William Randolph Hearst barred from his newspapers all advertising on "Klondike Annie." See page 19.

So Sale Grows

The publicity furor attack on the motion picture industry raised by Sinclair Lewis over Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's alleged decision not to film his "It Can't Happen Here" has increased sales of the book from 2,500 to 5,000 copies a week.

Robert Haydon Jones, advertising manager of Doubleday-Doran, the publisher, gave out those figures and said this week that the publicity campaign was "the greatest stimulant given sales of a book in recent years."

Mr. Jones insisted that the campaign had not been planned in advance, explaining that upon learning of the author's statement, given to the United Press in Washington Saturday afternoon, he called in his agency account executive and typographer, and the three toiled all day Sunday turning out the advertisements which appeared next morning in New York papers.

Joining the fun, the Authurs' League of America issued a statement blaming Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, for the decision on the picture plans and called on the industry to remove Mr. Hays. The New York Sun was the only standard paper that printed the statement.

The League decided to join with the National Council on Freedom from Censorship in calling a mass meeting to protest against "censorship of this type." Meanwhile the fever had abated sufficiently for the Council to announce that a mass meeting or dinner may be held some time in March at which further resolutions would be adopted, with copies for the press.

Union Showdown

While the dove of peace hovers over Hollywood studios, now that the jurisdictional fight of labor unions is history, another battle is in the offing.

This is over the long-standing demand for producer recognition of the Writers' and Actors' Guilds and several other groups who have joined forces for a test of strength with their employers when the studio basic agreements are negotiated this month.

Direct action groups, they are organized for drastic measures, a strike if necessary. The current situation and how it came about is related on page 14.

MPTOA Session

Few if any of the 35 officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were expected to miss the two-day annual meeting of the board of directors at Miami, Thursday through Friday. Ed Kuykendall, president, M. A. Lightman, A. Julian Brylawski, B. N. Bernstein and W. S. Butterfield, vice-presidents, Morris Lowenstein, secretary, Walter Vincent, treasurer, Edward G. Levy, general counsel, and Fred Wehrenberg, chairman, were to arrive on Wednesday.

Others declaring intention to attend were E. M. Fay, O. C. Lam, L. C. Griffith, Sidney B. Lust, L. Pizor, Jack Miller, Charles W. Picquet, R. X. Williams, Jr., Morgan A. Walsh, Charles E. Williams, David Palfreyman.

Supplementary to the executive session composing the official business of the meeting, round table discussions of exhibitor affairs were in prospect.

Reelection of Ed Kuykendall as president was expected.

Eying Television

Television is at least the subject of wide conversation in radio, stage and motion picture circles, if not a commercial actuality, so this week the motion picture cast an observing eye toward the development, a periodical event, to ascertain the extent of progress, finding:

The United States reversed itself in making concessions which will allow American Telephone and Telegraph to resume experiments; Farnsworth Television admitted existence of plans for the opening of a sending station; New York's Sun concluded that television is "close to realization," predicting "important developments," and in England exhibitors succeeded in having a clause inserted in rental contracts protecting them against television competition through the use of regular releases on television programs. These and some dozen other developments in the field are reported on page 72.

Rowland Resigns

Richard A. Rowland, long a producer and executive, has resigned from his position with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio in Hollywood and is now in New York on business.

Mr. Rowland joined MGM eight months ago after having been with RKO in New York for a short while in an executive capacity following his return from retirement. Mr. Rowland expects to return to Hollywood in about three weeks.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Cost Handicap

Educators the country over are hampered by lack of funds in their hopes of widespread adaptation of motion pictures to educational use, according to the United States Government, which now is investigating the educational films field, through its Bureau of Education. Classroom films have not traveled any farther than the largest of cities, the Government found, because the cost of conducting film work in school system is too great in cities of less than metropolis population. Further results of the study are outlined on page 60.

Eyes East

With the gospel of production of international films by American companies in Europe, Gregor Rabinovitsch, for six years major producer at UFA, arrived in Hollywood this week to head Universal unit.

His claims that Continental production would be practicable and profitable were, however, challenged by film company executives in New York. The story is on page 45.

Crooning Witness

Picturing sound as the savior of the film industry, members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers this week told the House patents committee that, were it not for the song writers, motion picture theatres would be dark and empty. The plight of the motion picture a decade ago was related to the committee by Rudy Vallee, who said, "I think sound came along just at the time when silent pictures were doomed."

While copyright legislation may be acted upon eventually by Congress, there is absolutely no chance of the United States becoming a party to the Berne convention. Members of the committee this week put themselves on record as unalterably opposed to adherence in view of the "bigotry and intolerance" to American authors and writers abroad and the objections of the American Federation of Labor to the opening of our markets to books printed in Europe with cheap labor, now barred by statute, which would be part of the price to be paid for membership in the Berne convention.

Tax returns of film theatres indicated sale of $1,500,000,000 in admissions in 1934 and one cent out of every $47 of that total went to writers and composers, the committee was told Wednesday by E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP. "The theatres never could have done this business without music," he declared.

Aroused over dissension in committee and criticisms of his method of handling the hearings, Representative Sirovich brought the matter up on the floor of the House on Tuesday, asserting that a serious need exists for stronger protection for authors and composers. He, too, opposed entry in the Berne convention as placing the United States under disadvantages in excess of the possible benefits.

Again charging ASCAP with having been a "highjacking proposition," Representative Zioncheck of Washington, following Sirovich, told the House that unless his petition was signed by a sufficient number of members to take the legislation away from the committee, its "circus" hearing would go on until adjournment of Congress and no legislation would be enacted.

Suit Dropped

Supreme Court Justice Edgar J. Lauer in New York Tuesday dismissed the suit for $14,896,032 brought against Floyd B. Odlum and other directors of Securities Allied Corporation, formerly Chatham Phenix Allied Corporation, for alleged waste and mismanagement.

The court observed that the questions of law involved were not defined and granted a motion to dismiss with the suggestion that an appeal be taken. The action was brought by James J. Donovan.

Mr. Odlum is president of Atlas Corporation, which has extensive investments in the motion picture industry, including Paramount and RKO.

U. S. Acts

William P. Sears, United States deputy marshal, last week began serving the 40 corporate and individual defendants in the Government's New York suit against Warners, Paramount and RKO in the St. Louis-Fanchon and Marco matter, alleging the defendants withheld product from the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres in St. Louis.

The papers served last week were copies of the original complaint filed in the United States district court last Tuesday in New York. Subpoenas for about 45 witnesses will not be issued until a hearing date has been set by the court. Respondents in the action have until March 16 to file answers.

Although attorneys for the 10 companies involved accepted service in most instances, few individuals were served, most of them being away from New York. In the Warner group, Herman Starr and Clayton Bond were served, as were John E. Otterson and Charles M. Reagan of Paramount and Cresson E. Smith of RKO.

Roy H. Haines, metropolitan branch manager of Warners and Sam Dembow, Jr., National Screen Service executive, were also served with copies of the government's complaint, these two being among the 30 individual defendants named in the action.

Mimeographed copies of the 24-page application for a temporary and permanent injunction have been sent to a number of marshals out of town to be served on defendants residing in those towns. Included in the list were: Maurice Silver, Warner Albany district theatre head; Nat H. Brower, coast district sales head for Warners; Robert Hicks, manager of the Orpheum, St. Louis; Byron F. Moore, in charge of the Orpheum, Shubert Rialto and Hi-Point, St. Louis; Ralph LiBeau, Paramount midwest district manager, with headquarters in Kansas City; Maurice Schweitzer, Paramount St. Louis branch manager; Carroll Peacock, Los Angeles branch manager for Paramount; Myke Lewis, coast district sales manager for Paramount; Ralph Kohn, who is associated with B. P. Schulberg in production; Bernard J. McCarthy, St. Louis manager for RKO, and Louis Ellman, former St. Louis exchange head and now stationed at Des Moines.

More Action

Eleven additional suits, two in New York and nine elsewhere, have been filed by Warner music subsidiaries against radio stations for alleged infringement of music owned by the companies. These bring the total of such suits to 36.

Answering a recent Warner action, Columbia Broadcasting System denied copyright violation, claiming it had the right to broadcast the music in question by virtue of its five-year contract with ASCAP.

Columbia contended the matter did not involve copyrights but merely the question of title to the compositions among ASCAP, Warner and the song writers. Other defendants take the same position.

Tax Data

P. J. Wood, secretary of the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners, quotes records of the state treasurer's office as authority for the statement that during 1934, when a 10 per cent admission tax was in effect, the state collected $3,366,705.15, whereas in 1935, when the admission impost was superseded by a 3 per cent sales tax on grosses, exhibitors paid the state $1,278,940.19. Conversely, the state collected at the rate of $48,000 per year from the $1 per 1,000-foot reel censorship fee, whereas, since this has been increased to $3 and newsreels, heretofore excluded, are included, collections are at the rate of $185,000 annually.

CASE OF BLOCK BOOKING ARGUED BEFORE SENATORS

Subcommittee Hears Arguments Concentrated Upon Complaint Sales System Forces "Mae West Pictures" Upon Exhibitors

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The old arguments over block booking and blind selling appear to have narrowed down to the heaving bosom and bustles of Mae West.

Miss West symbolized the reasons advanced last week to the United States Senate by some exhibitors and clubwomen who seek to wreck the distribution structure by an Act of Congress in order to abolish the so-called "compulsory" block booking practice and substitute free-for-all buying and selling in open auction.

The occasion was a Senate sub-committee hearing on the Neely-Pettengill (anti block booking-blind selling) Bill, S. 3012, held in the Interstate Commerce Committee chambers in the white marble Senate Office Building in the shadow of the Capitol, at Washington. There, on Thursday and Friday, the attention of the Senators was attracted to the perennial motion picture argument between minority interests and the majors.

Block booking forces Mae West on theatres, the bill's proponents charge, without any redress—either they "play or pay." Distributors deny that such is the way of the system.

The basic forces pitted against each other were no different than those who have previously engaged in similar battles: Allied States Association of Exhibitors, the Motion Picture Research Council and squadrons of reformers and other elements from the outside, all demanding block booking abolition, against the opposing guns of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America—Allied's competitor—the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, and organizations from the outside which are friendly to the present industry conduct and management. The producer-distributor-exhibitor element rode to the hearing from Broadway determined to settle the block booking question "for all time."

The consensus was that block booking's status will not be altered by this Congress, consideration being given to the House subcommittee's forthcoming hearing on March 9th, and even though there still are three pending block booking bills in the House: (1) Representative Celler's H.R. 142; (2) Representative Culkin's H.R. 4757; and, (3) Mr. Celler's H.R. 8877.

The question before the national legislature is whether it shall be unlawful for producers to require exhibitors to contract for future films sight unseen, en bloc.

The Senate hearing got under way at 10:30 A.M. Thursday to the flashes of newspaper photo lamps and the attention of the press of the country, as represented by International News Service, Associated Press, United Press and others. Senator Mathew Mansfield Neely, Democrat, of West Virginia, presided over the sub-committee of five.

Failing in an attempt to postpone the session one week, admittedly because of some personal business requiring his attention in West Virginia, Senator Neely, after the first day, turnel the gavel over to Senator James John Davis, Republican, of Pennsylvania. The committee as a whole listened to the arguments for but a single brief period on the first day. At other times only the chairman was on hand. Evidently they intend to read the printed record.

Canon Chase Silent

The proponents were the first to testify. Canon William Sheafe Chase, noted reformer, was there, but, for the first time in years, remained silent.

Leading the attack was Dr. Stephen P. Cabot, of the Motion Picture Research Council. Virtually all the industry spokesmen who favored passage are Allied officials or affiliates: Abram F. Myers, general counsel and chairman of the board, a non-theatre owner; Nathan Yamins, Allied president, owner of theatres at Fall River, Mass.; Sidney Samuelson, former president of Allied, operating a theatre at Newton, N. J.; H. M. Richey, Allied executive, and non-exhibitor; and Walter B. Littlefield, Allied, of Boston.

Some 75,000,000 in this country regularly attend 15,000 theatres, and of that number 10,000,000 are children, Dr. Cabot told the Senators, adding: "The public attends motion pictures for three reasons: (1) Entertainment; (2) Relaxation; (3) Experience.

Self-regulation within the industry is futile, declared Dr. Cabot, who cited "broken promises" of producers to "clean up" Hollywood, adding that groups interested in obtaining clean pictures through cooperation with exhibitors failed because the theatre owners advised them they were "powerless" to give redress due to the block booking demands of "play or pay."

"Blind buying and block booking leaves the exhibitor powerless to give the family the opportunity of selection," he added.

Canada, England and Russia succeed in controlling child attendance through selection that came with elimination of block booking, "but we in the United States are powerless," he said.

Dr. Cabot charged that the system is "stifling" art, its abolishment is "the only solution to open the field to independent production." The bill "will remove the constantly threatening danger of Hollywood dictating what communities 3,000 miles away can see."

Questioned by Senator Neely, Dr. Cabot admitted that motion pictures have made "tremendous improvements." But, he added, "there is no guarantee that this will continue."

The Neely-Pettengill bill is the Research Council's "minimum demand," explained Dr. Cabot.

No Substitute Proposed

Machinery for guiding exhibitor selection of only the best under the single picture buying principle of the bill is a mystery. Dr. Cabot, answering a question from Senator Jesse Hougton Metcalf, Rhode Island, explained that the communities would bring "pressure to bear" on the exhibitor, and after the Senator expressed doubt that the exhibitor could be controlled to book "quality" rather than "box office" product, agreed that the influence could not be pressed in large communities.

Dr. Cabot said that the Motion Picture Research Council was responsible for the Neely-Pettengill bill, and that the legislative drafting division of Columbia University in New York actually wrote it. This caused the summoning of Thomas E. Ervin, a Columbia billdrafting student.

Mr. Ervin said the Research Council had requested Columbia to draft the measure, but that no one with any motion picture experience had helped to write it. He said he never had any practical film experience.

Senator Neely then read into the record a brief from the Federal Motion Picture Council demanding the following amendments:

1. Minimum penalty clause.
2. Federal commission to govern regulation.
3. Power of instituting equity proceedings in federal courts against violators.
4. The merging of Senator Neely's bill with the Culkin bill in the House.

Abram F. Myers, Allied's general counsel and board chairman, started his attack, "for the exhibitor's economic interests," with the charge that block booking prevents theatres from choosing the best pictures offered by all producers and requires them to take all pictures—good, bad and indifferent—offered by a few.

Allied's "little white book," which has been

HERALD IS QUOTED IN HOUSE AND SENATE

Motion Picture Herald was quoted from extensively, for the record, in both branches of the national government in Washington this week.

Quoting copiously from the Herald in a speech on copyright legislation made on the floor of the House, Representative William I. Sirovich of New York, chairman of the House patents committee, discussed foreign restrictions against American pictures. The quotations were entered in the Congressional Record.

Too, in the Senate Neely-Pettengill subcommittee hearing, Sidney Lust, Washington exhibitor, submitted the Herald as evidence to show that exhibitors have means of obtaining advance information on pictures.

SHOWDOWN NEARS IN FIGHT OVER ONE BIG UNION AT THE STUDIOS

Actors' and Writers' Guilds Sound Out Unions on Support in Ultimatum for Closed Shop; Equity To Back Them

A showdown on the studio crafts' demands for a "closed shop" in Hollywood—for actors, writers and other organized groups unrecognized by the producers—is due this month, according to union circles, mapping a fight to achieve their objectives.

Direct action is the policy of these groups, in which the Screen Actors' and Writers' Guilds are dominant. While efforts have been made before to obtain a closed shop, the unions were not in as strong position as they are today, and since last year the basic groundwork has been laid whereby a closed shop could be negotiated.

The various unions in Hollywood have been operating under a "working agreement" which calls for mutual support, and Actors' Equity Association, the closed shop union of stage actors, is prepared to back the Screen Actors' Guild, its west coast affiliate, to the limit in event of a test of power.

It is understood the guilds are preparing to demand recognition in the negotiations between the major producers and coast studio unions on renewal of the one-year basic agreement, due in Hollywood this month. The guilds would like to have the support of the powerful International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, which not long ago was granted closed shop status and studio jurisdiction by the major producers.

Sounding Out Unions

Actors' Equity Association in New York has heard that the Actors' and Writers' Guilds have approached the IATSE and other unions with regard to the extent of support they may expect if they issue an ultimatum for a closed shop. A move as drastic as a strike would depend largely on the assurance given. While the IATSE is not committing itself, its policy has been to enter into working agreements with other unions, while feeling that membership of such groups as writers and actors was alien to its scope.

Such a working agreement is in effect between the IATSE and the American Federation of Musicians. Instead of accepting the writers and actors within its ranks, there exists a strong possibility that the IATSE would agree to an arrangement on "joint action," in the event of forcing an issue through strikes, lockouts and such. However, that was said to be a matter for the future.

When the discussions on a new basic agreement are held, the Hollywood guilds, it is understood, are going to make an attempt to have the IATSE use its "influence" with the major companies to give them the recognition they have been fighting for. This would mean collective bargaining on employment conditions and salary terms for non-contract talent. Already the demand for a 40-hour week is being pushed by affiliates of the American Federation of Labor in the studios, and the basic agreement negotiations are expected to bring the matter to a head.

The IATSE, too, is seeking to extend its power and is embracing some of the other crafts chartered by the AFL. Theatre employees, from top to bottom, might be included, and the whole eventually would be the "one big union" that has been the dream of organized labor.

Talk of an industrial, or "vertical," union within IATSE is, however, discounted by men high in the councils of the AFL, and in IATSE circles there is flat denial that such a move is under way. Not only is there no need for such a union, it is declared, but it is not believed that George E. Browne, IATSE president, actually has such an idea in mind.

It is pointed out that with the entire industry unionized from the men who truck the supplies into the studio to the operators in the theatre booth, the unions have a strong hold. Working toward the complete closed shop, conferences have been held in Hollywood on the formation of a studio labor council, which would coordinate and direct union activity.

With a closed shop on the Coast, the IATSE now is seeking the same condition at eastern studios. Laboratory technicians, studio mechanics and cameramen in the east do not have complete closed shop working conditions, and the IATSE believes such disharmony between conditions on the two coasts should not prevail.

Mr. Browne's reelection as president of the international union at the annual convention in Kansas City in June is seen as practically certain, as a reward for his successful establishment of the union in charge of the west coast studios, which is described as the greatest single accomplishment in the union's history.

Mr. Browne is en route to New York from Hollywood to confer with Dan Tracy, head of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, on arbitration of the soundmen's status. This is the last of the problems to be ironed out in the jurisdictional fight, with the status of the cameramen having been adjudicated. Approximately 100 special effects cameramen joined the IATSE.

Hollywood reports that actors are joining forces with laborers, painters and scenic artists to fight for inclusion of a basic agreement for these crafts at the March meetings.

Technicians' Guild Considered

Following the footsteps of the directors, who recently organized the Screen Directors' Guild as a protective organization, there is a movement to organize a Technicians' Guild to include art and technical directors, set designers, fashion and costume directors, laboratory engineers and others who are not eligible for membership in other guilds or labor groups. Also, studio first aid attendants, numbering 100, have been chartered by the AFL.

The background of the current unionization moves in Hollywood reaches back a few years when a considerable number of the individual membership of important branches resigned from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, thus setting the stage for the situation now taxing the tact and diplomatic abilities of Hollywood's keenest minds.

Many reason were advanced for the defection, but generally the departing membership argued that the Academy was "producer controlled" and thus prejudicial to their rights and aspirations. At about the same time came a pay cut, which resulted in the sinking of IATSE affairs to a low estate and the elevation of IBEW to an important status in the scheme of things. Shortly followed the application of NRA code principles that left every craft and body in a bewildered daze.

The IATSE strike was so adjudicated that, as it applied to the diverse and ramified employment of electrical workers, it left open to dispute a question of jurisdictional control involving IATSE and IBEW. Meanwhile some of the benefits pertinent to the code being attained, various groups of workers, the creative personnel not associated with the fundamental organized labor groups, began to organize separately.

The avowed purpose of both Guilds was direct action. Disputes involving the membership of the separate guilds and producers were settled directly without recourse to the still extant machinery of the Academy's arbitration functions and, with only one or two unimportant exceptions, appeal to the courts. Both Guilds obtained better working conditions.

The only thing threatening to ruffle the succeeding calm was the dormant jurisdictional dispute between IATSE and IBEW.

Excitement broke out late in November, 1935, when Paramount in shipping a technical crew East to make shots for a forthcoming picture, precipitated a situation that caused a strike of operators in Chicago and other midwestern cities, and the conflagration threatened to spread to Hollywood. The eastern strike quickly settled, its menace faded in the production colony, but it did serve to settle one big question. IATSE was awarded control of the employees.

The Closed Shop

With the settlement came an epidemic of organization, and with jurisdiction of all but the sound men awarded to IATSE, thus in full control, Hollywood and Southern California, to which the term had been anathema, woke up to discover that the creed of "closed shop" in union labor was effective in the studios.

The Screen Writers' and Actors' Guilds welcomed IATSE as an ally in their further efforts to advance the welfare of their own membership. Then came announcement that the Directors' Guild had been formed and was ready to take its place with the Writers' Guild and the Actors' Guild, which in the meantime had worked out a new mutual cooperative arrangement with Actors' Equity.

During the formation of the various guilds and the ascendancy of IATSE, officials of the Academy have maintained that the institution still is as it was originally formed and that all the facilities which it ever afforded are still available. But members of the guilds are of the opinion that success of their corporate and individual destinies is more concretely assured under the guidance of men and women who, because of the nature of their calling, are more familiar with individual aspirations.

"JAZZ SINGER" RETURNS FOR 10th ANNIVERSARY

Next year will mark the tenth anniversary of the inception of sound into modern pictures, and Warner, which produced "The Jazz Singer" as the first feature with sound, will celebrate the occasion by making a modern version of the same picture.

Al Jolson, who was starred in the the original version, again will have the lead, supported by an all-star cast.

QUIGLEY TELLS CAROLINA EXHIBITORS RADICALS SEEK TO CAPTURE SCREEN

Insidious Campaign Underway, Publisher Warns Convention; Picquet Elected President for 13th Consecutive Term

There is need of constant vigilance against attempts to introduce revolutionary propaganda into motion pictures, Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of Quigley Publications, said in an address Monday which concluded the annual two-day convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, at the Carolina hotel, Pinehurst, N. C.

Charles Picquet, who was reelected president for the thirteenth consecutive term, presided at a series of meetings ending in a banquet Monday night at the Carolina hotel.

Ed. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, discussed several legislative problems. Among other speakers were Carl E. Milliken, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Walter Vincent of the Wilmer and Vincent circuit and chairman of the board of Republic Pictures; Ed Levy, counsel for the MPTOA; David Palfreyman of the MPTOA, Robert Dewey of the Theatre Underwriters, and Clarence Kuester of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce, who invited the association to hold its next convention in Charlotte.

Warns of Radicals

The title assigned for Mr. Quigley's talk was, "Let Me Write The Nation's Songs And I Care Not Who Makes Its Laws." This quotation was applied by Mr. Quigley to the problem presented in efforts to introduce radical and revolutionary propaganda into films. The speaker said that films present the principal objective of propagandists to disseminate political and social ideas destructive to American ideals and system of Government and he warned that "an insidious and potentially effective campaign is now under way to color entertainment films with radical and destructive propaganda." Mr. Quigley said that "the screen is looked upon by propagandists as the preeminent medium of the modern world, supplanting press and platform, as the means of disseminating ideas hostile to American institutions and traditions."

The speaker referred to a recent incident in which a small dominant minority in the Authors' League of America sought to color the effort to appropriate the screen for radical and destructive political and social ideas as a mere argument against censorship. He referred to a phrase in the Authors' League statement which struck at "organized alarmists."

Continuing, Mr. Quigley said, "There have been many times in American history when the role of alarmist was called for, from the time of Paul Revere. There is now need for an alarmist, although those who wish to use the screen as an aid to destruction of existing civilization would like to trick responsible leaders into silence, to avoid protests until, under the inspiration of alien influences and precedents, these protests could be answered with confiscation of property and the neat business of the firing squad. Let these destructionists, on their plea of freedom of expression and their right to attack our institutions and heritages, inject into pictures their ideas of common property, atheism, free love, slavish devotion to materials and machines; let them attack on the screen respect for the finer spiritual things of our civilization, then they will not care who makes the laws, because they will have triumphed over the law through spreading like a pestilence their destructive ideas, until eventually they engulf church, home and state."

Association's Officers

Officers and directors of the Carolinas' MPTO, besides Mr. Picquet, are Albert Sottile of Charleston, first vice-president; Harry Buchanan of Hendersonville, second vice-president; directors H. R. Berry of Hartsville, S. C.; J. M. Gregg of Charlotte, H. F. Kincey of Charlotte, J. F. Miller of Hickory, N. C.; S. S. Stevenson of Henderson, Robert Bryant of Rockhill, S. C.; Lyle Wilson of Roanoke Rapids, N. C.; E. L. Hearne of Albemarle, N. C.; and George Bailey of Wilmington.

A service committee was appointed to consider grievances, this consisting of H. R. Berry, J. M. Gregg and H. F. Kincey.

Ed Kuykendall criticized leaders of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors for what he said was a lack of sincerity, quoting freely from testimony in the hearing last weekend on the Neely anti block-booking bills. The national chieftain said he was not opposed to the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers but asked for legal assurance that its rates would not be raised to unconscionable figures.

Resolutions were passed endorsing the Duffy copyright bill and opposing the Neely Bill and the Pettengill Bill, companion House measure.

Convention Thanks Martin Quigley For Warning on Film Propaganda

Following Martin Quigley's address Monday at the concluding session of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Inc., in annual convention at Pinehurst, N. C., March 1 and 2, 1936, are grateful to those leaders who, by their presence, enthusiasm and ability, have added greatly to the value of this convention, and

"Whereas, the Convention wishes to express its sincere appreciation of the time and effort expended by these guests who have so honored us,

"Be it resolved, that the Convention gives its enthusiastic thanks to Mr. Martin Quigley for so forcefully bringing to our attention the problem of un-American propaganda, emphasizing our sacred responsibility to ourselves, this industry and our country, and picturing to us through example and alarm the grief that will be ours if we are parties to the dissemination of information and practice of those ideas which emphasize and glorify atheism, love for and the worship of material things, and which aim to cause disrespect for and lack of appreciation of the finer spiritual values of life, and

"Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this Convention and a copy be given to Mr. Quigley as an assurance of this Convention's genuine approval of his viewpoint."

Exhibitors Launch Connecticut Unit

Theatre organizations made progress this week, starting with the formation of a new Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, to construct the personnel structures which will govern for the new year, and in Maryland plans were also made for taking action in this connection by the MPTO of that state.

New Haven was the seat of the meeting of exhibitors seceding from the Connecticut MPTO, with Joseph A. Davis, acting chairman, appointing committees on by-laws, nominations and membership. The committees will report at the first regular meeting of the organization March 10th. It is expected that by that time about 50 exhibitors, or 75 per cent of the total number of independent exhibitors in the state, will have joined. The meeting will elect officers and draft by-laws for operation of the new organization.

In Baltimore, the following have been selected by the nominating committee to run for offices of the MPTO of Maryland, Inc: Frank A. Hornig, president; Arthur B. Price, vice-president; Herman A. Blum, secretary; Miss Helen Donnelley, secretary. Nominees for the board directors, selected by the same committee and including the foregoing nominations with the exception of Miss Donnelley, are Walter Pacy, J. Louis Rome, Elmer Nolte, Jack Levine, Sam Soltz, William Hicks, Lauritz Garman and Louis Schneider. The elections will be held this month.

PICTURE OF THE FUTURE

NEW in technique and theme, combining the sociological inventiveness of H. G. Wells with the production vision of Alexander Korda of London Films, "Things to Come" is a last-word imagining of the world of the future.

Great buildings make Lilliputian the skyscrapers of today, helicopters land and take off in the streets, television permits leaders to address the world on screens thousands of feet above the public square.

It is a story of the world's collapse into barbarism because of war, and its regeneration by the work of a group of scientists. The high point in the spectacular aspects of the production comes near the end of the picture, when two young pioneers in interplanetary flight are hurled to the moon in a rocket ship. The model settings, the war scenes, called upon the utmost of Mr. Korda's productive alertness and experience.

William Cameron Menzies, director of the picture, made from Mr. Wells' script from his own book, "The Shape of Things to Come," returned to New York this week on the Berengaria with a complete print. United Artists, the American distributor, has yet to set release, and the premiere theatre is still to be chosen as this is written. The production opened at the Leicester Square in London February 21, after a press and trade showing.

"Things to Come," which the London Daily Telegraph called England's first million dollar picture ("Its cost is to be a precise £260,000 ($1,300,000)"), ran two hours and 10 minutes at its premiere—after which Mr. Wells and Mr. Korda went into a protracted huddle deciding upon cuts and revisions.

There are three major episodes. There is first of all the Greatest War (Mr. Wells places it at about 1940), with a sky-filling air fleet obliterating Every-town (London). A period of barbarism follows, with a reversion to medieval warring by feudal barons of the caveman survivors. Last is a scientific rebirth of the world, with a group of young technicians controlling the airways. Into this life of the year 2035 are built eye-filling sets, weird white buildings shining in artificial sunlight, planes operated as deftly as elevators, new communications systems, ballet-skirted humans —and Mr. Wells himself gave the instructions for the costumes.

Raymond Massey, now appearing in "Ethan Frome" in the National theatre off Broadway, has the leading double role as the wartime aviator and as his descendant who rebuilds the world. Ralph Richardson is the war lord dictator, with Margaretta Scott as his mistress.

In his Showman's Review of the production (page 46) Bruce Allan of the Herald's London office reports that "Things to Come" sets new technical standards for the British studios, with striking originality and impressive spectacle secondary only to the effects and settings in the picture.

NOW COMES ONCE BARRED 'ECSTASY,' INTO COURTS TO FIGHT FOR TITLE

Distributors of Czech Film, Admitted After Revision, Sues to Keep Word From the Release Title of "Young Love"

"Ecstasy—the "Extase" of Czechoslovakia which nearly every country in the world has suppressed—is in the courts again, this time as plaintiff.

Its American distributor, Eureka Productions, Inc., is seeking justice from Metropolis Pictures, Inc., which has a feature picture known as "Young Love" but prefers to release it as "Ecstasy of Young Love" following the vast newspaper space the other picture drew.

Eureka, through Jacques A. Koerpel, president, charged in New York supreme court that Metropolis has appropriated the title of the film which was banned as obscene by the United States customs and provoked strong displeasure throughout the Catholic world, and applied it to an idyll of young love which the New York state censors approved as entirely innocuous.

The action, which seeks to enjoin Metropolis from using "Ecstasy," the title, involves that picture still deeper in the confusion which has marked its troublesome history since its importation a year ago. The claims and counter claims in the case call for the wisdom of a Solomon.

Eureka declared the combination of the titles constituted a "fraud" on the public, and charged Metropolis seeks thereby to "palm off" its picture, originally "Young Love," as the one about which all the controversy had arisen, with the intention of "cashing in" on the wide publicity given to "Ecstasy." It also claimed unfair competition.

Just a Dictionary Word

Martin J. Lewis, president of Metropolis, answered that Eureka held no proprietary right in the title "Ecstasy," that it is only a word in the dictionary, anyway, and may be used by anyone for any purpose.

"The courts have held," he countered, "that the word 'happiness' cannot be copyrighted or appropriated for private use. 'Happiness' is so close in meaning to 'ecstasy,' which means joy, that the two cases are analogous."

The court's decision, according to Henry J. Pearlman, Eureka's attorney, will be of major importance to motion picture companies and will add a new chapter to the law relating to the use of titles.

Scheduled Showing Canceled

The action followed the newspaper advertising of "Ecstasy of Young Love" for showing at the 55th Street Playhouse, New York, operated by Intimate Theatres, Inc. Upon Eureka's protest, the scheduled run was canceled. Suit subsequently was withdrawn as regards the theatre company and its officials, Max A. and William Goldberg, upon their written representation never to show the Metropolis picture under the advertised title or by any other name, said an affidavit filed by Eureka.

Meanwhile, there was a hearing before Judge William T. Collins on an order of Judge Louis A. Valente directing the defendants to show cause why they should not be enjoined from using the title "Ecstasy." Incidental to the claim, Eureka asked that $250,000 damages be assessed against the defendants, who also filed a damage claim.

Prize-winning claims made for the two films involved and the distribution rights in the United States to "Young Love" also are in dispute.

Samuel Cummins, Eureka's general manager, told the court he purchased the rights to "Young Love" at the time he obtained the American release rights to "Ecstasy" from Elekta Film in Prague about a year and a half ago.

Mr. Lewis, however, insisted that he purchased the exclusive rights from Reunion Films, Ltd., of London, which, he said, had the sole rights for foreign distribution.

This, however, is a side issue, Mr. Cummins explained, and he is willing to concede the film to Metropolis provided "Young Love" remains undefiled, without "Ecstasy."

Which Won the Award?

Metropolis insists that "'Ecstasy of Young Love' was awarded the state gold medal and the Congress Gold Cup at the International Venice Congress and tied for first place with 'Man of Aran' (Gaumont British production) at the same exposition."

Mr. Cummins is emphatic that he was in Venice at the time and that "Ecstasy," not "Young Love," won those awards, and contends that other honors claimed for "Young Love" actually belong to "Ecstasy." Sticking by his guns, Mr. Lewis declares that "Ecstasy" never won a prize anywhere.

What really happened, according to Time, reporting the Cinema Congress of Venice in the summer of 1934, was that Czechoslovakia was honored with the cup of the city of Venice for the best direction. That country's entry was a group of four pictures sent by Elekta Film, and each was adjudged to show fine directorial qualities. The films were listed as "Ecstasy," "Young Love," "The Earth" and "The Storm." The Mussolini Cup for the best picture from outside Italy went to "Man of Aran."

The issue, the parties in controversy now agree, resolves itself to whether Metropolis has the right to use the title "Ecstasy." Mr. Lewis said that the picture he is releasing originally was titled "Reka," which is Czech for "The Stream." In Germany it had been released as "Der Strom" (The Stream) with "Junge Liebe" (Young Love) as a subtitle and also as "Symphony of Love." In England it is "Young Love." Mr. Lewis explained he adopted "Ecstasy of Young Love" because it was "more appropriate" to the theme and because he felt "The Stream" would not be adequate box-office in this country.

The censorship department of the New York Times, which became active in the matter upon receiving a complaint from Mr. Cummins on the advertising of "Ecstasy of Young Love," said its investigation determined that the titles were combined "to capitalize on the publicity given to 'Ecstasy.'" Produced four years ago, "Ecstasy," because of its subject matter and circumstances surrounding it, has been the subject of considerable international comment. The New York newspapers have been lavish with space.

The heroine of "Ecstasy," Heda Kiesler, so appealed to Fritz Mandel, president of Austria's famed Hirtenberg Ammunition Works, that he made her his wife. Herr Mandel has not only done everything he can to have the film suppressed in as many countries as possible—by report working through the embassies—but also maintains an offer to buy all outstanding posters and photos of his wife in "Ecstasy."

Original Print Burned

"Ecstasy" subsequently was banned by the Commissioner of Customs with the approval of Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, and a federal jury in New York brought in a verdict branding it immoral and obscene. The original print was burned through error by the United States marshal. On appeal, substitute copy, apparently a revised version, obtained meanwhile from Prague, was shown to the United States appellate court and Judge Learned Hand found nothing wrong or immoral, according to Eureka's affidavit, and said that since the action was against the film and not a person, the destruction of the first print terminated the action. The case was dismissed on technical grounds, with the suggestion that the United States would have to bring action against the second print if it claimed it was indecent.

The picture then was permitted entry without deletion, the affidavit said, and in December, 1935, a revised version of "Ecstasy" was passed by the law division of the Customs Department as "not objectionable." Then an action was begun against the marshal for destruction of the original print, valued at $5,300.

Calls Suit "Harassing"

Speaking for Metropolis, Mr. Lewis said this week: "Eureka and Mr. Cummins have no right to interfere with our picture. Their suit is an obvious attempt to harass a prize-winning film. Our picture is a story of youth and simple peasant life, in direct contrast to 'Ecstasy.'"

Eureka's charge of false advertising was declared intended to "create a prejudicial atmosphere against the defendants." Because the suit has destroyed the value of the exploitation given the Metropolis picture at an expense to the company, it claimed damages, and pleaded that it would be "irreparably and unjustly damaged if the injunction were granted."

WHEN ECSTASY RUNS THICKER THAN WATER

In its stormy career, "Ecstasy" in its original form has been condemned by the Pope, civil and religious authorities of Europe, the Nazis in Germany, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., United States customs officials, the federal courts and the Legion of Decency.

Alfred E. Smith asked President Roosevelt a year ago to bar the film from this country, explaining that he acted as chairman of the Advisory Council of the Legion of Decency in New York.

Distributor of "Young Love," Also Demanding Damages, Says Suit Has Destroyed Exploitation Value of the Film

"KLONDIKE ANNIE" BRINGS TROUBLE, AND EMANUEL COHEN GETS MAE WEST

Picture Grossing $2,500 to $8,500 Over Average Per Box Office in Face of Hearst Editorials Against Film

The illuminated marquee of San Francisco's Warfield theatre the other day advertised the following double bill:

HERE COMES TROUBLE

KLONDIKE ANNIE
Mae West

The trouble is here.

William Randolph Hearst brought it, in the role of public champion of motion picture morals, to Miss West, to her producers, the Paramount Pictures Corporation; to Will H. Hays and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; to Joseph Ignatius Breen, Production Code Administrator in Hollywood; to some of the exhibitors playing "Klondike Annie"; and, to the motion picture industry institutionally.

"Ceiling Zero" and Campbell Soups

Mr. Hearst's method was an attack on the aforementioned, specifically or otherwise, for the "immorality" and "indecency" of "Annie." His medium was the editorial pages of the 28 newspapers that he controls. His motive: The grapevine from Hollywood reports that the production community, looking about for the provocation for Mr. Hearst's swift outburst, saw as a possibility Production Code Administration attention to "Ceiling Zero," produced by Mr. Hearst's Cosmopolitan Pictures.

Along Hollywood boulevard there was comment that a story was about that Miss West had not so long before rather firmly declined an invitation to appear as a guest star on a "Hollywood Hotel" program, the radio hour sponsored by Campbell Soups and conducted by the influential Miss Louella Parsons, motion picture editor of Mr. Hearst's Universal News Service.

It was not, to be sure, contended that this had any direct relevancy to the intrinsic qualities of the motion picture to which Mr. Hearst takes exception.

It is also to be remembered that there have been other prior and emphatic discussions of the social aspects of the motion picture by Mr. Hearst and in the columns of his papers. In issues of July 8, 1934, there appeared in his papers a discussion of picture morality in the guise of a letter and signed "An American Husband." Elements of the style, and the manner of the presentation, suggested that Mr. Hearst wrote the letter.

In the face of Mr. Hearst's newest editorial vitriol, and the refusal of his newspapers to accept advertisements on "Klondike Annie" from theatres, the picture is grossing from $2,500 to as much as $8,500 over average, per box-office.

In Boston, where Mr. Hearst's American and Sunday Advertiser shot both barrels at Mae West and the production, the Metropolitan theatre grossed $20,000 last Saturday and Sunday, starting off to a house record, established last week by "Louis Pasteur," grossing $44,385 for the whole week.

Elsewhere, "Klondike Annie" has been performing at the box office similarly, as follows:

City	Theatre	Theatre's Average Gross	"Klondike Annie's" Gross	Incr. Over Avge.
Boston,	Metropolitan	$22,000 (7 days)	$20,000 (2 days)	$2,000
Buffalo,	Great Lakes.....	7,300	12,760	5,460
Denver,	Denham	4,500	13,000	8,500
Kansas City,	Newman	9,000 (10 days)	15,000 (10 days)	6,000
Louisville,	Rialto	4,500	6,000	2,500
New Haven,	Paramount..	4,800	7,800	3,000
Portland (Ore.),	Paramount	5,000	8,000	3,000
San Francisco,	Warfield..	15,000	18,000	3,000

Mr. Hearst's editorial opinion has brought repercussions in other directions: County Attorney Towle, at Lincoln, Neb., declared the picture unfit for showing young children and warned the Stuart theatre the county government would get an injunction if necessary.

The national Legion of Decency list, representing "a moral estimate of current motion pictures," under date of March 5th, placed "Klondike Annie" in its "B" classification, as being "objectionable in part."

Typical of the doubt placed in the minds of reviewing groups by the Hearst editorials over the proper moral nature of the production was that of the Chicago censors, where mixed opinions of the board were so varied that a "general permit" for showing was not given until after unusually lengthy discussion.

Mae West was the real issue last week in the arguments at Washington before a subcommittee hearing of United States Senators on the Neely-Pettengill bill to abolish block booking. Minority exhibitor interests and club women and other "outside" supporters contended that compulsory block booking forces exhibitors to play "Mae West pictures"—symbolizing a type—or else, pay and not play, which, they added, they could not afford to do. The distributors submitted evidence that there has not been a single cancellation by an exhibitor on a Mae West picture, even during the height of the Legion of Decency boycott movement in 1934, whereas "high standard" pictures—"Alice in Wonderland," "Peter Ibbetson," "Abraham Lincoln" and the like—were canceled by theatres by the hundreds.

Whether the timeliness of the Hearst attack was responsible for the wide mention of her name and pictures by the witnesses, is a matter for speculation, but, regardless, Senator Davis, of the sub-committee was prompted to observe that the mention was unusually frequent.

Sought by Emanuel Cohen

Paramount, producers of Mae West's pictures, is understood to have finally decided to discontinue its relation with the star, who has been contributing considerably to the corporation's income since her motion picture debut, in 1932, appearing since then in "Night After Night" (1932); "She Done Him Wrong" and "I'm No Angel" (1933); "Belle of the Nineties" (1934); "Goin' to Town" (1935), and, finally, "Klondike Annie," released on Washington's Birthday.

It was established a fortnight ago that Emanuel Cohen, a former Paramount studio executive and now an independent producer, was attempting to win the buxom star over to his new Major Pictures. This was admitted in New York on Monday by Ben Piazza, executive assistant to Mr. Cohen, on his arrival from Hollywood, for the purchase of plays and talent. Mr. Piazza declared that "Mae West has been signed," but at Paramount's home office it was explained that Miss West is not yet contractually free. Paramount in January had exercised an option for another production, with the understanding that the studio provide her with an acceptable script on or before April 1st. It appears then that a script will not be provided, freeing Miss West for Emanuel Cohen, who has not as yet set distribution for his product.

Both Will Hays and Joseph Breen were singled out for attack, the Hearst editorials asking, "What were Will Hays and his censorship organization doing when this deliberate catering to a lewd element came forth?"

That exhibitors playing "Klondike Annie" are taking Mr. Hearst's attacks with more than ordinary interest is evidenced by the action of J. Lawrence Schanberger, of Keith's theatre, at Baltimore, who, in a paid advertisement inserted in the Sunday Sun, March 1st, undertook defense of the motion picture against the Writ Threatened at Lincoln, Neb., "Objectionable in Part" to Legion, Debated in Chicago; Issue at Senate Hearing

THE array of consequences and developments relating to Klondike Annie as portrayed by Miss Mae West and the impact of that picture upon the American public were adequately forecast, well in advance, in the regular order of treatment of coming product by Motion Picture Herald in its issue of February 15, in the department of Showmen Reviews.

That week Mr. Gus McCarthy, head of the Herald's Hollywood staff, examined the production on preview at the Alexander Theatre in Glendale, California, and in concluding his review wrote:

Audience reaction vividly denoted thrill and surprise that might be interpreted as shock.

For any kind of preview the lack of applause upon conclusion could not help but be noted.

If creating controversy based upon objections to the moral and ethical character of the picture can be construed at this time as being desirable exploitation or interest-creating asset, audience reaction gives every indication that this should appease the most rabid.

EXHIBITOR ANSWERS HEARST ATTACK

broadside fired on three occasions against "Annie" by Hearst in his Baltimore News-Post. Mr. Schanberger's advertisement read as follows:

AN ANSWER!

I wish briefly to state that with all the criticism by certain Baltimore papers, which is being aimed at the morals of the picture "KLONDIKE ANNIE," that the National Legion of Decency has classified "KLONDIKE ANNIE" in "B Class" which IS NOT in the condemned class.

In reply to the remarks of many of our patrons as they leave the theatre that the reports of filth published in local papers are just a publicity stunt on the part of the theatre, I wish to say that we had nothing to do with these articles and we do not welcome them.

The remarks of hundreds of right-thinking Baltimoreans as they leave the theatre that there is nothing wrong with the picture is absolute proof of our sincerity.

Respectfully,
J. L. SCHANBERGER, Manager,
KEITH'S THEATRE.

There is no record of any of the state or local censorship boards ordering deletions in "Klondike Annie" or refusing it an exhibition permit. State boards are in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, Florida, Maryland, Massachusetts and Virginia. The picture already has played in every one of those states.

Key spots where the picture already has played are:

Indiana theatre, Indianapolis; Rialto, Louisville; Newman, Kansas City; Rialto, St. Louis; Denham, Denver; Capitol, Salt Lake; Warfield, San Francisco; Paramount, Oakland, Cal.; Paramount, Los Angeles; Paramount, Portland, Ore.; Metropolitan, Boston; Paramount, Springfield, Mass.; Capitol, Worcester, Mass.; Strand, Providence; Paramount, New Haven; Allyn, Hartford; Fox, Atlanta; Birmingham theatre, Birmingham, Ala.; Tivoli, Chattanooga; Tennessee theatre, Knoxville; Paramount, Nashville; Malco, Memphis; Pulaski, Little Rock; Colony, Miami Beach; Saenger, New Orleans; Saenger, Mobile, Ala.; Midwest theatre, Oklahoma City; Orpheum, Tulsa, Okla.; Great Lakes, Buffalo; Keith's, Baltimore; Pennsylvania theatre, Pittsburgh; Palace, Washington; State, Cleveland.

No opposition was heard from any of the foregoing towns until Mr. Hearst undertook his attack. His newspapers include:

TIMES-UNION, Albany.
GEORGIAN and SUNDAY AMERICAN, Atlanta.
NEWS and POST and SUNDAY AMERICAN, Baltimore.
AMERICAN and SUNDAY ADVERTISER, Boston.
AMERICAN and HERALD and EXAMINER, Chicago.

Because the Hearst newspapers in Los Angeles refused to accept advertisements of "Klondike Annie," the Paramount theatre in Hollywood is reported to have advertised as follows: "Important Feature—For Information Call Vandike 2041."

Attacks have been launched as the picture receives its first-run release, Hearst papers having scored the film in San Francisco, Baltimore, Chicago and Los Angeles, extending its campaign to New York last weekend, both in the New York American (morning) and the Evening Journal. The film's opening is scheduled shortly for Broadway.

Typical of the editorial expressions was that published in the New York Journal Monday evening, headed "Filth in Films: Are We to Have That Again?"

"Motion pictures have an incalculable influence for good or evil on the young, and it may be said, on adults also.

"It is a distinct blow to the industry as a whole—as well as an offense against public morals—when such disgraceful and disreputable offerings are made.

"For these reasons, the Hearst newspapers have refused to accept advertising for the film 'Klondike Annie' featuring Miss Mae West.

"This film, in their judgment, should never have been released by the Will Hays organization, and should be condemned by the churches of the United States and the decent and clean-minded people of the United States as unfit for exhibition. . . ."

Another Editorial Blast

A second editorial was captioned: "The Screen Must Not Relapse to Lewdness," setting forth the career of Mae West before entering pictures, and reading as follows:

"In 1927, Mae West wrote and produced a play called "Sex" in New York City.

"In February, 1927, the play was raided as obscene by the New York police.

"Mae West was indicted, with her producer and members of the cast.

"She was convicted and sentenced to ten days in the workhouse on Welfare Island, and fined five hundred dollars.

"She served the ten days and paid the fine.

"In 1928, Mae West wrote and acted in a play called "The Drag," which opened in suburban cities.

"It was branded as sheer filth and scourged from the stage.

"Rewritten by Mae West, it was produced on Broadway as "The Pleasure Man."

"The play was raided on the opening night, and Mae West, the cast and the producer were arrested.

"The trial, which took place in April, 1930, resulted in a hung jury.

"With this record of police raids, of indictment, conviction, a fine and term in the workhouse on Welfare Island for a criminal offense, Mae West was approached by the moving picture business as a fit subject to introduce into the wholesome homes of the country and present to the young people of clean moral families.

"Her screen plays were considered proper by the moving picture fraternity to be shown even on Sunday, as a proof of the special advantage of Sunday moving pictures.

"It was Miss Mae West's screen plays which were largely responsible for the uprising of the churches and the moral elements of the community against filth in moving pictures, and which resulted in a temporary improvement in moving picture morals.

"The attention of the churches, the women's clubs, the various state censors, the state legislatures, and the Congress of the United States is called to the fact that Mae West has produced another screen play, which she wrote herself, as she wrote the play called "Sex," which was raided as obscene in New York City, and for which she was indicted, convicted and served her sentence. . . .

"The play was produced by Paramount.

"The Hearst papers have refused its advertising."

And Still Another

Still another Hearst editorial, captioned: "Stop Lewd Films," read as follows:

"Are we again to have placed before us, in the guise of entertainment, motion pictures that exalt disreputable living and glorify vice?

"The question naturally arises after viewing the Mae West picture 'Klondike Annie.'

"It is an IMMORAL and INDECENT film.

"What were Will Hays and his censorship organization doing when this deliberate catering to a lewd element came forth?

"Were they too busy stopping such pictures as "It Can't Happen Here," based on the Sinclair Lewis story, and other films—FOR FEAR OF POLITICAL REACTIONS AND COMPLICATIONS—to notice 'Klondike Annie'?

"Or were they asleep?

"Yet it is their specific duty—their job—TO MAKE SURE that only motion pictures of a WHOLESOME, HEALTHY character are produced.

"Most film producers have been sincerely trying to IMPROVE the quality and moral fiber of their offerings.

"For the most part, CLEANER and BETTER pictures have been brought forth by the producers in the past year than ever before.

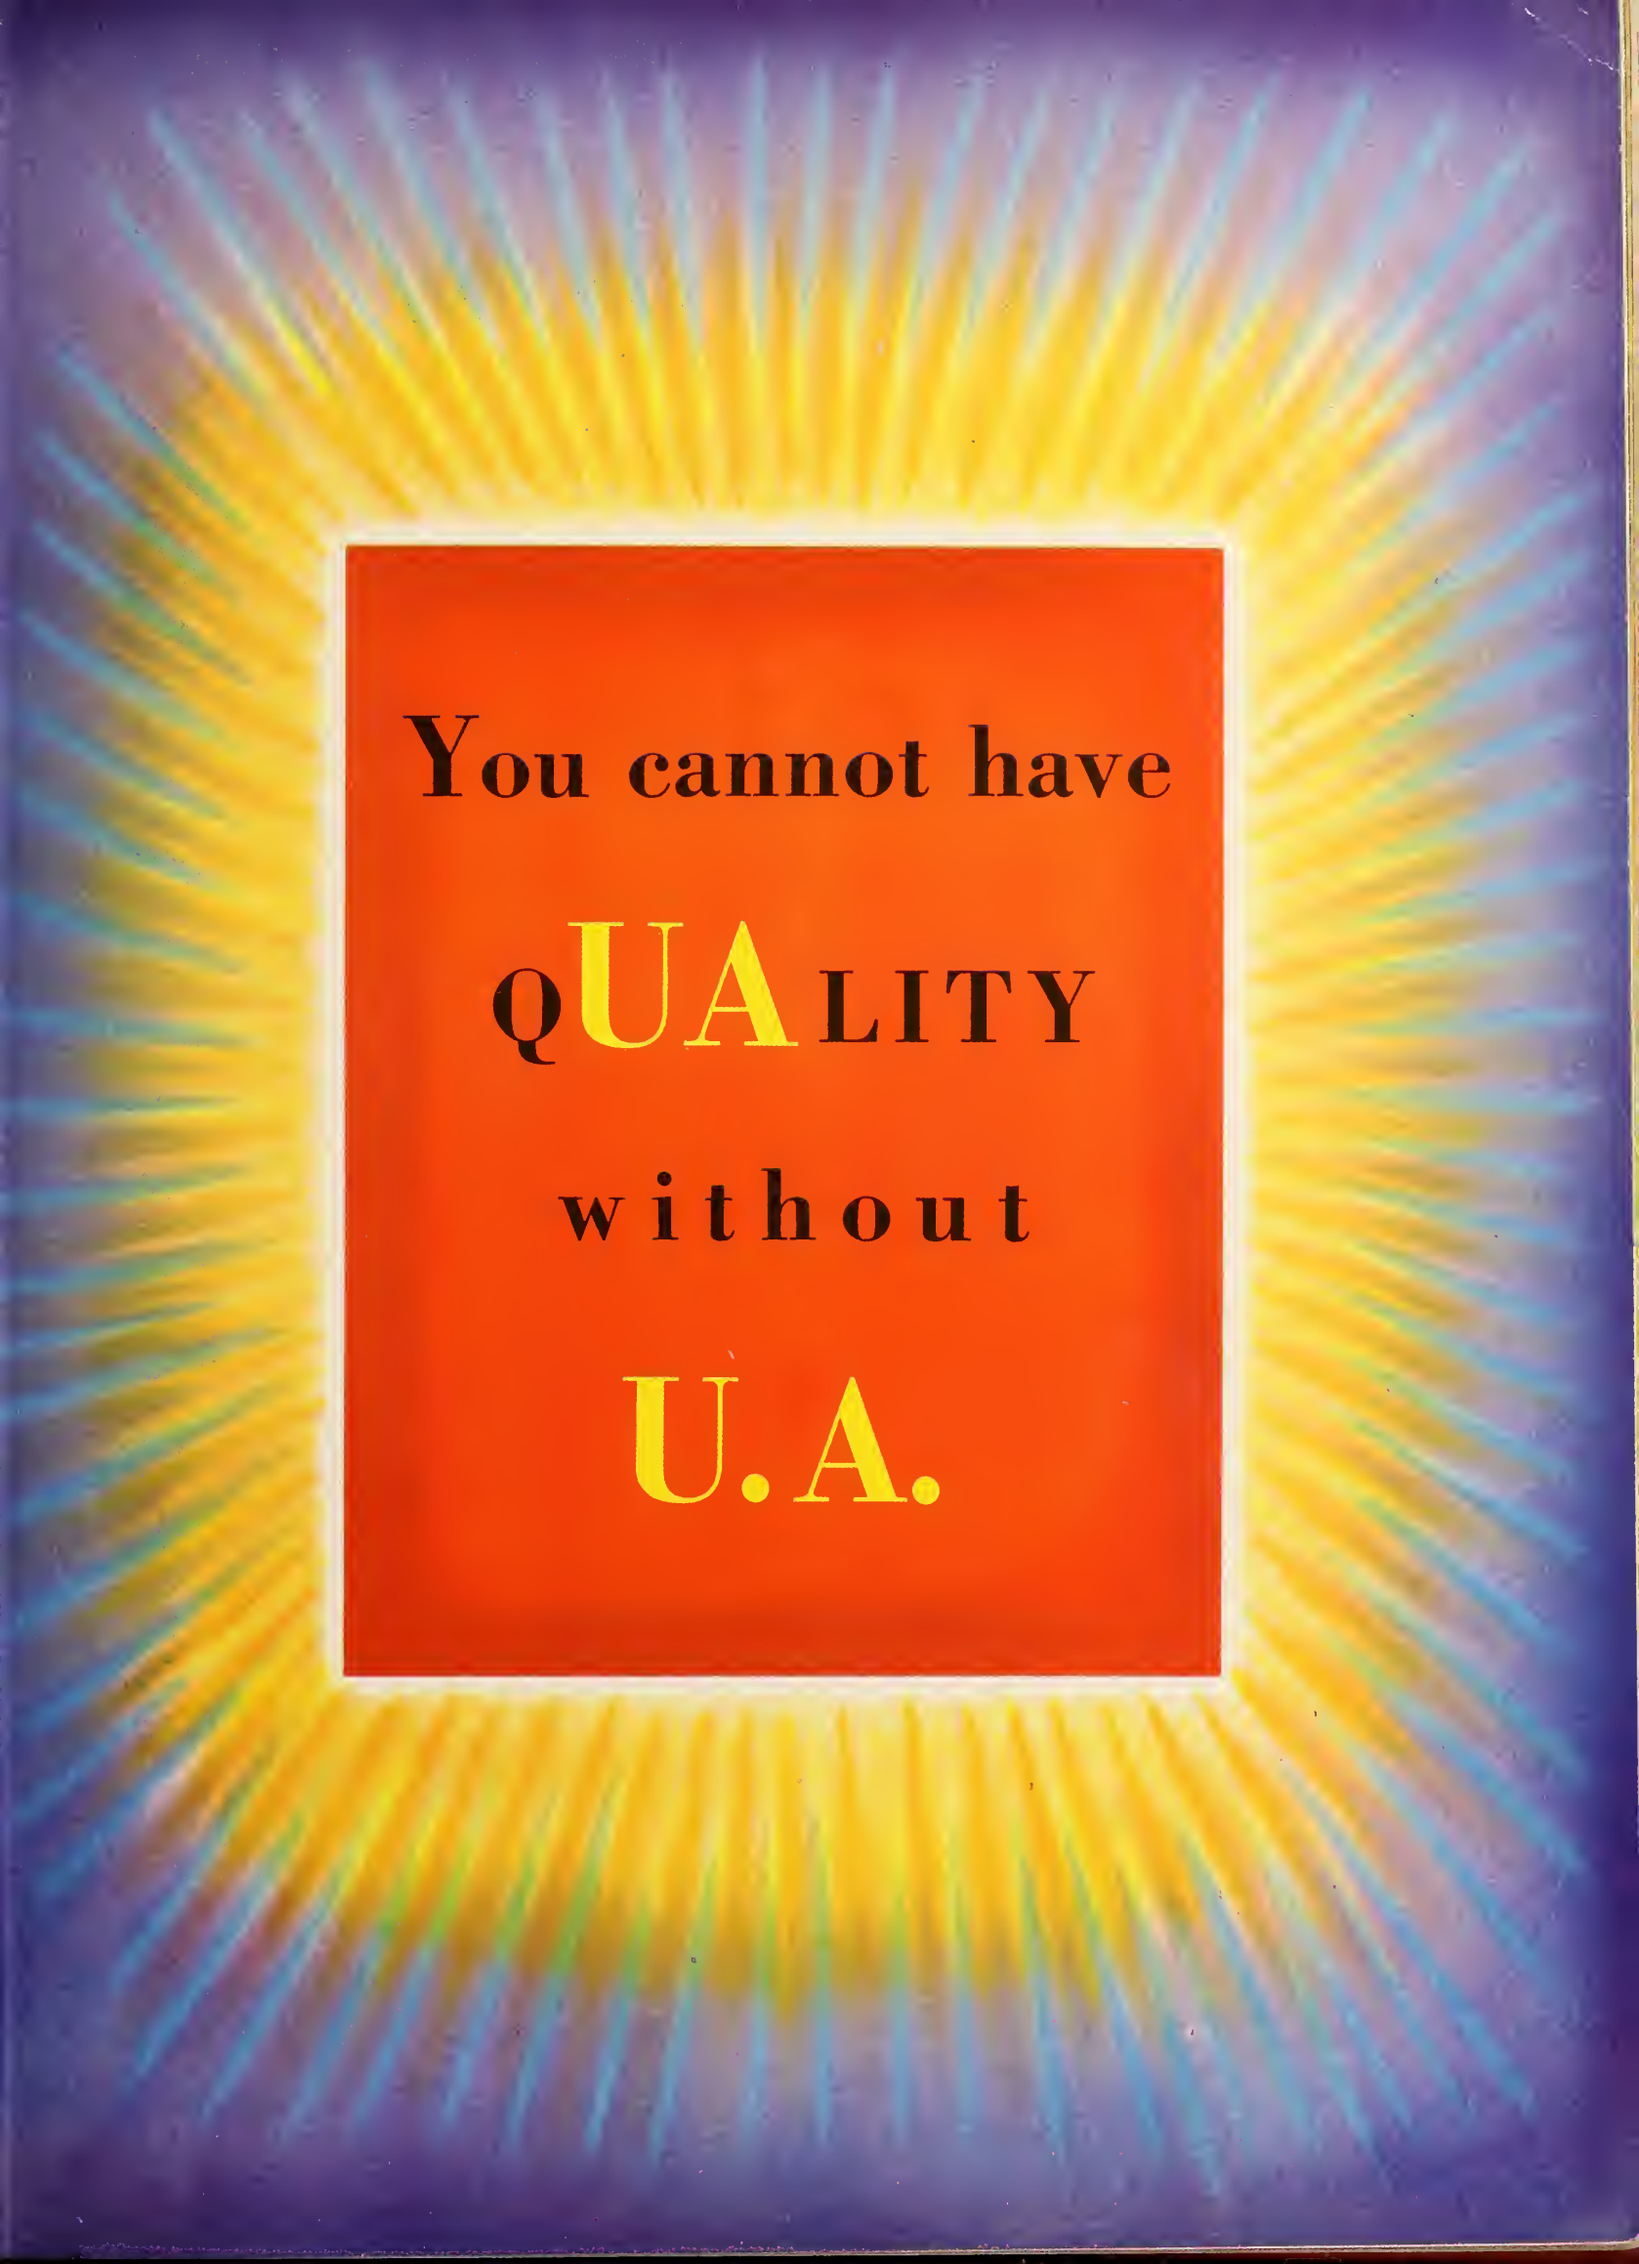
"The public's response has evidenced beyond doubt its appreciation and support of that trend.

"BUT ONE INDECENT FILM MAY TEAR DOWN MUCH OF THE GOOD WILL THAT HAS BEEN BUILT.

"Therefore, it is astounding that Paramount should have had the stupidity to produce and distribute such a picture, when it has been demonstrated to what a degree the screen has benefited by the clean pictures produced since the public uprising against screen filth.

"The film industry itself should be the FIRST to combat and stop any return to the salacious productions that brought upon it just rebuke and attack. . . .

"It is to be hoped that the churches of the country are awake to the necessity of BOYCOTTING such a picture as 'Klondike Annie' and denouncing its producers.



"This offering would apparently indicate that some screen producers are not influenced by any MORAL considerations, but only by fear of public indignation.

"Therefore the public should bring such influence to bear—by showing, through non-patronage of such productions—that PANDERING TO THE LEWD ELEMENTS OF THE COMMUNITY IS NOT PROFITABLE."

DRAB TURN TO STAGE AIDED FILMS: POLLOCK

The greatest factor in the success of motion pictures was the decline of the glamour which once was possessed by the stage, according to Channing Pollock, the veteran playwright.

Plays which are clean and moral are the most enduring as well as the most effective type of "good theatre," Mr. Pollock believed. The great majority of productions that had runs of 500 performances on Broadway would fall into the classification of clean and cheerful plays, "Equity" quotes him as saying.

U.S. PRODUCTION OVERSEAS URGED TO TIGHTEN GRIP ON WORLD MARKET

Gregor Rabinovitsch, UFA Producer Signed by Universal, Calls Double Versions with Own Casts the Solution

The American motion picture industry now has an unparalleled opportunity further to extend its hold on the international market, provided it establishes production in Europe on a scale comparable to the needs of such a program, in the opinion of Gregor Rabinovitsch, for six years major producer for UFA in Berlin, who arrived in Hollywood this week to head his own unit at Universal City.

Producer of such films as "Be Mine Tonight" and "Unfinished Symphony" and for two decades active in production in Germany, France and Austria, Mr. Rabinovitsch based his assertion on his estimate that 45 per cent of the films made by Continental producers are unsatisfactory product and that America has the resources to create a commanding production establishment abroad. Double versions are the key, Mr. Rabinovitsch said.

With the exception of product for English quota requirements, American production abroad is at a low ebb. Questionings at the home offices in New York revealed that, with the exception of Universal and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, none of the companies has such activity in mind, and the consensus was that large-scale production on the Continent would be impracticable.

Says Films Would Be Better

Mr. Rabinovitsch nevertheless insisted that it can be done, to the glory and profit of America, "if the companies go about it properly." He added that "pictures intended for the international field, including the American, are much better when made in Europe than in Hollywood. It has been proved at the box-office."

Mr. Rabinovitsch recalled that some years ago a large American company, which he preferred not to name, "threw millions away trying to establish production at Paris."

"They invested a fortune in building studios and, with a large overhead, were obliged to maintain a fast pace in production in order to justify the expense," he said. "The result was that they started out to make 30 films a year, one after another, without adequate preparation and with no regard for quality, losing sight of the fact that four or five good productions for the international market would be a more fruitful plan. But, of course, they had a large studio, and mass production kept their people busy."

"A good production is always cheap, regardless of cost, and a poor one is always expensive," he added.

Sees Lower Production Costs

Double versions, he believed, can cut production costs of international product by as much as 35 per cent, by employing largely the same casts, and where possible the same principals, the same sets. American producers have experimented with double versions in Hollywood, but they have not proved as successful as those made on the Continent, because pictures requiring a foreign locale or flavor are better made abroad, he said.

Mr. Rabinovitsch said he would be willing to make a picture for some large American company without compensation except that he share in the profits, and if the picture failed he "would pay the company $10,000 out of his own pocket."

With American films the acknowledged leaders, American production facilities the best in the world, and America's economic situation advantageous, the opportunity is waiting, he declared.

Mr. Rabinovitsch said the making of poor pictures to meet English quota requirements was not justified, when greater returns would follow larger expenditures for good product.

"Some very bad pictures are made in Europe," he said. "Most French output, for example, is inferior. The conception that Europe leads in art and America in business has lost its power. America today leads in artistic film production, which is good box-office. Art, meaning production values, and box-office are inseparable. If the producer or director is an artist, he will orchestrate the ingredients so that the art will not be obtrusive but very much in evidence at the box-office.

"Many things make up the dramatic whole. Dialogue and singing are not the beginning and the end of a film. They are single elements. The film must move, and all elements must contribute to the action. American producers are today regaining the ground they lost several years ago in Europe because their films talked themselves into inanition. European producers made the same mistake."

Signed by Laemmle

Signed by Carl Laemmle in Europe a year ago, Mr. Rabinovitsch will produce for Universal on a one-picture-and-option basis. What his first picture will be, he is not prepared to say. However, he made a study of the Cathedral of Notre Dame and the Paris Opera house before he left Paris, in the event it might be "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" or "Phantom of the Opera," both Universal successes in silent days.

Mr. Rabinovitsch holds an honorary citizenship from the Government of Austria, awarded for his service to the industry there in producing "Unfinished Symphony."

Leaving Moscow, where he had financed production and exhibition, Mr. Rabinovitsch, stripped by the Bolsheviki of his wealth, went to France in 1922 with a total capital of $10.

PARIS BANS EXPORT OF "GARCONNE" FILM

Considerable surprise and controversy developed in Paris late last week as a result of the French government's sudden decision to forbid exportation of the recently completed picture adapted from Victor Marguerite's novel, "La Garconne."

Deputy Contel sent a note to the Ministry of the Interior demanding an explanation of the official move, saying, "If this film is immoral then foreign countries alone should not be protected. It should be forbidden in France."

But American Executives, Except in Universal and MGM, See Plan as Costly; Manheim Questions Double Versions

He became a producer in Paris, and in 1926 joined UFA. He was the last of the non-Aryan producers permitted to remain under the Hitler regime, he said. One of his earliest pictures, "Michael Strogoff," was successful in this country.

Directors who have worked for him include Anatole Litvak, Willy Forst, Jo May and Arthur Robison. Four of his stars are Martha Eggerth, Bridgitta Helm, Jan Kiepura and Paula Wessely. His principal writer is Walter Reisch, whom he plans soon to bring to Hollywood.

Executives Question Feasibility

Executives of American producer-distributors who showed little enthusiasm for European production found their convictions supported by the fact that most of the companies which had produced on the Continent reported that it had proved impracticable. They pointed out that major decisions would have to be made in Hollywood and material would be drawn from the film capital. A Continental producing plant would be too costly, it was feared, and it was doubted that Continental Europe could produce English versions sufficiently appealing to Americans.

American producers knowing the requirements of the international market, are instead bringing foreign directors, technicians and players to this country, it was explained, and pictures like "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Cavalcade" have demonstrated that films with a foreign background can be made in Hollywood and still be superior, said one executive, who held that "if a picture clicks here, it clicks throughout the world."

Both Universal and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are planning increased production in Europe, while other companies have no leanings in that direction.

Universal is proceeding on its experience that no picture can make money solely on the income in the country of its origin and that wider distribution must be sought, according to N. L. Manheim, foreign manager. Double versions have been found wanting in several instances, by various companies. Mr. Manheim said that because of the individual preferences of different nations, it is difficult to find stories and casts that are universally appealing, and in view of the trouble and expense in making the second version, it would be just as well to make an entirely new picture.

With the exception of quota requirements in England, production or acquisition of foreign product by American companies has been drastically reduced in recent years, and with some companies is practically at a standstill.

Things to Come

(London Films - United Artists)

Prophetic Spectacle

When America sees this film it probably will regard it as the most important ever to come out of a British studio. From such dispassionate viewpoint as a British reviewer may claim, it seems that America will be right.

Its impressiveness as a spectacle, challenging comparison with the best and the biggest the screen has seen, is one thing about "Things to Come," but not the most important thing. Nor is the striking originality, which may give rise both to box-office opportunities and to box-office problems on an unusual scale. What makes it significant is that it is the first British film of which it is possible to say with definite conviction that it sets new technical standards ahead of even the highest of the old standards set by Hollywood.

With "Things to Come," England shows technical initiative—with the aid-in-chief, be it said, of two Americans, in Ned Mann and William Cameron Menzies; a Frenchman, Georges Perinal; and a Hungarian, Vincent Korda. There is no slight to H. G. Wells in putting the technicians first; "Things to Come" is a technicians' film.

From a box-office point of view the picture is a considerable experiment. Alexander Korda, it seems, has taken Wells' treatment and dialogue practically without alteration and therefore presents a screen entertainment lasting 110 minutes in which the protagonists are not men but Mankind. What "Things to Come" sets out to do is to present a picture of a world collapsing through war into barbarism and pestilence, redeemed by science and, its own problems solved, invading stellar space with "All the Universe or nothing" as the battle-cry.

Outstanding features of its development are two: the scope and grimness of the collapse and the scale and magnificence of the recovery. It is in the last-named aspect that the spectacle reaches its most striking moments; applause directed not to action nor to actors but to settings and to effects was a feaure of the London premiere.

There is continuity of individual interest to this extent that, through the crash of air bombed cities and through the plague which follows the collapse of civilization, one follows the careers of one or two enlightened men who help to shape a new society when a band of airmen, overcoming the bandit-dictators who have set up petty states, inaugurate the new World Rule.

Centuries pass and reincarnations of these men are seen as the directing spirit of a planet perfected and controlled by Science. Man lives in wonder cities built deep into the earth but full of sunshine. Disease has been conquered.

Greatest wonder of the age is the Space Gun. Immense beyond any comparison with objects in the present day world, it points to the stars. Already rockets have been fired from it round the moon and safely back to earth. The next stage is to alight on the moon. Now, when the daughter of the world ruler and her lover wish to travel in the rocket, agitators excite the crowd against "too much progress." They descend on the gun to destroy it, ants against its immensity.

The rocket is discharged before they can interfere and the picture fades out on a question mark as the rocket traces its course through the stars.

There can be practically no criticism of "Things to Come" as a piece of screen craft. The scale is enormous and the method convincing from the very first war scenes, with airplanes filling the sky, until the development of planes to huge size is brilliantly shown in later scenes; only the fact that such marvels have not yet taken the air in fact induces one to believe that there has been model work. The realism of every detail of the wonder cities of future years is equally amazing.

As a picture it is something to feast on, and something so new and so breath-taking that personal reaction to Mr. Wells' theme and Mr. Wells' ideals may seem a secondary matter. Nevertheless it is a factor to be considered that, to many, there will be something repellent, as well as unreal, about this too, too sanitary Wellsian world, which seems to create a boredom in its inhabitants which they can escape only by shooting the moon and which sometimes threatens the same to any spectator not captivated by the screen craft of it all.

Individual characterization is not, in fact, a feature of the film, the one well marked part being that of Raymond Massey, aviator in the earlier scenes, world president in the later episodes. His is a fine performance but for the most part the individuals are bloodless and their dialogue unrealistic and declaimed rather than spoken; this is a criticism of the script and not of a cast including, among others, Margaretta Scott, Ralph Richardson, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Edward Chapman.

Reference to this film should not in fact end on a note of criticism. It is a big film; a skilful and enormously courageous piece of production, a subject offering the public something they have never had before. It may be a showman will be needed to put it over; certainly every showman should see it.

Previewed ot Leicester Squore Theotre, London; a press preview the previous night. The audience found the glimpses of the future breathtaking and applouse wos prolonged for individual sets and effects. Women ond some men criticised the lock of "story." Objection to the arid Wellsian world wos common; but its picturization was thought "marvellous."—ALLAN, London.

Comedy

Hokum wild west comedy drama and hokum Wheeler and Woolsey gag comedy is the tune to which this picture spins. Understood and marketed as a nonsensical, idiotic fun feature which burlesques the straight formula western entertainment idea, it has ingredients to satisfy the Wheeler and Woolsey following and those who like to see standard patterns given a lot of changing around and alteration.

Timed to the 1870's era, painless dentist Pennington and his always-in-the-way aide, Banks, are en route by stage coach to Little Town. The stage is held up and while Painless treats one of the bandits, Banks falls in love with Mary Blake, a schoolteacher also bound for Little Town. The town is preparing to move en masse to the site of a gold strike. John Little swindles Painless into buying a choice business location as the dumb medico doesn't know that he'll soon be living in a ghost town. Here happens one of the funny gags with Painless treating a goat and the goat swallowing his instruments.

Meanwhile renegade Bewley and his henchman Trigger inspire the Indians to attack the wagon train. Painless and Banks, who have got wind of the plot, ride up to warn the gold seekers of their peril just in time to get into the battle. Tossing chloroform-soaked sponges, they wreak havoc on the red raiders. Captured, they escape burning at the stake by donning Indian garb and staging a footrace out of camp. They're caught and another battle ensues, but Banks rides out to get the U. S. Cavalry. The Indians wiped out, Painless is hit by a stone which he finds full of gold. Knowing that the rock came from Little Town, the whole mob dashes back home to find that the lot Painless bought is right in the heart of the new bonanza.

diately established the feature as one in which there will be plenty of singing. Much of it is dragged in to the detriment of action and continuity and presumably to capitalize upon the reputation Kiepura made in the picture previously mentioned.

In this case, with the locales several European cities, it's an application of backstage show technique to grand opera. As it goes, Antonio is a singing fisherman. When the opera featuring Maria and Forcellini along with Bonetti comes to town, Antonio, a spectator, breaks up the show. It causes plenty of excitement and eventually leads to Forcellini, who is dissatisfied anyway, quitting the show. Impressed with the beauty of his voice, Maria and Bonetti fix it up with the police and take Antonio along in Forcellini's place. Quickly developing into a sensation, he falls in love with Maria. When he finds that Bonetti, who has been his friend and patron, is also in love with Maria, he jumps the show.

With the opera booked for Sorrento, Antonio's home town, it looks as if there won't be any show, but Antonio makes a mad dash over the mountains in an auto to step into his role and save the reputation of Maria and Bonetti and win the acclaim of the populace.

Done in a continental motif, the picture has elements for that contingent of fans which understands and appreciates classical music, not all of which is operatic. For the general rank and file the preponderance of music provides a problem which may possibly be eliminated if the romantic love interest content is stressed.

Previewed in the Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood Boulevard neighborhood house. Audience reactions indicate that the public is going to be disappointed if it is led to expect another "Be Mine Tonight."

Treachery Rides the Range

Western

Geared to sate the appetite of the outdoor western thrill fans, this fast moving, excitement-packed feature is motivated by a spirit of adventure, with plenty of wild riding, quick shooting, heroism and deviltry. While there is only a little bit of love interest, that quality is so logically inserted that in addition to billing the attraction as an action adventure film, it also can be publicized as a western romance.

The story has a different basis than the usual western. Because scout Red Tyler is an adopted son of Chief Red Smoke and because the U. S. Government has made a treaty with the Indians to suppress the slaughter of buffalo, soldiers at Fort Douglas and neighboring Cheyenne tribes live in peace and harmony. Greed of the white man, however, prompts Barton and Carter, buffalo hunters, to request permission of Col. Drummond to conduct a hunt. Refused, they go out anyway and slaughter much of the herd. When one of the chief's sons is killed, the Indians think the soldiers responsible and go on the warpath.

Meanwhile, the Colonel's daughter, Ruth, wants to go on an overland trip. Believing Tyler is exaggerating the danger, she accepts the invitation of Carter and Barton to travel with them. This brings about a stirring fight between Carter and Tyler, resulting in Tyler being tossed into jail. A few days elapse before he escapes, and as he picks up the trail, his borrowed horse is shot from under him, but when his own charger appears he takes off again. Indians, however, attack the Carter-Barton expedition and capture Ruth following a lively battle. With his buddy Bunce, Tyler goes to rescue Ruth. The revengeful red men capture them also, and they are being subjected to torture when Little Wolf, Tyler's adopted half brother, shows proof that it was not soldiers but renegades who killed the buffalo and started the war. To substantiate his statement, Little Wolf and Tyler go to fetch Drummond while Ruth is held hostage. The pair, trapped by Carter and Barton, are about to be shot when Drummond's cavalry rides up. Truth of the villainy made known, the Indians are satisfied when Carter and Barton go before a firing squad and Tyler sings his way into Ruth's heart.

Previewed in Warner's Forum Theatre, second-run neighborhood house. The audience showed its approval of the picture's well handled thrill and action by doing plenty of whooping and cheering.

Rhodes

(Gaumont British)

Pictorial Biography

The life of Cecil Rhodes who, almost alone, carved for England a vast and wealthy country out of the wilderness that was South Africa in the 1880's, is here presented with dramatic force and yet restraint. The entire picture centers around one man, Walter Huston in the title role, and as has been the case in previous efforts of this star, his performance dominates to such an extent that showmen might do well to make this a strong point in their exploitation campaigns.

The force of the combined dramatic performances should be sufficient to carry any audience.

The picture abounds in material to stir the imagination and create general interest for in it are scenes built around the diamond mines of Kimberley—with a rush for claims similar to the one staged in this country when the Oklahoma Territory was opened to settlers—primitive African natives, the Transvaal with its Boers and the events which later involved them in war with England, all interwoven in sequences plausible because of their historical accuracy.

Berthold Viertel's direction tells his story in pulsating sequences, continually working toward the effective climax. The production values are excellent and much of the film's entertainment is enhanced by the photography of Bernard Knowles and by the outdoor work shot in Africa under Geoffrey Barkas by S. R. Bonnett.

The cast, besides Huston, includes such Continental names as Oscar Homolka, Basil Sydney, Frank Cellier and Peggy Ashcraft.

As the picture opens Rhodes, given only six months to live by Basil Sydney, who, as Starr Jameson, becomes Rhodes' physician and lifelong friend, is a diamond digger in Kimberley. Infected with the dream of empire in South Africa, Rhodes, first showing genius in his ability to make reality of a dream, obtains, after a ten-year battle, control of all the Kimberley diamond fields.

With the power at his hand to use it as he may, Rhodes then looks to the north for his first move toward a consolidated South Africa. Matabeleland, home of fierce natives and thought to be rich in natural resources, is his first goal. But Kruger, crafty president of the Transvaal, looms up as an obstacle and nearly defeats him.

Finally, with Matabeleland, known to the World today as Rhodesia, his by virtue of his concessions from the native king and his own armed force, the future looks bright for Rhodes until English settlers in the Transvaal come to him for aid. Driven on by his desire for a united continent, Rhodes helps them but ruins himself, having to resign from his post as Prime Minister and head of the diamond trust.

War between the English and Dutch is imminent, however, and although Rhodes is a dying man as his country is finally winning, he closes his eyes before he actually can see his dream a reality.

A battle with the savage Matabele, Jameson's invasion of the Transvaal and subsequent capture, Rhodes' surrender of his high posts to save his friend from death and the background shots of the African veldt are the most interesting, and often exciting, episodes.

This is a full picturization of the highlights of the career of one of the World's greatest figures, and showmen have available the full cooperation of those groups demanding better pictures.—Baehler, New York.

The House of a Thousand Candles

(Republic)

Drama

Though the title of this picture may be familiar, the modernized story it tells is something entirely new. In the present version, with a well moulded thread of suspense holding the yarn together, it is a drama of international espionage and intrigue. Supplementing the motivating plot is a contrasting vein of romantic love interest and a novel line of comedy. Well produced, locales and backgrounds being exceptional, the picture moves with speed and develops a series of surprising situations. In these, as well as in the worth of cast names, there is substance for ingenious showmanship, revealing only enough to pique curiosity.

Irving Pichel, head of the spy ring, has his headquarters in an elaborate Parisian hotel called The House of a Thousand Candles. By means of a high-powered and secret short wave radio set, he intercepts government messages and by means of secretly coded advertising messages keeps in touch with his confederates all over the world. In London, Lawrence Grant, an English cabinet official, prepares to send a secret coded message to Geneva. The message is entrusted to Phillips Holmes, but circumstances are so contrived as to make it appear that another is the courier. When the beautiful woman lure is used, Holmes succumbs to the blandishments of Rosita Moreno, the message is stolen and delivered to Pichel.

Holmes, who can't get away from his trailing American sweetheart, Mae Clarke, knows that Rosita is booked for a dancing engagement in Pichel's hotel. Following her there, to be followed in turn by Miss Clarke, both fall into Pichel's hands. The message accidentally decoded, the prisoners Holmes and Miss Clarke are doomed to quick death as Pichel is off to place the message in hands where it will do most harm. Freeing herself, Miss Clarke gets Holmes out and with the help of his valet, Fred Walton, the trio win the cooperation of an orchestra leader, Michael Fitzgerald, to broadcast a warning to intercept Pichel. The racing Pichel, pursued by Holmes, crashes into a truck and is killed, the message is recovered, an international catastrophe forestalled and Holmes finds time to devote to Miss Clarke.

The subject of spies usually being an engaging topic, it is presented here in a manner that is both entertaining and of much showmanship availability.

Previewed in the Fox Wilshire Theatre, Los Angeles deluxe neighborhood house. The audience watched the picture attentively and appeared to be deeply absorbed in the manner in which it picturized the workings of a world spy ring.

The Bohemian Girl

(MGM-Roach)

Comedy

When Michael William Balfe wrote the popular opera, "The Bohemian Girl," his original work was a dramatic and sometimes morbid story concerning the adventures of a gypsy band, interspersed with ballads of pathos and sentiment. In MGM's screen version it merely serves as a vehicle in which Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy perform their customary comedy antics and all the original material is discarded, except for several musical numbers, the gypsy band and the kidnaping of the child.

Showmen are given ample exploitable material, and it might be well for them to emphasize the fact that this is another Laurel and Hardy comedy and not an opera on the screen. The comedians are the strongest selling point, even though their work here falls below the average set in their recent feature length efforts.

The supporting cast is composed of names that signify comedy, with Mae Busch, James Finlayson, Darla Hood, William P. Carleton, Antonio Moreno and Jacqueline Wells heading the list. Direction, by James Horne and Charles Rogers, allows the plot to lapse time and time again in order to permit Laurel and Hardy to cavort about in their familiar fashion.

The musical numbers taken from the original version, including "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls" and "The Gypsy Life You Lead," do much to enhance the film's entertainment values, especially in the singing of Miss Wells.

The story has Laurel and Hardy members of a roving band of gypsies, with Hardy's wife, Miss Busch, carrying on on the side with Moreno. The two lovers want to desert the band so Moreno decides to rob the castle of Count Arnheim for funds. He is caught and flogged, however, and the gypsies are ordered to move on. Moreno, however, steals the count's little daughter and carries her off with the band.

When the two lovers do quit the tribe, Hardy is left with the little girl, under the impression she is his own child.

The next scene finds the child grown into an attractive young woman, with quite an attractive voice, as she proves by singing "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls." The girl is caught in Count Arnheim's castle when the band returns to that town, and she is about to be flogged when a mark on her shoulder proves her to be the long lost daughter of the count. Laurel and Hardy, who tried to rescue her and were thrown in the torture chamber, are released and all ends well.

All through the story the action is stopped to allow the comedians to go through their familiar pieces of "business," which they do with all their well known gestures and grimaces.

Concentration of showmanship would seem to be best centered on the Laurel and Hardy fans.—Baehler, New York.

When Knights Were Bold

(Capitol - General in UK)

Costume Fantasy-Comedy

The stage original has been a standby in England for twenty years or more, with the lead played first by its creator, James Welsh, and later by Bromley Challenor, who died recently. It is a roaring farce, with an intriguing story idea of obvious screen values, previously exploited in a silent picture with Nelson Keys playing the Welsh role.

In this version it becomes a semi-musical and Jack Buchanan is Sir Guy de Vere, the Bohemian successor to an old title who is so oppressed by his relatives' insistence on the family's history and past greatness that he dreams himself back into the Middle Ages and into the personality of the fighting Sir Guy of that era.

That's the story in a nutshell. There is a pretty cousin, Rowena, full of romantic ideas who gives the color to Guy's dreams by lending him a book about the mighty past. Sir Guy, after his translation to the past, finds the same set of people about him, and when he returns to the present he takes steps to assert the manliness of the second Sir Guy.

Whether this type of full-blooded farce is improved by musical trimmings, even by Sigler, Hoffman and Goodhart, is an open question. Buchanan puts over his numbers in a style which his admirers will like and even gets in a sand dance without seriously holding up the action. That, for the most part, is good vigorous clowning before backgrounds of moated castles and medieval battlefields. Guy's love for Rowena, surviving even the shock of her table manners as the fighting Lady Rowena of prefork days, and his rivalry with the snobbish Brian Ballymote never is allowed to obscure the main purpose of the film, which is to create laughter by gags, slapstick and an intensive guying of the "brave old days."

Fay Wray is a spirited Rowena and the rest of the cast, of good British screen and stage reputation, play up well in a film in which acting is of less importance than comedy situations. These are certainly good enough to provide showable material, where Buchanan is a draw, to any audience which can appreciate a dig at a form of snobbery which, as it happens, is more English than American.—Allan, London.

Produced by Capitol Film Productions, Ltd. Distributed in England by General Film Distributors, Ltd. From the play by Charles Marlowe. Directed by Jack Raymond. Adaptation and scenario by Douglas Furber and Austin Parker. Camera, F. A. Young. Sound, John S. Dennis. Musical numbers by Sigler, Hoffman and Goodhart. Running time, 76 minutes. The Walking Dead

(Warner)

Mystery Drama

This, the latest effort of Boris Karloff in the field of the weird, offers showmen unique exploitation possibilities, for the story treats of restoration of the dead, a topic that for ages, either as scientific experimentation or spiritual mysticism, has intrigued the public mind.

In the pictures, with a melodramatic semi-mystery story as a motivating basis, the subject is approached from a scientific standpoint, along the lines similar to those used by Drs. Alexis Carrel and Robert Cornish in their experiments that attracted such widespread attention in the public prints some few months ago. The background here is slightly different, for where the doctors experimented with animals frozen to death, here a man electrocuted as a murderer is brought back to life by science.

Karloff, naturally, is the leading figure in the picture and the fulcrum upon which exploitation campaigns should be supported. He is less macabre here than in his "Frankenstein" roles, but is still sufficiently weird to remain in keeping with former characterizations.

The production values are excellent, especially those laboratory scenes during which the dead man is brought back to life by means of singing, flashing and crackling electrical devices.

The capable direction is by Michael Curtiz, who recently finishing "Captain Blood," and who will be remembered for his "Mystery of the Wax Museum" and "Doctor X."

Besides Karloff there are such well-known players as Ricardo Cortez, Barton McLane, Warren Hull, Henry O'Neill, Edmund Gwenn, Robert Strange and Marguerite Churchill, who returns to the screen after quite a period of absence.

The picture opens on a large city in the hands of a currupt group of politicians, guided by the legal mind of Cortez. One of their group is sentenced to prison for manipulation of the city funds, and Karloff, recently released from prison after serving a murder sentence imposed upon him by the same court, is framed when the crooks retaliate by slaying the honest judge.

Bewildered and unable to understand why Hull and Miss Churchill, who witnessed the crime while returning home from the laboratory of Gwenn, failed to come forth in his defense, Karloff is electrocuted. At that point the two witnesses confess their part in the whole scheme of things, and Gwenn arranges

When George J. Schaefer became vice-president and general sales manager of United Artists, the contract was signed in the presence of Sam Goldwyn, producing member of the company, and Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president in charge of foreign sales.

UA SIGNS SCHAEFER AS GENERAL MANAGER

Becomes Vice-President in Charge of Domestic and Canadian Distribution

The motion picture's personnel structure was affected this week by the following:

George J. Schaefer joined United Artists as vice-president and general manager in charge of sales.

Walt Disney moved from United Artists to RKO, taking Mickey Mouse with him.

Richard A. Rowland resigned from MGM.

Irving Thalberg is expected to sign a new 10-year MGM production contract.

Hunt Stromberg signed with MGM as a producer for another five years.

Fred McConnell rejoined Columbia's home office sales department.

Paul Terry became president of Terry-Toons, on the retirement of Frank Moser.

Howard J. Green was appointed associate producer at Columbia.

E. B. Derr became associated with Republic as a producer; Fanchon Royer was named assistant to Nat Levine, and so was Gorson Molson.

James A. Clark, resigned, was succeeded by Lee Balsley as head of accessory sales at Twentieth Century-Fox.

Ben Koenig was appointed in charge of serials at Universal.

Rufus LeMaire resigned as MGM casting director and was succeeded by Bill Grady.

Harold Kemp became west coast executive for Fanchon and Marco.

Following closely upon reports that he was to join Universal in an executive sales capacity, George J. Schaefer signed a contract this week with United Artists and becomes vice-president and general manager in charge of domestic and Canadian sales for that company. The deal is for three years, with Mr. Schaefer assuming his new duties at once.

All Disney Product to RKO

Walt Disney in Hollywood Monday signed a contract with M. H. Aylesworth under which all his product for a number of years to come will be distributed through RKO beginning with the 1937-38 season. United Artists, in the past, has been distributing the Disney product.

The deal includes the "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphony" series, and all future features, the first of which, "Snow White," is now in production and expected to be ready for release this year. All Disney productions are in the three-component Technicolor process.

No set number of releases is embraced under the new contract, for the Disney program includes from 12 to 24 short subjects and one feature length cartoon annually.

Two-Year Contract to Kelly

Arthur W. Kelly, who has been handling all sales for United Artists since the resignation of Al Lichtman, was awarded a new two-year contract as vice-president in charge of foreign sales exclusive of England and the Continent.

New Thalberg Arrangement

In Hollywood, Irving Thalberg is reported about to sign a new long-term contract with MGM which will virtually establish him in business on his own, but with finances and distribution supplied by the organization with which he so long has been identified.

Under the new reported deal, Mr. Thalberg for the next 10 years will produce with his own unit on the MGM lot, but with the studio's personnel, manpower and technical facilities available at all times.

Five-Year Stromberg Contract

With two years still to go under his present contract with MGM, Hunt Stromberg has been signed to a new five-year agreement.

Terry Gets Moser's Interest

Frank Moser, president of Moser-Terry, Inc., retired to devote his time to painting, and Paul Terry was elected president of the company at a meeting of the board of directors in New York Monday. Mr. Terry has acquired Mr. Moser's interest in the corporation, the name of which will be changed to Terry-Toons, Inc.

Harvey B. Day was elected vice-president in charge of sales, Philip A. Scheib, musical director, was named second vice-president and William M. Weiss secretary and treasurer.

Derr Joins Republic

The abandonment of the production plans of the Derr-Sullivan company was indicated with the announcement this week that E. B. Derr had joined Republic Pictures in Hollywood as an associate producer with Nat Levine. Fanchon Royer also has been signed as an assistant to Mr. Levine. For the past year Miss Royer has been producing in Mexico for the Mexican government. Gordon Molson, Republic casting head, has also been named assistant to Mr. Levine.

RKO, Van Beuren Outlet, Gets Disney

Signing of Walt Disney for release of his product through RKO created considerable speculation as to the effect this might have on Van Beuren Corporation and its continued association with the distributing company.

The Disney deal would have a bearing on Van Beuren's "Rainbow Parade" series of color cartoons, spokesmen for that company and RKO assumed. Van Beuren has produced 13 of these subjects a year for RKO release. However, the Disney product does not leave UA for RKO until 1937.

How the entire distribution arrangement under which RKO has released approximately 46 Van Beuren subjects annually since 1930 would be affected by the Disney program was uncertain, but a decision would be made, it was said, at conferences following return from the Coast of Leo Spitz, M. H. Aylesworth and Ned E. Depinet.

Mr. Aylesworth flew back to New York late Wednesday but was not available for comment.

Because of RKO's half interest in Van Beuren, acquired in 1930, the impression prevails that RKO will drop merely the color cartoons.

Ned E. Depinet and Jules Levy of RKO are members of the Van Beuren board.

The distribution arrangement with Disney begins Jan. 1, 1937.

One of the expected results is the resignation of Disney from the board of United Artists.

to obtain the body and successfully brings it back to life.

Driven by a strange force, Karloff then sets out to avenge his own legal murder, for the few moments that he has spent in the other world has enabled him to see the whole thing clearly. Relentlessly he starts after the politicians, never touching them himself but nevertheless driving them to their death. One runs before a train, another, the real murderer of the judge, shoots himself, and a third jumps from a high window. This leaves Cortez and McLane, who decide to take matters in their own hands and kill Karloff once more.

Tracing him as he wanders off in a storm, they come across the strange creature in a cemetery. Warned of their presence, he goes toward them and they promptly empty an automatic into his body and flee. But a slippery road and high tension wires take care of them as Karloff admonishes Gwenn to leave the dead to themselves and dies once more.

All through this is interwoven the romance between Hull and Miss Churchill to edge off some of the somber qualities of the picture.

Exhibitors might do well to see the picture for themselves before handling it, the better to understand the treatment necessary for the best results, but it can be said that although the picture is up to previous Karloff efforts, the desired result is obtained without outright shocking.—BAEHLER, New York.

The Lawless Nineties

Action Drama

Showmen here are presented with all the basic ingredients for presentation of a satisfactory action drama against a western background, emphasizing the customary hard-riding, shooting, fighting hand-to-hand, with the additional "G-Man" element.

Although the picture is a run-of-the-mill action drama, similar in plot and trimmings to previous members of this series starring John Wayne, it has the stuff which, taken as a whole, has proved successful with audiences in most situations where this type film is presented.

In addition, showmen can capitalize on the fact that here Wayne is cast as a "G-Man," sent by the government to conduct a referendum whereby the territory of Wyoming was voted into the Union and became the forty-fourth state.

Besides Wayne, the cast is composed of such well-known—at least to action drama enthusiasts—names as Ann Rutherford, Harry Woods, George Hayes and Al Bridge. Joseph Kane's direction keeps the action moving right along in logical sequence to the climax.

As the picture opens, Wayne and his partner are being assigned by the Government to police the territory of Wyoming to assure an honest vote in the referendum.

Wayne discovers that a lawless element is terrorizing homesteaders, to the extent of driving them away from their homes, in order to assure victory for itself at the polls.

After one of the Government agents is murdered, Wayne discovers that the telegraph wires are tapped and all his reports to Washington are being intercepted. Using their own device to trap them, Wayne then sends a false message concerning a shipment of silver, and when the bandits arrive to hold up the shipment they are arrested by Wayne. The leaders escape, however.

Wayne next is captured and is being held prisoner as the day of the balloting arrives, but he gets away, after discovering who the bandit leaders are. He then organizes his forces and rides in on the town, only to face a barricade of smoking guns. The barricade is dynamited and the Government men conduct the referendum. In the meantime similar attacks by the Government men have rid other towns in the territory of the crooks and the results of the ballots show that Wyoming becomes the forty-fourth state.

Interspersed in the action are several hand-to-hand fights between Wayne and the crooks, and Wayne is given many opportunities to flash his ability in handling a gun. Romance, too, plays its part, between Wayne and Miss Rutherford, daughter of a newspaper publisher who is murdered by the crooks. There is comedy, also, handled by two colored performers, Snowflake and Etta McDaniels.—BAEHLER, New York.

Screen Snapshots No. 7

Personality Glimpses

Assaying more personalities to the running minute than is average for the series to date, this tour of Hollywood rates well up on the list. First attention is given to the new Racquet Club at Palm Springs sponsored by Charles Farrell and Ralph Bellamy. Reginald Owen, the Richard Arlens, Dick Powell, Skeets Gallagher, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, Charles Butterworth, George Bancroft, Carole Lombard and George Brent are among the screen folk snapped at tennis and other games. Next stop is at the Disney studio, where Walt Disney is presented with a decoration of the French Legion of honor. Start of production on Mary Pickford's first undertaking as a producer is a high spot. Victor McLaglen and the Three Stooges at work on location afford a comic finish. Other items include Paul Kelly christening a polo pony and Fred Stone and his daughter doing a bit of extemporaneous hoofing for guests.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Just Speeding

Chase Comedy

Borrowing a doctor's automobile and telling officers about to arrest him for speeding that he is rushing his companion to a hospital for an operation, a journeyman butcher forthwith is escorted to the scene of the alleged appendectomy and supervised by police in attempted performance of the surgery. Unwilling victim, volunteer surgeon, police officers, nurses, staff doctors and hospital patients become embroiled in a series of averted incisions and thwarted flights terminating in execution of the deferred arrest. Speedy action offsets familiarity of material and the burden of comedy is distributed among a number of relatively obscure players instead of being restricted to a starred comedian. It contains at least two genuine laughs, a number of chuckles and enough plain diversion. The anti-speeding idea is not stressed.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Ants in the Pantry

Typical Slapstick

Cast as professional pest exterminators who first supply prospective customers with liberal assortments of ants, moths and mice by way of creating a demand for their services, the Three Stooges sprinkle their characteristic comedy with a few new gags and borrow many more from the archives of Keystone memory. The result is swiftly-moving action predicated on subject matter of a kind not universally considered unquestionable screen material. Clara Kimball Young appears as the society matron at whose house party the boys do their stuff.—Running time, 18½ minutes.

The Voice of Experience, No. 9

Widely Interesting

Discoursing on the general subject of the family quarrel, the Voice of Experience presents three specimens, each enacted first as it commonly takes place and second as it might have been averted by application of his widely heard radio advice. The specimens are well chosen, their enactment adequate and the advices of commonsense pattern. Sure to interest nearly if not all those to whom it is shown, the subject possesses unusual screen value.—Running time, 9½ minutes.

A Clean Shaven Man

(Paramount)

Average Cartoon

Neither best nor worst of the Popeye the Sailor series, this one presents the spinach champion and his ancient adversary as suitors of a waitress who sings that she "wants a clean shaven man." Agreeing to shave each other and take their chances with her favor afterwards, they come to the usual double cross, the fisticuffs and the fadeout. Most of it happens in a barber shop and the gags are somewhat less than customarily inspired.—Running time, 7 minutes.

NBC Adds Two Stations

The National Broadcasting Company last week brought the total number of its stations up to 96 with the acquisition of station WCSC, Charleston, S. C., and WFBC, Greenville, S. C. The two new stations will operate as optional units in the NBC Southeastern group, presenting programs from NBC-WEAF and NBC-WJZ national networks, beginning March 1.

LeMaire Leaves MGM

Rufus LeMaire, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer casting head, has tendered his resignation, effective March 15. He will enter the agency business on that date. Bill Grady, studio talent scout who had substituted for Mr. LeMaire, will continue permanently in the post.

Laboratory Ready in May

Consolidated Film Industries will open its new west coast laboratory late in May or early in June, according to Herbert J. Yates, president, following his return to New York from Hollywood. All his company's work will be concentrated in the new plant.

DRAMATISTS INVITE FILM PRODUCERS TO SUBSIDIZE THE BROADWAY STAGE

Agreement Between Guild and Theatrical Producing Managers Gives Dramatist Control of Play, Cuts Manager's Share

Hollywood producers received a direct bid to subsidize the Broadway stage this week when the terms of the new minimum basic agreement offered by the dramatists to the producing managers were made public in full, revealing that for the first time that motion picture companies may negotiate for the stage and screen rights at the same time.

Climaxing months of controversy and discussion, the new agreement between the Dramatists' Guild and the theatrical producing managers vests the complete control of a play in the dramatist, and instead of the 50-50 arrangement in force heretofore on the sale of the screen rights, sharply curtails the producing manager's participation.

The first reactions from the film industry were at variance. Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbian Pictures, believed that the new arrangement would limit Hollywood underwriting of Broadway production and make the risk too great. Samuel Goldwyn, however, on Tuesday said that "in the face of protest and criticism by all other Hollywood producers and Broadway managers," he alone commended the playwrights for their action.

Managers Oppose Terms

New York producing managers, hurriedly called into emergency session, declared their unalterable opposition to the new terms, which became effective March 1 for two years, and announced a "fight to a finish." The Guild rejected their suggestions for revision.

Meanwhile 50 members of the League of New York Theatres, organization of producers, Monday decided not to sign the agreement. Brock Pemberton, chairman of the producers' contract committee, said formal complaint would be made to the Guild.

That far-reaching effects will be felt in Hollywood is indicated in the more than 20 Broadway productions which have been bankrolled by motion picture companies this season, many of which already have been purchased for the screen by the underwriting film companies.

What provoked the producing managers to a fighting mood was the sliding scale by which they are to share with the dramatist in the revenue from film rights. The manager would receive 50 per cent of the first $15,000; 33 1/3 per cent of the next $15,000, and 25 per cent thereafter, unless he has invested more than $60,000, whereupon he may, at the playwright's option and request, be given a larger share. Radio and television rights would be similarly divided. Under the schedule, the share to the manager would range from 42 per cent on $30,000 to 28 per cent on $150,000.

UNION WILL ENFORCE FINE FOR SPLICING

The $50 fine for members of the Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union who are found splicing reels is to be strictly enforced, union officials have announced. The union, after having conducted an investigation in conjunction with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., several months ago in which it was stated no signs of the use of the 2,000-foot reels by Boston projectionists were discovered, recently made another checkup following reports that operators were splicing reels.

"If such rights are leased on a royalty basis prior to production," the agreement provides that both screen and stage contract must be signed simultaneously, with the full knowledge of the manager. It is also provided that in event of such purchases, there shall be negotiated a basic motion picture royalty contract between the Guild and the producer or producers, "containing minimum standards," but no such basic contract shall run beyond March 1, 1938.

Sidney Howard, president of the Dramatists' Guild, which is affiliated with the Authors' League of America, of which Marc Connelly, author of "Green Pastures," is president, said that clause "opened the door" to separate pacts with motion picture companies.

Cohn Sees Gamble

"We have at last found a way for direct and above-board negotiation with Hollywood," Mr. Howard said. "We hope the enlightened producers will enter a contract for both picture and play on royalty basis."

However, Jack Cohn, who is reported to be partially backing "The Postman Always Rings Twice," Broadway play featuring Richard Barthelmess, said that the offer to make a separate agreement was too great a gamble for the film company.

It was, in fact, for the primary purpose of using Broadway as a testing ground for possible photoplays that the motion picture industry in the last three seasons has extended its invasion of the legitimate field. When the dramatists realized that practically all the plays sold for pictures went to the film backers, they complained that such sponsorship stifled the bidding.

It is provided that if the film rights are leased on a royalty basis after the stage production, the royalties shall be not less than 7½ per cent of the gross, with a reasonable non-return advance. The picture must be released within two years after the release date authorized in the contract, otherwise all film rights revert to the author.

No film based on a play may be released until six months after the end of the run in Manhattan, the agreement stipulates, and until one year and four months after the initial performance under other conditions, but if the play is presented outside Manhatton, the film may be released earlier with the consent of the manager.

"The manager agrees," says the agreement, "that the exhibition of the motion picture after the expiration of the aforesaid periods shall not constitute competition with first-class production of the play. The author shall at no time make block sales of motion picture rights."

The film rights must be sold within five years after the run of a first-class production, otherwise the playwright gets the entire royalty and the manager nothing.

Bidding for film rights will be through the Guild-appointed negotiator, Joseph Bickerton, formerly called arbitrator, and the Guild itself. The negotiator's salary is not to exceed $15,000 a year.

Jack Cohn Predicts Pact Will Limit Hollywood's Underwriting of Plays; Goldwyn Commends Dramatists' Action

New Option Terms

Another important change has to do with the payment of "option money." The practice has been for a manager to pay a playwright $500 for a six-month option, deducted from royalties after the play has been produced. The new arrangement provides that the manager pay the author $100 a month for six months' options. If renewed for a second six months, the fee is $150 a month. The option is cancellable at the end of any month.

Clarification of other provisions have been made, including that relating to production in Great Britain, where managers now are given exclusive right to stage their Broadway plays within six months from the date of the first performance in New York.

The agreement also stipulates that every foreign play produced in this country must come under its provisions.

Meanwhile, Actors' Equity Association, without taking sides, suggested arbitration to the Guild in order to break the impasse.

The large film companies which have been active in stage financing, including Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount and Warner Brothers, were silent on the issue, preferring to await developments. Their attitude has been unfavorable to the type of authors' royalty agreement that the dramatists now propose. But with the play rights included in a possible pact, Hollywood might assume a more interested attitude, the dramatists felt.

Samuel Goldwyn has sponsored attempts to establish a royalty basis for the sale of plays for screen production, urging it on the grounds of greater returns to the authors, hence greater incentive to better creative work and a resultant improvement in product.

"The evils of compulsory block booking from the standpoint of the public were summarized by Allied as follows:

1. "It forces the showing of undesirable pictures.

2. "It prevents the showing of many highly desirable pictures.

3. "It deprives the local or neighborhood exhibitor, acting with the advice and cooperation of his patrons, of all discretion as to the kind of pictures he will exhibit in his theatre and vests that discretion in Hollywood."

From the exhibitors' standpoint, continued Allied, compulsory block booking "is bad for every exhibitor" for these reasons:

"It is fundamentally unsound economically.

"It prevents local autonomy.

"It promotes production monopoly and restricts the supply.

"The exhibitor, in appraising the value to himself of the abolition of compulsory block booking, should," in Allied's opinion, take note of the changes in the industry since 1922, as shown by the following comparison:

ADVANCE SYNOPSIS THE REAL ISSUE

Regardless of all other arguments, the clause requiring distributors to furnish exhibitors with a synopsis of each feature long in advance of release, is the one grave concern to the large companies of the Neely-Pettengill anti-block booking bill. They resent the attempt to control the production before its completion, complaining that the writing of a synopsis in advance of release would actually require strict adherence in filming to a synopsis sheet already sent to exhibitors, or else compel them to first complete the picture, then write the synopsis and withhold the picture until a synopsis had been circulated among exhibitors.

Both the production and distribution divisions of the large companies hold that such a system is next to impossible in this era of continual changes during production and quick release after filming is completed.

"Block booking and blind selling are cloaks for dishonest business practices," charged Mr. Myers. "The system permits monopolies and compels exhibitors to show undesirable pictures to the exclusion of desirables." He estimated that the average theatre shows 156 pictures a year, and because of block booking, can only show product of three companies.

"No industry has more flagrantly disregarded anti-trust laws than the motion picture," he continued.

Traces Sales History

Mr. Myers traced the evolution of the present system from the days of single picture sales to the "star group" system with wide cancellation privileges, then to the "title group" and finally to the present when pictures are sold only by class or numerical groups without any identification. "Product announcements," he said, "are meaningless in their vagueness; the distributor now can pan off anything."

A mere cancellation privilege in the block booking contract of today cannot solve the problem, he said, because the inclusion of foreign pictures or "quickies" can defeat the purpose.

Mr. Myers declared between 25 and 50 per cent of theatre receipts are spent for product.

Mr. Myers told how F. J. McWilliams, Portage, Wis., offered Universal $75 for "The Magnificent Obsession," instead of the customary $20 rental, and Universal refused.

"I never have known an independent exhibitor who is fully aware of the facts who did not favor the abolishment of block booking," Mr. Myers said.

He denied there is any aim to obtain censorship through the Neely-Pettengill bill. "Nor is there any truth to the distributors' contention that if producers do not secure a market for their 'poor' pictures now foisted through block booking, then they will go broke." On the contrary, he asserted, "producers will make more money because better pictures will have longer runs."

Mr. Myers offered a sheaf of letters for the record, supporting the bill. One was from

DAVIS PROBES BOX OFFICE RESULTS

P. S. Harrison, publisher of Harrison's Reports, New York, another from A. B. Jarbol, independent exhibitor of Cameron, Mo.

He told the Senators that an Allied survey in Minneapolis and St. Paul—W. A. (Al) Steffes' stronghold—disclosed that exhibitors there were "invariably against the practice."

On the sidelines Charles Clyde Pettijohn, leading the distributors' opposition, voiced displeasure at what he described as Mr. Myers' "comparing the motion picture to manure." Mr. Myers in his testimony had explained that the advance synoposis required of each picture before release was no more than the labeling required, by federal law, of other products—"food and drugs and fertilizer."

Nathan Yamins, president of Allied, was called next to "give a cross-section of independent exhibitor views." Mr. Yamins described himself as "an independent exhibitor for 20 years" who "quit the MPTOA at Toronto when that organization sold its birthright for a mess of pottage." Mr. Yamins did not explain.

He introduced communications between himself and Paramount in which, he declared, Paramount refused to give him relief from "objectionable pictures" ordering him to "play or pay."

Mr. Yamins concentrated on the moral issue. In answer to a question by Mr. Pettijohn, he declared that product during the past two years (since the Production Code Administration) had not been any better than "par."

Samuelson Charges "Monopoly"

Sydney E. Samuelson, until recently president of national Allied, joined in Mr. Yamins' opinion that the attitude of independent exhibitors is for abolition of block booking.

Mr. Samuelson charged "monopoly." He said that in 1922 there were from 22 to 25 "national feature distributors," releasing 800 features a year. Block booking then began to rise, flowering in 1932, until today, he said, the practice has cut the number of companies to eight—the "Big Eight—and annual feature releases to 350.

"But has block booking cut box office receipts?" Senator Davis asked.

"Block booking has cut the number of theatres in small communities which could not afford to buy blocks of pictures," answered Mr. Samuelson. "Millions have been driven from theatres by block booking and its elimination will bring an era of prosperity."

Mr. Pettijohn then read Film Board of Trade theatre statistics from MOTION PICTURE HERALD, citing increases in seating capacity by 175,000 in 1935 and an increase in theatres of 240.

H. M. Richey, general manager of Allied Theatres of Michigan, said he represented "250 Michigan theatre owners who have indorsed the bill because they have been penalized for showing undesirable pictures bought blindly in blocks."

J. L. Whittle, of Baltimore, representing the Maryland Motion Picture Theatre Owners, told the Senators that block booking is "compulsory" in his state and that independents favor its abolishment.

Numerous club women then testified for the bill, citing as reasons the necessity for local autonomy in selection, the potential effect in "furthering the art," the effect it will have in discouraging "bad" pictures.

Mrs. Mary Bannerman first represented the Parent-Teachers Association and the Motion Picture Research Council; Mrs. E. G. Nourse, the American Society of University Women; Mrs. Paul Howell, American Home Economics Association; Catharine Lyford, Massachusetts Civic League; Mrs. V. E. Danly, National Board of the YWCA; Mrs. Lazore Scott, National Women's Christian Temperance Union; Mrs. S. Stanton, Protestant Council of Women for Home Missions Board; a representative of the Girl's Friendly Society. Mrs. Bannerman returned to the witness chair as the representative of the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Daughters of America, the National Federation of German Catholics in America and the Catholic Boys Brigade. Mrs. Bannerman told the Senators that her efforts to cooperate with the industry had met with failure.

Dr. Joseph Atanasoff, World theatre, Milwaukee, submitted briefs in federal anti-trust suit complaints that had been filed by him against large distributors. Gabriel L. Hess, counsel for the MPPDA, interrupted to explain to the Senators that the suits had not held up in court. Dr. Atanasoff then admitted that his presence in Washington was to launch a Department of Justice investigation against large companies for alleged conspiracies.

Henry Atkinson, Motion Picture Research Council, read statements in favor of the bill from Arthur Butler Graham, lawyer; A. Lawrence Lowell, and others. Mr. Lowell was quoted as saying that the bill would "prevent a return to the old order" before the Production Code.

Walter Littlefield, independent exhibitor, of Allied States in New England; Henry James Forman, Motion Picture Research Council, and Mrs. Fred Bagley also favored passage.

Mrs. Lyford, civic leader from Massachusetts, declared that "millions of American citizens are demanding such legislation be enacted by the representatives they have elected to Congress."

The National Women's Trade Union League favors passage, according to its representative, Mary Winslow.

Pettijohn Opens Defense

And there the proponents rested, Charles Pettijohn, as MPPDA counsel, taking up the opposition shortly before noon on Friday.

Mr. Pettijohn told the Senators at the outset that his side would present evidence refuting the charges of the opponents, and that the distributors desired to settle the block booking legislative question on the spot either one way or another.

The whole distribution front denied that independent exhibitors are compelled to "accept sexy, crime and horror pictures" in order to get the better features. They asserted most theatre owners preferred the block booking system as assuring them a steady run of pictures, "including subjects of a constantly improving quality."

Answering Walter B. Littlefield's charge that exhibitors in his Allied territory in New England were compelled against their wishes to accept Mae West's "Klondike Annie," in which she was said to have been advertised as "The Siren of the Barbary Coast," Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, Charles Pettijohn, George Schaefer and others retorted that Mae West was in demand by exhibitors, even in New England. They presented evidence to show that when the Legion of Decency campaign was at its height there was not a single exhibitor cancellation of her pictures anywhere in the country.

On the other hand, Mr. Pettijohn testified, "Abraham Lincoln," "Alexander Hamilton" and "Alice in Wonderland" were canceled everywhere.

Hits at "Professional Agitators"

The MPPDA counsel told the Senators that the proponents' witnesses had little or no investment in the industry, and, flaying "professional agitators," charged that the exhibitor representatives speaking for the bill represented no more than two per cent of exhibition.

"Fifty to 60 per cent of all theatre owners do not belong to any exhibitor organization," Mr. Pettijhon declared.

"Nathan Yamins—with his Florida tan—himself has monopolized," Mr. Pettijhon charged, referring to Mr. Yamins' almost complete control of the theatre situation at Fall River, Mass.

"Mr. Myers and Mr. Richey," Mr. Pettijohn said, "sold to exhibitors, some five years ago, the 'block bookingest' contract that has been sold in the history of the business." He referred to Allied's five-year Tiffany franchise.

Mr. Pettijohn explained the reduction in features, reputedly from 800 in 1922 to 500 in 1935, as being attributable to longer features and the abundance of shorts now available. He told the Senators that, if anything, exhibi-

SENATE VIEWS FILM STATISTICS

Both proponents and opponents of the Neely-Pettengill anti-block booking and blind buying bill in Congress, testifying the other day at a Senate sub-committee hearing on the measure, at Washington, paraded before the Senators a mass of statistics showing the economic construction of the industry in its relation to trade practices. Some of the figures follow, as offered by one side or the other, in an attempt to prove a point in the argument over the block-booking practice:

Twenty-six cents of each dollar received from exhibitors for film rentals is spent for distribution; abolishment of block booking would increase distribution costs to from 42 to 45 per cent.

1922: 800 features released annually by 22 large companies; 1935: 500 features released annually by 8 large companies and a few independents.

Production costs in 13 years have quadrupled, from an average cost of $75,000 to $100,000 per picture, to an average of between $375,000 and $400,000.

How distribution costs compare: Motion pictures, 26 per cent; citrus fruits, 500 per cent; beef, from 300 to 500 per cent; coal, 500 per cent.

9,500 is the average total of theatre customers serviced by a large distributor.

PETTIJOHN CITES PREVIOUS BILLS

tors now have more film footage than ever before.

"Distribution costs now represent some 26 per cent of each dollar of a distributor's film rentals; this bill would send distribution costs up to 42 to 45 per cent of the rental gross," Mr. Pettijohn continued, with the warning that exhibitors and eventually the patrons "will be compelled to foot the bill."

Mr. Pettijhon, like his distributor witnesses who succeeded him, returned the blame to exhibitors themselves for voluntarily booking Mae West pictures. "The West films have been brought back to theatres for as many as seven repeat showings,"

Block booking against films exists in England, he said, because England was determined to rebuild its trade and the British motion picture was enlisted as a medium for propaganda.

Mr. Pettijohn asked the Senators to name "any form of art" which gives the lowest customer the same million-dollar production for a rental of $8 within the same year that the biggest customer paid from $6,000 to $8,000, and, in the case of the Music Hall theatre in New York, as high as $25,000 in rentals for first-run exhibition rights for a week.

"The Legion of Decency did a great job," Mr. Pettijohn told the Senators in answer to the charges of Allied and others that standards had not improved since its inception. "The motion picture industry is pleased to cooperate with moral forces. The good work should be permitted to continue."

Citing social service work, the witness said the industry supplies films gratis to 350,000 inmates in 870 institutions, where the picture is the sole entertainment medium.

Mr. Pettijhon's extemporaneous testimony was supplemented by a 32-page brief for the record. The brief traced the attempts to enact a block booking bill since Senator Brookhart tried to pass his law, eight years ago. The Brookhart bill and Senator Neely's bill were both copied from the Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order against Famous Players, which order was not sustained by the United States court of appeals, said the witness. The court, he added, had decided that block booking was a fair and lawful practice.

Mr. Pettijohn described as "rank hypocrisy" the "red herring that has been drawn across the trail of this measure" by the proponents who claim the bill would meet "an allegedly 'moral issue'.

"The severest social evaluation of the movies shows that 95 percent of the industry's product is today of such a character as to earn the approval of religious, social service and other elements."

Mr. Pettijohn, and succeeding witnesses, were especially emphatic in denouncing the clause of the bill which would compel the producer-distributor to provide exhibitors with a synopsis of each feature before release. "This condition," he said, "could not possibly be fulfilled without serious injury to the entertainment and social value of the screen."

Mr. Pettijohn read for the record similar expressions from David Selznick, Jesse Lasky, Harold Lloyd, Ernst Lubitsch, Louis B. Mayer and Winfield Sheehan.

"Can you imagine exhibitors now paying $10 to $50 for pictures being compelled to travel from 100 to as far as 500 miles in order to see and buy pictues one or two at a time?" asked Mr. Pettijohn.

"It has been estimated that distribution costs would mount from 26 per cent to at least 42 per cent and possibly as high as 45 per cent. How can there be any 'public interest' served by increasing distribution costs so that theatres must pay more per picture, necessarily compelling the public to pay from five cents to fifteen cents more per admission to see these pictures.

"Moreover if it is 'blind buying' for the exhibitor to pay $25, $50 or $100 for the rental of a film which will feature stated stars, directors and artists, what is to be said for the producer who invests $100,000 or $1,000,000 in advance to produce a spectacle, the success of which can not be determined even when the picture is completed, but only when it is actually shown?

Some Statistics

"The motion picture industry under existing conditions is called upon to supply some 16,000 theatres in the United States with more than 30,000 miles of film every 24 hours. The film exchanges in 32 distributing centers handle 50,000 to 75,000 complete prints of pictures daily, collecting, inspecting, repairing and redistributing them. Each regular theatre receives from 100 to 800 shipments of pictures annually, with 'misouts' or errors in delivery too negligible to calculate. Thousands of separate contracts for these pictures are concluded and executed with a minimum of expense to all concerned. And finally because of existing methods of distribution, exhibitors of this country are able to obtain 90 per cent of the pictures shown in their theatres at an average daily rental of less than $25 per picture. This is a task of the greatest magnitude well done."

"For 1933-1934, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offered exhibitors a block of 40 pictures. 'Thin Man,' with William Powell and Myrna Loy, topped the sales, having been accepted by 9,911 exhibitors. 'Laughing Boy,' a mediocre picture, finished last with only 4,208 acceptances.

"RKO offered exhibitors a block of 42 pictures. 'Flying Down to Rio,' a musical comedy which certain social groups found objectionable, was the exhibitors' first choice, playing to 11,169 contracts, an unusually high figure. 'Adventure Girl,' a poor box-office picture, closed the list with only 2,666 executed contracts.

"Universal offered a block of 36 pictures. 'Imitation of Life' was played by 9,007 exhibitors; 'Love Captive' by only 3,267.

"Warner Brothers offered exhibitors a block of 28 pictures. 'Here Comes the Navy,' the exhibitors' first choice, played in 9,265 theatres; 'Madame Du Barry,' at the bottom of the list, in 4,475.

"First National offered a block of 26 pictures. 'Flirtation Walk' topped the list with 9,333 completed bookings. 'Side Streets' stood last with 3,534.

"The importance of the box-office in exhibitor choice is shown further in the following figures: For 1933-1934 season, Paramount offered exhibitors a block of 57 pictures. Twentieth Century-Fox offered 51 features. Mae West's 'I'm No Angel,' a picture sharply criticized on social grounds, was the exhibitors' first choice in the Paramount block, receiving 11,558 contracts, while 'David Harum,' with Will Rogers, stood first in the exhibitors' estimation among the Fox pictures with 10,792 completed contracts."

Because the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae was described as the medium accepted by the Legion of Decency for rating pictures, Mrs. John Sullivan, of the Federation, took the occasion to answer the bill's proponents who criticized present moral standards of films. She read a statement issued in Washington by the National Catholic Welfare Conference, declaring the Legion saw "grave danger of political censorship" in anti-block booking measures.

The next witness was Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, who gave an explanation of the difficulties of distribution and the responsibilities of the managements of the large corporations. Typical of the large investments is that in Fox, which has 300 theatres and produces some 54 features annually, averaging $400,000 in cost, for a total production expenditure of $21,600,000 annually. "We pay for our mistakes in production," Mr. Kent told the Senators. "No one deliberately makes bad pictures."

Mr. Kent said that when he took hold of Fox four years ago the company was selling to only 5,000 theatres. Today it has 9,500 customers—"about as many as any company."

Less than five per cent of feature contracts of Paramount were for all product, Mr. Kent declared, speaking as Paramount's former sales manager. Less than 40 per cent are for all of Fox's product, he added.

Mr. Kent demanded that a poll be conducted among exhibitors of the country to determine their attitude on block booking and blind selling. He ventured the opinion that fully 70 to 75 per cent favor the system.

Mr. Kent said that during his sales regime at Paramount the corporation attempted, in 1922, to supplant the block booking system with a "selective service contract," at a time when Paramount was at its peak. As a result, business dropped from $500,000 to $300,000 in weekly domestic film rentals.

He cited "The Valley of the Nude," a nudist colony production, and "Maedchen in Uniform,"

FOUR BILLS AIM AT BLOCK BOOKING

Pending in Congress are four different legislative proposals to abolish block booking, as follows:

Senate, No. 3012, Senator Neely, West Virginia: To prohibit block booking and blind selling.

House of Representatives, No. 142, Representative Celler, New York: To prohibit block booking and discrimination in distribution.

House of Representatives, No. 4757, Representative Culkin, New York: To prohibit block booking and blind selling and to make the Clayton Act applicable to film license agreements and leases.

House of Representatives, No. 8877, Representative Celler, New York: To prohibit block booking and blind selling and discrimination.

SEE HANDICAP TO SMALL EXHIBITOR

both distributed independently, as having received "hundreds" of bookings from exhibitors, and although the major companies turned down distribution offers of both, the public, nevertheless, blamed the films on the majors.

On the other hand, Mr. Kent said, large distributors have met with persistent failure in their attempts to market such quality pictures as "A Kiss for Cinderella," "Cavalcade," "Peter Pan," "Peter Ibbetson."

"Allied's gentlemen do not want to abolish block booking," Mr. Kent told the Senators. "They want to pick what they want with one hand and throw away what is left with the other."

Answering the Allied charge that the alleged monopolistic tendencies of block booking have reduced annual feature product from 800 to 500 releases, Mr. Kent explained that whereas in 1920 features cost between $75,000 and $100,000 to produce, today they require an average investment of from $300,000 to $400,000 each. Furthermore, stars now refuse to appear in as many films as of old.

The Senators were told by Mr. Kent that "only five per cent of exhibition" was represented among the proponents at the meeting.

Club Women Join Fight

Mrs. M. McCoy, representing Mrs. William Sporburg, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, made the point that film standards should be controlled at the source, as at present.

Most of the opposing club women and civic leaders denounced the measure because it is intended to interfere with a problem that is the industry's. They told the Senators that pictures today are acceptable.

George Zerung, of the motion picture division of the YMCA, sent a telegram in opposition.

Mrs. E. M. Barsham, of the Delaware State Federation of Women's Clubs, declared motion pictures should be regulated from the home, adding that from her experience Delaware exhibitors do not have any trouble cancelling objectionable pictures when the public complains.

Telegrams asking the Senators to report favorably on the bill were then read by Senator Davis from the St. Paul Parent-Teachers Association, the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana and from Al Steffes, Allied leader in the northwest. To offset these, the distributors offered telegrams from exhibitors in Mr. Steffes stronghold, in St. Paul and Minnesota, opposing passage.

Mrs. Samuel Elsworth, of Worcester, Mass., said block booking in no way involves the moral issue, and if block booking is abolished, quality pictures at theatres will drop from sight, because, she said, exhibitors will no longer book them.

Mrs. Lawrence Akers, of the Memphis Better Films Council, said that the system had in no way interfered with the activities of her organization in effecting exhibitor cooperation.

Others who advanced opinions of the public against the bill included Florence Fisher Parry, Pittsburgh newspaper writer; Alfred F. Mayhew, assistant superintendent of schools at New Haven; Paul D. Mann, of the National Education Association, and others.

The producer-distributors followed with testimony of Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA; George J. Schaefer, former Paramount general manager and now in charge of sales at United Artists; Robert Cochrane, executive vice-president of Universal; Sidney B. Lust, Washington exhibitor, and M. A. Lightman, circuit operator in Tennessee and former president of the MPTOA.

Mr. Lust told the Senators the bill would help the "big" theatres and hurt the smaller operators. He said exhibitors know well in advance what the nature of a picture is, submitting a copy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD as an example of how reviews of films are carried to the exhibitor long before the product is in general distribution.

Stanley Sumner, an exhibitor of Cambridge, Mass., who said that he bought 100 per cent blocks, testified he never had had any difficulty making changes under such agreements.

A similar situation was detailed by Mr. Lightman.

Universal's Robert H. Cochrane said, "No company ever succeeded in this business at any time selling by any system other than block booking.

"Standardization of entertainment, as required by the bill, is impossible," he added. "Universal, for instance, must plan one year in advance to make variety in entertainment that represents an investment of from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000."

Mr. Cochrane's experience over 20 years, he said, shows that exhibitors as a whole are satisfied with the present system.

Further evidence that theatres do not buy complete blocks and play all of the pictures contracted was offered by Mr. Cochrane, who said that of 7,759 feature deals made by Universal for this season, 6,500 were for partial groups. Eighty-six per cent of the total provided for the elimination of from six to 18 pictures.

Paramount's experience with single picture sales was "uneconomical and impractical," said the former Paramount sales manager.

Mr. Schaefer criticized Allied's Sidney Samuelson for "crying" about the reputed product reduction of from 800 to 500 features annually. "He needs only 156 pictures at his Newton theatre in New Jersey," Mr. Schaefer said.

Paramount's greatest number of cancellations this year have been on "quality" pictures, such as "Peter Ibbetson" and the Byrd film, and whereas "I'm No Angel" played to 2,831 days in the first 400 cities, "Alice in Wonderland" played only 1,435 days in 395 of the first 400 cities, "Cradle Song" got 1,137 days and "His Double Life" only 1,137 days.

Mr. Schaefer estimated that the 400 largest cities of the country, including cities with populations as low as 16,000 and representing half of the country's population, each have an availability of seven new features weekly.

Mr. Schaefer singled out Allied's president, Nathan Yamins, who, the witness testified, led church and social groups in New England to believe that he was working with them to raise the standards of films, voicing condemnation of Mae West, while at the same time he increased his booking time on Mae West pictures for from four to seven days at his Fall River theatres.

Organized exhibitor opposition to the bill pitted against Allied was brought out by Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA president, who claimed a membership of 4,500 "of the leading theatres in the country, located in every state in the union," as follows:

ALLIED THEATRES OF MASSACHUSETTS, INC.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF WESTERN NEW YORK.
ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF THE NORTHWEST.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF RHODE ISLAND.
THEATRE OWNERS ASSOCIATION OF OKLAHOMA.
SOUTHEASTERN THEATRE OWNERS ASSOCIATION.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ASSOCIATED THEATRES OF OHIO.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF EASTERN MISSOURI AND SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF NEBRASKA AND IOWA.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF ARKANSAS, MISSISSIPPI AND TENNESSEE.
INTERMOUNTAIN THEATRES ASSOCIATION.

"In addition," Mr. Kuykendall testified, "all of the circuits of theatres under national management and nearly all of the leading circuits of theatres under local or independent management are members of this national association."

The MPTOA proposes, Mr. Kuykendall said, "to continue our determined efforts to bring about a minimum and unconditional rejection privilege in all exhibition contracts of at least 20 per cent. We firmly believe that this is the only practical solution of the problem."

On hand in support of the opponents to the bill, besides the witnesses, were: Ed Fay, theatre owner, Providence; Edward G. Levy, general counsel of the MPTOA, Connecticut; David Palfreyman, Tony Muto, Tom Petty, of the MPPDA; Oscar Lam, exhibitor, Rome, Ga.; Frank Jack, Warner Theatres; A. Julian Brylawski, exhibitor, Washington; Jack Connolly, Pathe News; P. A. Powers, producer, New York; Thomas Goldberg, exhibitor, Baltimore; Bob Mochrie, Warners' distribution department, New York; Samuel Moross, former New York exhibitor; Moe Cohen, exhibitor, Baltimore; Edmund Grainger, Feiber and Shea Circuit; William Kupper, Twentieth Century-Fox, New York; William Sussman, Twentieth Century-Fox, New York; William Rodgers, MGM, New York; Joseph Unger, Paramount, New York; George Aarons and William Hissner, MPTO of Eastern Pennsylnia; Stanley Sumner and Joseph Brennan, exhibitors, Boston.

Sitting as neutral observers were William P. Farnsworth, in charge of the theatrical division of the Works Progress Administration, and Nathan D. Golden, of the motion picture section of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

PUBLIC SHOWS BETTER TASTE, SAYS GOLDWYN

"I think," said Samuel Goldwyn in New York on the eve of his departure Wednesday night for Europe, "that one can say without fear of exaggerating that any but the most special plays and books are now practicable screen material.

"One thing that gives me a peculiarly acute form of pain is the highbrow attitude about the lack of taste in the great picture audience."

40 Films in Work

With but three new pictures starting in the week and one studio launching two of them as six were finished, production schedules dropped off slightly, although there are still approximately forty pictures in work on stages and location. Of the newly started features, two are potentially promising of big picture classification. Three of the completed group loom as important attractions.

"Mary of Scotland" Starts

At Radio the long deferred "Mary of Scotland" went before the cameras. Katharine Hepburn and Fredric March will be seen in the principal roles. The supporting cast includes David Torrence, Alan Mobraw, Frieda Innescourt, Douglas Walton, Brandon Hurst, Donald Crisp, Molly Lamont and Robert Barrat. John Ford is directing. The second picture is "Special Investigator," which will present Richard Dix, Margaret Callahan, Brik Rhodes, Harry Janes, Frank M. Thomas, Ray Mayer, Owen Davis, Jr.. and Sheila Terry. Louis King is the director.

Twentieth Century-Fox began work on "Poor Little Rich Girl." Shirley Temple is starred. Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Michael Whelan, Jack Haley and Charles Colman are in the supporting cast. Irving Cummings is directing.

The six completed pictures are credited to six companies. Probably the most important of the group is Warner's "Green Pastures." The picturization of Marc Connelly's stage play, with Mr. Connelly directing, will present Rex Ingram, Oscar Polk, Slim Thompson, John Alexander, George Reed, John Larkin, Frank Wilson, Edward Anderson, Abraham Greeves, Myrtle Anderson, Ernest Whitman, Bertha Wright, 28 other principal characters and the Hall Johnson Choir.

First Pickford-Lasky Made

Because it is the first production of the newly organized Pickford-Lasky company, "One Rainy Afternoon" assumes a significant aspect. Directed by Rowland V. Lee, the cast lists Francis Lederer, Ida Lupino, Roland Young, Joseph Cawthorn, Hugh Herbert, Erik Rhodes, Countess Liev deMaigret, Georgia Caine, Eily Malyon, Richard Carle, Ariane Borg, Angie Norton, Lucille Ward, Emily Cabanne, Donald Meek, Paul Irving and Ferdinand Munier. Release will be through United Artists.

Another newly organized company, B. F. Zeidman Productions, also checked in its initial effort. Titled "Angels in White," a story of the part doctors and nurses played in making the Panama Canal zone an habitable area, it features Ian Keith and Tala Birell supported by Rollo Lloyd, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Suzane Kaaren, Lionel Pape, Ferdinand Munier, Taru Schmada, Warner Richmond, Harry Allen, Don Barclay, Nigel de Brulier and Snub Pollard. Karl Brown directed.

At Columbia the completed picture is "Devil's Squadron," with Richard Dix, Karen Morley, Shirley Ross, Lloyd Nolan, Preston Hall, Gene Morgan, Henry Mollison, William Stelling, Cora Sue Collins and Pat West. Erle Kenton directed.

Paramount's contribution is "The Moon's Our Home," a Walter Wanger production. It will present Henry Fonda, Margaret Sullavan, Charles Butterworth, John Spacey, Henrietta Crossman, Jack Daily and Walter Brennan. William A. Seiter directed.

Last of the finished pictures is "The Country Beyond," 20th Century-Fox. A James Oliver Curwood story of the North Country, it will present Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly, Robert Kent, Allan Hale, Alan Dinehart.

New Gallery

Attracting additional interest at the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art is a new gallery called the Science of Picture Making, adjoining the one given over to motion picture relics. In the new gallery are shown the objective materials, as a cross section of film production in its many departments.

One exhibit, a characteristic prop department, offers props and items from many widely known pictures such as "Ben-Hur," "The Ten Commandments," "Dracula" and "All Quiet on the Western Front." In another display is depicted the designing of a set from the manuscript to the completed miniature model used by the construction department.

Also shown is the procedure of coloring pictures, designing of costumes, makeup, the function and electrical equipment and other factors of production.

Charles Chaplin, Walt Disney and Cecil B. DeMille are among the producers who have made props from big pictures available to the Museum. For example, Mr. Chaplin provided the cup he drank from in "City Lights," the canvas boot he used in "Gold Rush," and the hoop from "The Circus."

Babies Bow

Not even the diet of the Dionne quintuplets could make "The Country Doctor" a formula picture, in the judgment of the audience, hand-picked though it was, that packed the Carthay Circle theatre Wednesday night at the premiere of the Twentieth Century-Fox, judging by the applauding, by the laughter in the birth sequence and by the reception given the scenes between Jean Hersholt as the doctor and the babies.

Besides the "Quints" and Hersholt, players who won special words from the newspaper critics included Dorothy Peterson, in the other principal role, that of the nurse, John Qualen as the father, Slim Summerville, Robert Barrat, Michael Whalen, June Lang, Montague Love and Frank Reichter. Henry King directed.

(See "Showman's Review" next week.)

Six Years

Six years has been the average for several independent companies to assume the stature of large concerns. First National was about six years in the growing. In Columbia, when Frank Capra, Jack Holt and Ralph Graves cooperated on "Submarine," "Flight" and other ambitious films, the company grew into the wider bracket, after about six years.

Monogram built itself slowly into the place vacated by Columbia, the approach to the large stage coming with the amalgamation with Nat Levine's Mascot, and emergence of the new Republic studios and exchanges.

Eastbound

Hollywood production and theatre ranks were emptied considerably by eastward treks the last several days. Joseph Bernhard, manager of the Warner circuit throughout the country, left for New York having completed huddles with Jack Warner and Hal Wallis and a survey of Pacific Coast houses. . . . George Browne, IATSE president, is en route to Manhattan via the Panama Canal for a brief vacation before conferring with Dan Tracy of the Electrical Workers on jurisdiction of soundmen in the studios. Settlement will be made in New York. . . . Charles W. Bunn, general sales manager for the local Erpi office, checked out on important business in Chicago and New York. . . . Boris Morros, Paramount production and music executive, hurried east on company business. . . . Percy Kent, brother of Sidney R. Kent, and Milton Hoffeld, both of Fox West Coast, have been transferred to National Theatres and will work out of New York in similar capacities. They will leave for New York within the next two weeks. . . . FWC distribution manager meetings are scheduled to run for ten days. . . . Hollywood extras henceforth will get paid one-fourth of their daily wage for costume fittings lasting over one hour and a half, it was decided at a meeting of studio managers with Pat Casey. At the same meeting a statement was read clarifying the status of first cameramen and their relation to the IATSE closed shop policy. According to the statement, first cameramen only comprise those who actually operate a camera 25 per cent of their total working time in the studios. Process cameramen come under IATSE jurisdiction. . . . Mary Pickford also joined the host going to New York. The object of her trip was to arrange for the release of the Pickford-Lasky film, "One Rainy Afternoon." . . . Paramount and George Raft have patched up their difficulties and Raft is back on salary scheduled for the lead in "The Duchess." . . . Warner has 52 feature productions scheduled for the remainder of the year, Jack Warner said at a meeting of FWC division managers at the Burbank studios. Spyros Skouras headed the contingent on their visit. . . . Jake Wilk and Max Reinhardt are in town for product conferences with Warner chiefs, also Gradwell Sears and Andy Smith.

THREE BRITISH UNITS PRESS PLANS FOR BIG ATTACK ON U.S. MARKET

Silverstone's Activities Bring Assurance to United Artists That Britain Will Provide 60 Per Cent of Its Output

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Perhaps the most significant phase of current announcements of new production plans in England is the extent to which they emphasize the increasing importance of three organizations and three individuals in that department of the British industry which is seriously attacking the American market.

Maurice Silverstone of United Artists has lined up one new unit after another until UA is assured of British product, for world release, approximating 60 per cent of its output.

Max Schach of Capitol Film Productions, less than a year ago an independent with a joint production contract with British International Pictures, now controls three production units, and has a British release for part of his product through C. M. Woolf's General Film Distributors, an American release through G-B for some of these films, and a world release, including America, through United Artists for another part of his product.

Alexander Korda of London Films, with a new studio in erection at Denham, is in the happy position that a very big proportion of his space is let, mostly on long term contracts, to concerns committed to large scale production.

This week's news stories in the production field were that United Artists had contracted with Arnold Pressburger of British Cine-Alliance for two super-features a year, to be made at Denham; that Schach had signed a three years' contract for three Denham stages at a rent declared to total $1,150,000; and that Buckingham Film Productions, Ltd., had been formed to produce at Denham the three supers which Schach has contracted to make for C. M. Woolf, over and above his regular Capitol releases. Also issued was the news that Gaumont-British would release in America seven Capitol productions, handled in England by General, of this and next year's program.

Schach's Activities

Combining these news items with others already published one gets the following summary of Schach activities at the moment:

Capitol Film Productions, Ltd.: British release through GFD; American, on selected pictures, through G-B.

Trafalgar Film Productions, Ltd.: Three "supers" for world release by UA, "Pagliacci" the first.

Buckingham Film Production, Ltd.: Three "supers" for GFD.

Move to Denham

Capitol was producing at B & D's studio until the Elstree fire, when alternative space was obtained at Worton Hall, recently vacated by London Films and now owned by Criterion Film Productions, Ltd., the Fairbanks-Hellman company which is another part of UA's formidable British lineup. Schach's new super productions will be located entirely at Denham.

The Pressburger productions for UA will also use Denham space. Mr. Pressburger is wellknown through Continental activities yielding such useful pictures in British versions, as "Tell Me Tonight," "My Heart Is Calling" and "My Song for You." Gaumont-British handled his principal productions in this market. It is stated he will spend $1,250,000 on his UA releases.

Emphasizing at once the scale of New British production plans and the speed with which they are being developed is the statement that London Film Productions already is planning an extension of the Denham studio, which in its original plan was the biggest in England.

Also under construction in England right now are big scale studios (five floors or more) at Iver (Pinewood Studios, Ltd., associated with British National Films, Ltd.) and Elstree (the Amalgamated studio for which Charles H. Bell is buying equipment in U. S.), while plans for construction, serious and otherwise, are announced almost daily. Extension of existing plants is almost universal.

Fire Aids New Plans

The destruction by fire of the B & D studio and three BIP floors will have an obvious effect. Ultimately the reconstruction of the lost floors in a modernized and probably extended form will add to the total floor space available in Britain but immediately the fire has undoubtedly assisted the formation and capitalization of new plans. It is a fact that, rapid as studio construction has been, it is still some way behind demand. The date at which the converse will be true is not a point discussed in the prevailing atmosphere of optimism; it will arrive, of course, and the answer is likely to be found in the American market.

Francis L. Harley formally took over the managing directorship of Twentieth Century-Fox this week. W. J. Hutchinson, now foreign manager, introduced his successor to the press on Monday, and said his own immediate plans called for a general Continental trip, on his return from which he will meet Sidney R. Kent in London and travel back to New York with him.

R. Sutton Dawes, general manager, becomes a director of the company and Ernest Gartside has been appointed managing director of Fox-British Pictures, Ltd., which, incidentally, is purchasing outright the studio at Wembley. A new stage has been added.

FLORIDA LACKS STAGE, HARTWIG DISCOVERS

Finding the going too hazardous, what with competition of various sorts, especially motion pictures, Walter Hartwig, who took a Broadway stage troupe to Miami and established the Miami Playhouse, ended a scheduled ten weeks' season after only three shows.

"As manager of the only legitimate troupe in Florida, I can offer several reasons why Florida has no legitimate theatre—hasn't much legitimate anything but climate," he reported.

Mr. Hartwig, who also operates a summer theatre at Oguinquit, Maine, found that his competition in the southern resort consisted of dog races, horse races, professional bridge games, "a round dozen of swanky night clubs and Minsky's burlesque—and the weather, which is the most popular entertainment feature of all."

"So far as the legitimate theatre is concerned, the natives do not even know what the term means," Mr. Hartwig lamented. "Fed entirely on pictures at from 25 to 50 cents a session they cannot understand why any more than that should be spent for any form of entertainment."

G-B To Release Seven Capitol Films in America; Korda's Studio Space Is Let to Large Scale Producers

Overbuilding Plea Fails

The first objection in the London area to a new cinema on the ground of "redundancy" was made this week before the London County Council Licensing Committee. It failed, Associated British Cinemas being granted a license for the Ritz, Stoke Newington.

Quota Act Defaults

In the House of Commons the President of the Board of Trade gave figures of default under the Quota provisions of the Films Act during three years. They totaled 448 in the case of exhibitors and 17 in the case of distributing companies. Fines were imposed in 14 cases of exhibitor default and one of distributor default.

March of Time, British

"March of Time" has appointed a British staff, with John Grierson, the "documentary" director of the Post Office Film Unit, as an editorial associate and adviser. James Hodgson will be chief cameraman and Norah Alexander will do research work. Beginning with the issue of March 1st, "The March of Time" regularly will contain British items. The French edition has been postponed.

Sons O' Guns

(Warner)

Musical Comedy - Romance

This looks like the most pretentious production which Joe E. Brown ever has had in which to exercise his popular fun making talents. It's a musical comedy of the A. E. F. in the war days in which there's only a little bit of melodramatic blood and thunder while all the rest is gayety, mirth, melody and comedy. Adapted from the stage play which enjoyed a long run in New York and was popularly received in many other metropolitan centers, the screen play is by Jerry Wald and Julius Epstein. Music and lyrics are by Harry Warren and Al Dubin. Chorus song and dance numbers are directed by Bobby Connolly, who recently completed direction of "The Singing Kid." Direction is by Lloyd Bacon, who, in addition to handling Brown in several previous pictures including "Fireman, Save My Child," "You Said a Mouthful" and "Six Day Bike Rider," also made the recent "The Irish in Us" and "Frisco Kid.'

The basic story is about a Broadway actor who didn't want to go to war. Finally shamed into it, he finds himself in the odd position of having his former valet as top sergeant. Falling in love with a French miss, he becomes mixed up in a situation that makes it appear as though he is working with spies. Sentenced to be shot, he escapes to clean up a big percentage of the German army, and instead of being executed he must submit to the humiliation of being kissed by a French general, who decorates him, before he can enjoy happiness with his French girl after the Armistice.

With Joan Blondell in the leading support role the cast includes many of the studio's top line names such as Beverly Roberts, Joseph King, Winifred Shaw, featured in "The Singing Kid," and Robert Barrat. Eric Blore will be seen in the role of Brown's valet who became top sergeant. Others who will be seen are Craig Reynolds, David Worth, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Frank Mitchell, Michael Mark, Bert Roach and Mischa Auer.

O'Malley of the Mounted

Drama

Only a reading of the title is necessary to establish this as a story of the Northwest Mounted Police and as such a thrill action drama. In this case, with the anticipated love interest contrast, fulfilling all expected functions, it's the story of a Mountie who assumes the role of the desperado to break up an international crime ring. At the risk of great personal danger to himself, he worms his way into the confidences of the gang, lures them into a trap to bring about their capture, saves an innocently accused boy from prosecution and wins his sister for a wife.

Filmed entirely out of doors, with only a comparatively few interiors, the picture is based on a story by William S. Hart, the old cowboy star, which in itself is a matter of no little exploitation significance. The screen play is by Dan Jarrett and Frank Howard Clark. David Howard, who has directed four recent George O'Brien pictures, is again at the helm.

With George O'Brien starred in the title role, the principal supporting characters are Stanley Fields, the outlaw chief, James Bush, a member of the mob and the one who, though accused of murder, is innocent of that crime as well as participation in any other banditry. The girl in the case is Irene Ware, recently seen with O'Brien in "Whispering Smith Speaks." Others who will appear include Victor Potel, Dick Cramer, Reginald Barlow, Tom London, Charles King, Olin Francis and Crauford Kent.

Florida Special

(Paramount)

Comedy Mystery

With the major locale a deluxe train bound from New York to Florida, the idea about which the story for this picture revolves concerns what happens to a trainload of persons when a penurious old man takes a fortune in jewels aboard, somewhere between Philadelphia and Washington the gems are stolen, and the train is sealed until the crime is solved. Upon such a premise the possibilities of commercially worthy entertainment running the full range of comedy, mystery, romance, drama, adventure, thrill, surprise and novelty are quickly evident.

The story is by Clarence Budington Kelland, with screen play by David Boehm, Margurite Roberts and Laura and S. J. Perelman. Direction is by Ralph Murphy.

Aboard the train are Jack Oakie, currently in "King of Burlesque," in the role a nosey reporter; Claude Gillingwater as the millionaire; Kent Taylor in love with Gillingwater's niece, Frances Drake, and flirtatiously inclined towards the train hostess, Sally Eilers. In characteristic roles will be seen Dewey Robinson, Clyde Dillson, Dwight Frye, Gary Owen, Mack Grey, Fred Welch, Sidney Blackmer, Matthew Betz, Harry Bradley and Ben Taggart. Also Sam Hearn, of radio fame, will make his screen debut in a comedy specialty feature.

Using an idea which the producers acknowledge is not fundamenally new, they point to the fact that it has demonstrated its substance as potential entertainment.

Let's Sing Again

(Principal)

Drama and Music

This picture will introduce Bobby Breen, child singing sensation, for whom the producer anticipates a brilliant future. That seems to be already fairly well started, as the youngster will be heard regularly on the Eddie Cantor weekly radio broadcast programs. In essence the story, which is an original screen play by Don Swift and Dan Jarrett, is a drama, tinged with comedy and encompassing quite a bit of action. It tells of a boy spirited away from his father in Italy and brought to America. Fleeing an orphan asylum, he becomes associated with a broken-down carnival show tenor who cares for him and trains his voice. About to be adopted by an acrobatic performer as part of his act, the child is brought to the attention of a famous prima donna who had been trained by the old tenor. His father, who has searched long for him and who is also a great operatic singer, is singing a lullaby in the diva's home where the child and his old friend are sheltered. As the youngster picks up the refrain, he is united with his dad.

With operatic music given prominence in the narration of the story, the theme song, "Let's Sing Again," is by Gus Kahn and Jimmy McHugh and the lullaby number is by Hugo Riesenfeld.

George Huston, seen in "The Melody Lingers On," has the role of Bobby Breen's father. Henry Armetta will appear as the old tenor who takes the child under his wing and Vivienne Osborne as the prima donna in whose home father and son are reunited. Richard Carle is presented as the owner of the traveling tent show and Grant Withers as the trapeze swinging acrobat who would steal the child from Armetta to become part of his act. The role of the child's mother is played by Ann Doran, and Lucien Littlefield is seen as the superintendent of the orphanage. Minor parts will be handled by Inez Courtney and Jerry Mandy, with an assortment of vaudeville performances adding color to the carnival sequences.

The Robin Hood of El Dorado

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Historical Western Drama

This production is the biography of Joaquin Murietta, factual bandit but now regarded as one of California's most romantic semi-legendary heroes. Based on a novel by Walter Noble Burns, the screen play is by William Wellman, Joseph Calleia, who in addition to his acting accomplishments is noted as a play doctor, and Melvin Levy. Wellman is also the director.

Filmed in the beautiful Sonora county country, scene of Murietta's exploits, it is the story of a man who, when his farm is ravaged and his wife ravished and slain, embarks upon a career of revenge. Sworn enemy of all gringoes except two, further wronged with his friends at the hands of American bad men, now rulers of the country in place of the defeated Mexicans, Murietta follows a bloody trail that made him hated and feared by the Americans, but loved by the old land owners. Combining with a gang of American desperadoes, he is joined by the daughter of an old friend with whom he falls in love. Heading a party which robs a stage coach, he warns his men to spare a girl passenger, fiancee of one of his old American friends. When she is wounded her lover takes up Murietta's trail, believing him treacherous. Trapped by a posse, he dies on the grave of his new love who has been killed during the running fight.

Warner Baxter, the star of "Prisoner of Shark Island," is again in the type of role in which he proved so adept in "Cisco Kid." Margo is his first wife and Ann Loring, a newcomer, is the senorita for whom he fights. Bruce Cabot and Eric Linden are his two American friends and Cabot is the one who brings about his death to avenge his band's attack on Linden's girl, Kay Hughes. J. Carrol Naish will be seen as the renegade bad man. Other players presented include Soledad Jiminez, Edgar Kennedy, Harvey Stephens, Ralph Remley, George Regas, Francis McDonald, Paul Hurst and Harry Woods.

TELEVISION DEVELOPS ON 16 FRONTS; AT&T WILL RESUME EXPERIMENTS

Government Reverses Itself and Promises Full Protection of Patent Rights; Farnsworth Opening Philadelphia Station

The motion picture business, with eye and ear to the latest developments of television, noted this week the following efforts in the laboratory and in the commercial zone:

The Government reversed itself by assuring the American Telephone and Telegraph Company full protection of patent rights and inventive secrets, enabling the Telephone company to resume experimentation, including the installation of a coaxial cable between New York and Philadelphia. Construction must start by July 1, and must be made available to other companies.

Farnsworth Television, Inc., a strong factor in the new field, said it soon will have a regulation television station in operation in Philadelphia for experiment.

The New York Sun concluded that television is "so close to realization that surprising developments are certain to take place soon."

The first television clause protecting exhibitors agains televising theatrical releases in competition is contained in a new standard contract between distributors and owners in England.

Only standardization of television equipment is needed to launch the project commercially, reported the Federal Trade Commission.

Television was used for the first time in Moscow.

RCA denied it was ready to market an inexpensive home televisor.

One of the first television sets to be installed in a motion picture theatre was ordered for a new Indiana house.

W. H. Peck, television scientist, announced two new television stations.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers will make television a main topic of open discusion at its spring convention.

Baird Television, stronghold of television in England, increased its capital from $4,375,000 to $5,437,500 in an expansion program.

Definite threat to theatre business was seen in England's reported decision to broadcast theatrical television programs starting June 1.

The author's attitude toward television was expressed by Booth Tarkington, who predicted television will mark a final decline of radio's popularity.

Despite these developments there still was as much of a mystery as ever to the how and when and where of television effect on the motion picture at the theatre box office. Too, the consensus appeared to be that general business conditions will govern widespread commercial adaptation of the new air medium.

Affected immediately by the Government's granting of full protection to American Telephone for patent rights and inventive secrets is the proposed coaxial cable between New York and Philadelphia for television experimentation and multiplex telephony.

It was the Federal Communications Commission that decided to modify the restrictions imposed upon the coaxial installation, which A T & T has been holding up because it believed the effect of the restrictions would be to force it to make public inventive secrets and possibly lose valuable patent rights. Principally involved was A T & T's objection to the Commission's original order that the projected television line be made available to other experimenters. Thus the new grant reverses the previous stand of the FCC.

Farnsworth Denies Film Tieup

Philo T. Farnsworth, vice-president of Farnsworth Television, Inc., of Philadelphia and San Francisco, and prospectively important as a commercial television merchandiser, has taken exception to reports variously published about a reputed Hearst-Warner-Farnsworth arrangement to launch television within a year. "Farnsworth Television has no affiliations whatever with the Hearst interests nor with Warner Brothers," Mr. Farnsworth said.

He did say, however, that "our experiments on radio transmission problems of television have progressed very satisfactorily, and we expect to have an experimental television station in operation in Philadelphia in the very near future."

Television research in this country is being carried on in this country principally at the Farnsworth Philadelphia laboratories and at RCA,

Differences of Methods Noted

In carrying out the experimental phases of television, the New York Sun reported that the methods to be followed by Farnsworth and RCA differ widely.

Mr. Farnsworth was quoted as guessing that complete television receivers will be built by amateurs in 1936 at a cost less than $100. This tremendous reduction from the original estimates of $250 to $500 is due, he is said to have explained to the news press, to recent discoveries in tube circuits which eliminate several tubes and associated apparatus.

On the other hand, RCA, apparently convinced that an era of amateur construction must be avoided in deference to its licensees, will attempt to carry on field tests of its own until the reception of images is ready for commercialization through established radio manufacturers.

For the first time since 1928, when a random television experiment attracted the interest of the public, the addition of vision to sound is so close to realization that surprising developments are certain to take place soon, according to investigations by the New York Sun. With scientists in most countries following the same lines of development and with most laboratories cooperating in the exchange of data it is generally felt that the introduction of television on an experimental scale is certain early this year, the Sun observed.

Television Clause in Contract

The new standard exhibition contract in England has been changed to include a television clause, as follows: "The renter (distributor), if it has the television rights in the film, shall not authorize the film being televised to the general public until three months after the expiration of the hire (rental) period mentioned in the (playing) schedule."

Thus England is the first branch of the motion picture to set up protection of exhibitors against television competition.

Government Studies Television

Television is a success in the laboratory and needs only the solution of "commercial problems," the Federal Communications Commission at Washington reported. Television is as highly developed in American laboratories as it is in Great Britain and Germany, where television has received considerable publicity, the Commission added.

Russia Sees Television

For the first time in Russia, television was used the other day to show scenes from the life of Nicolai Lenin, in conjunction with the 12th anniversary of his death.

RCA Speaks on Television

Following published reports that RCA was preparing to market inexpensive television sets for the home, R. R. Beal, acting chairman of the corporation's television research committee, struck a pessimistic note on the future of the development.

"Television has a long way to go before it will be ready for general home service, and any report that RCA is about to market television receivers is absolutely without foundation," declared Mr. Beal.

Television in Midwest Theatre

Interests headed by Nate Burnstein, at Michigan City, Ind., are reported ready to start construction, next month, of a theatre which will embrace installation of television projection.

Two television stations, one in New York, the other in Baltimore, will be set up by William Hoyt Peck, television scientist.

Television will be a main topic on the convention floor at the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, April 27th to 30th, at Chicago's Edgewater Beach hotel.

CHAPLIN TO END HIS TRAMP ROLE

Charles Chaplin told reporters in San Francisco last week that he intended to abondon the tramp roles which established his fame internationally. "I shall probably veer away from my tramp role some day," the comedian said, "I just can't get around to making him talk. He's a vestige of the silent days."

Mr. Chaplin said he planned to produce at least two features a year in the future.

RKO ON PROFIT BASIS FIRST TIME IN FIVE YEARS, EARNING $665,297 NET

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Indicates Expected Profit of $700,000 for Year; This Is First Dividend Declared Since 1931

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is operating at a profit for the first time in five years, trustees in the reorganization of the parent RKO film and theatre enterprises reporting this week a net profit of $665,297 for 1935, an increase of available cash from $4,696,904 to $5,287,893, an increase in inventories by $2,000,000 and the reduction of fixed indebtedness by $2,362,472.

Too, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation indicated an expected profit of $700,000 for 1935, and at the same time its directors authorized a dividend of $1.75 on the 7 per cent preferred stock, reducing accumulations on the issue to $29.75 as of April 1. This is the first dividend disbursement since Oct. 1, 1931, at which time the stock was on a regular $1.75 quarterly basis.

RKO's $665,297 net profit in 1935 compared with a net loss of $310,574 in 1934, and allows for deduction of all charges, including interest on the second indebtedness of RKO and provision for estimated federal income taxes, although it is subject to an audit now being made by Price Waterhouse and Company. The company's consolidated loss for 1932 was $10,695,503; for 1933 it was $4,384,064, and for 1934 a net loss of $310,574 was incurred.

No New Reorganization Plan

The trustee, Irving Trust Company, New York, informed the federal court that conferences had been conducted with creditors and officers of RKO interested in the reorganization of the corporation. At these meetings the trustee said they supplied information on the status of the funded debt and other pertinent data. However, up to the present no plan of reorganization had been offered, the trustee reported.

In the recommendation of new policies adopted with reference to the business of the atre operating subsidiaries, the trustee said 1935 showed an unaudited profit of $69,348, whereas in the two preceding years there had been considerable losses.

It was estimated that results for 1935 would indicate a further improvement in ordinary operations of Stadium Theatres Corporation to the extent of $125,000. This subsidiary holds as pledges the capital stocks of all affiliates of Orpheum Circuit, Inc.

Consolidated income for 1935 amounted to $44,879,837, of which $42,708,193 was from film rentals and admissions. Additional income from dividends received on investments, interest earned and other sources amounted to $529,315. Operating expenses aggregated $39,807,263, of which film sales and service costs of $17,355,582 comprised the largest single charge. Artists' salaries amounted to $1,253,418; other salaries and wages totaled $4,513,748; film service and production expenses were $5,077,996; film selling and general expenses, $3,968,680, and other operating and general expenses, $7,637,835. Other charges aggregating $4,619,430 are listed, including interest and discount of $2,199,895, and depreciation of capital assets and amortization of leaseholds, amounting to $1,470,864.

VIGILANCE URGED TO STEM TAX TIDE

With a number of states pondering or proposing taxation measures, direct or indirect, and with Congress again sniping at the industry, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, this week urged exhibitors—especially the "small exhibitors"—to exercise minute-man vigilance.

"The small exhibitor, the small town showman, and the community better films groups are the most potent influence in combatting legislation inimical to the best interests of the industry, and they deserve much credit," he commented.

In addition, the trustee's individual account for the period from July 1, 1934, to December 31, 1935, shows receipts of $509,167 and disbursements of $422,858. The report notes that interest on indebtedness was paid in the amount of $2,259,055.

The earnings of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and its film producing and distributing subsidiaries, had an indicated net profit after all charges, of $777,425, as compared with a net profit of $570,378 the preceding year. Theatre operating subsidiaries, exclusive of Orpheum Circuit, had an indicated profit of $69,348 in 1935, as compared with a loss of $741,718 the preceding year. The report notes that theatre admissions last year increased $1,124,844 over 1934, while operating expenses increased only $588,019. An improvement in ordinary operations of Orpheum Circuit of approximately $125,000 was shown last year over 1934, the report states.

RKO Pathe Pictures, Inc., and subsidiaries showed an unaudited net loss of $187,937, as compared with a loss of $270,477 in 1934. Pathe News, Inc., has an indicated profit of $3,921 for the year, against a net loss in 1934 of $48,646.

The trustee's report notes that the $55,104,721 in claims filed against RKO in its reorganization proceedings have been reduced to approximately $33,000,000, with further substantial reductions still probable. Of the remaining claims, the secured debt amounting to $13,768,500, and the Rockefeller Center claim of more than $9,000,000 account for the largest portion of the claims.

An indicated profit of more than $700,000, before taxes and deductions for non-recurring expenses, is anticipated for Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corp. for 1935, directors of the company were informed this week at a regular meeting. A net profit of approximately $500,000, after all charges, is predicted, subject to an audit now under way.

The earnings report compares with a loss of $176,000 for KAO in 1934, and a loss of $650,000 in 1933.

David Sarnoff, RCA head and a member of the K-A-O board, commended Herbert B. Swope, chairman, and the K-A-O management on the improvement in operating results at the meeting.

The KAO managers' bonus, inaugurated a year ago by Mr. Swope shortly after he became chairman of the board, was extended for another year. The annual meeting of KAO stockholders will be held early in April.

The scheduled hearing in New York this week of the RKO trustee's exception to the allowance of the Rockefeller Center claim against RKO at $9,100,000 was postponed again, this time to March 10, before Federal Judge William Bondy.

The claim is based on RKO's liability on its defaulted leases for the Radio City theatres and office space, the bulk of the claim being for the construction costs of the theatres. Special Master Thomas D. Thacher recommended that the claim be allowed at $9,100,000, after hearings held a year ago. Irving Trust Company, RKO trustee, opposed Thacher's report and has prepared exceptions to present to the Federal court. Meanwhile, however, negotiations for a compromise or settlement of the claim are being continued between Rockefeller Center on the one hand, and RCA, Atlas Corp. and Lehman Bros., on the other. The last named represent RKO through their controlling interest in the company.

Questioning of RCA, Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers representatives in connection with the RKO-Radio receivership and reorganization was scheduled to be begun in New York this week by attorneys for the Sabath Congressional committee on real estate bond reorganizations, with hearings in Washington beginning a week or ten days later.

Federal Judge William Bondy has set March 16 as date for a hearing on applications for interim allowances aggregating $150,000 filed in New York district court by the trustee and its counsel. Irving Trust company asks $65,000. Donovan, Newton, Leisure and Lombard, attorneys, ask $85,000. Judge Bondy also signed an order granting an independent stockholders' committee leave to intervene in RKO-Radio reorganization proceedings.

RKO'S Available Cash Has Increased to $5,287,893 and Inventories Grow $2,000,000; Debt Reduced $2,362,472

Declare Columbia Dividend

William A. Schneider, treasurer of Columbia Pictures Corporation, has announced action taken by the board of directors at its meeting February 26th declaring a quarterly dividend of $.25 on the common stock of the company payable April 1st to common stock holders and voting trust certificate holders as of record at the close of business March 18, 1936.

RCA Declares Dividend

The Radio Corporation of America has declared its regular quarterly dividend on the "A" preferred stock. The dividend amounts to 87½ cents a share, payable April 1 to stockholders of record March 11.

Thieves Get $12,500 in Boston

Weekend receipts of the RKO Boston, quoted as $12,500, were stolen by bandits who escaped while the theatre was crowded with 3,000 patrons. Police protection in the district has been increased.

JAPANESE EXHIBITORS TAKE TO BLOCK SALES

Dr. Arnold Fanck Launching Production with Aid of Germany and Tokyo Leaders

by CHIKUSHI TANI

Tokyo Correspondent

Exhibitors in Japan are taking more and more to block booking for the threefold reason of the lower rental prices thus available, the exceptionally low admission prices current, and because of the noticeably increased demand for foreign product. Theatres of Tokyo are concentrating upon foreign-made productions because of slow production and distribution of domestic pictures.

Now, distributors of foreign pictures are offering them at unbelievably low prices, which sometimes gives the impression of dumping. Into this situation has come the block booking offer of the distributor, with the exhibitor lending more than a willing ear.

MGM took the initiative when it concluded block booking arrangements with local theatres in the Kansai (Osaka, Kyoto, Kobe and neighboring districts), and now similar arrangements have been undertaken by almost every foreign distributing organization, except Warner-First National and the Towa Shoji Company.

Move to Improve Admissions

The beginnings of activity of the new Japan Association of the Motion Picture may soon reflect themselves in the doing of something about the low admission prices. At some Tokyo theatres tickets are as low as 10 and even five sen (8½ to 4 cents), in inverse proportion to the cost of production of high standard sound pictures and their general popularity.

At the same time the new Association has required a shortening of programs, as previously recorded in these columns, and compulsory exhibition of so-called cultural pictures. Private companies have been working in the same directions, and have protested particularly against stage attractions as drawing attention and interest away from motion picture theatres, with consequent lowering of prices to salvage patronage. Director Kido of the Shochiku Company is one of the enthusiasts for the raising of admission price minima as well as for complete abolition of stage attractions in motion picture theatres.

Arnold Fanck's Visit

The visit to Japan of Dr. Arnold Fanck, German poet of the mountains (who collaborated on Universal's "SOS Iceberg"), and his party including Richard Angst and Walter Rilm, noted skier, is a big topic of interest in Tokyo. They are to stay in Japan for half a year. The visit was arranged by N. Kawakita, head of Towa Shoji, importer of European pictures.

The aim of expanding exportation of Japanese product, which is behind the invitation to Dr. Fanck, comes to a practicable application with the working out of plans for a Fanck Film Productions company to be established through the cooperation of Towa Shoji and J. O. Talkie. It is reported that under the arrangement Fanck Film Productions contributes 150,000 yen and Dr. Fanck himself 300,000 yen, his share to be provided by the German government.

The German director is to make features depicting the life of the Japanese and the scenic beauties of the country. The International Tourist Bureau of the Railway Office, the International Motion Picture Association and the Japanese Association for Promotion of International Culture are to extend their facilities to the new producing company. Messrs. Kido of Shochiku Company, Matsukata of Nikkatsu and Uyemura of PCL are to lend Dr. Fanck their leading players.

Out of this plan eventually may come a comprehensive national production project.

Indianapolis Variety Club Stages Party

Marc Wolf, president of the Indianapolis Variety Club, was honored February 24th at the annual president's party, which started in the club rooms, moved to a downtown residence, thence to the Lyric theatre, where Olsen and Johnson staged a special performance, and finally back to the club rooms. Gifts were bestowed upon Mr. Wolf, Carl Niesse, club treasurer for three years, and the chief barker, who starred in a unit show produced in the club rooms. Percy Baar headed the committee.

"Fauntleroy" Premiere

The first showing of David O. Selznick's "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is to be held this week at the Warm Springs Foundation, Warm Springs, Ga. A special theatre has been constructed at the foundation for the children and other patients being treated for infantile paralysis there. United Artists is releasing the picture.

Roxy Holds "Rhodes"

"Rhodes," the Gaumont British picture starring Walter Huston which opened at the Roxy Theatre on Broadway last week, is being held over another seven days.

Paramount Retains Banton

Paramount has signed Travis Banton for another year as fashion designer at the Hollywood studios. Edith Head, Mr. Banton's assistant, was given a similar contract.

Chase Is Buffalo Manager

Maurice Chase, formerly of the Cincinnati exchange of First Division, has been appointed branch manager of the company's office in Buffalo. He replaces Basil Brady.

Wanger Retains Joan Bennett

Walter Wanger has signed Joan Bennett to a new contract whereby the star will make four pictures a year for him.

J. T. Comerford Receives New Executive Position

John T. Comerford, nephew of M. E. Comerford and brother of the late M. B. Comerford, has become supervisor of all Comerford neighborhood theatres from Forest City to Plymouth, Pa. He was formerly manager of the Orpheum in Wilkes-Barre.

Supplementary changes in staff assignments of Comerford Theatres personnel, following managerial shifts announced by Frank C. Walker, vice-president and general manager, February 15th, include the following:

Eugene Lynch, formerly assistant manager of the Riviera, Scranton, has been transferred to the booking department. Frank Yerke, manager of the State, has been assigned to the art department. Willard Matthews, manager of the Bell, goes to the State and Jack Mahon, assistant manager of the Granada in Olyphant, goes to the Globe at South Scranton as manager. J. Sittler, assistant manager of the Bell, becomes manager.

George Baldinger, manager of the Kingston at Kingston has been transferred to the Capitol at Bloomsburg; Gregory Beck, manager of the Capitol at Bloomsburg goes to the Capitol at Williamsport. Byron Lynn, manager of that house, is transferred to the Kingston, where he will act also as city manager, and Frank Kovaletz, assistant manager of the Granada at Olyphant, has been made manager.

Schools Take McVickers Building

The Board of Education in Chicago has taken possession of the McVickers Theatre building at 17-27 West Madison Street on an eviction order signed by Judge Stephen Adamowski. The order was directed against the McVicker Theatre Company, headed by Aaron Jones, Sr., which held a 99-year lease on the property. The order followed the theatre company's failure to pay rental to the school board for 1935.

Fleischer Wins Suit

Special master Theodore S. Kenyon, appointed by federal judge John Woolsey in New York to determine the amount of damages in the copyright infringement suit by Fleischer Studios, Inc., against Freundlich, doll manufacturer, has awarded $5,500 to the plaintiff. This is exclusive of $2,000 for costs and attorneys' fees to be decided by Judge Woolsey.

New Republic Appointments

Albert E. Levoy, general manager of Republic Studios in Hollywood, has appointed Harold C. Cusson as assistant to Herman Schlom, production manager. Mr. Cusson formerly assisted E. R. Hickson, technical director. Nate Watt has also been assigned to direct "Navy Born."

New Swedish Company

A new Swedish producing company, to be capitalized at $35,000 or more, is being formed in Stockholm, according to a report of Trade Commissioner Basil D. Dahl at Stockholm to the Department of Commerce in Washington. The new studio will be at Gotesborg and production is scheduled to start in three months.

WAY TO SAVE MILLIONS ON DUTIES IN EXPORTS TO INDIA IS PROPOSED

Refund on Tariff Abolished, But League Convention Provides for Free Entry for Films of Educational Nature

by RAM L. GOGTAY
Bombay Correspondent

American producers are aware that the Indian Customs tariff allowed a refund of seven-eighths of customs duty paid at the time of import of exposed positives, provided the films were re-exported to the country of origin within two years from the date of import.

This refund has been abolished, although the relative bill passed into law more than a year ago, with effect from the 25th of January, 1936. The step has been taken ostensibly to utilize the consequent increase in Government revenues in reducing the import duties on raw films consumed by the indigenous film industry of India, but in reality to augment the coffers of Government which are suffering from a chronic type of financial stringency. As a result the importer must pay the full duty of 37½ per cent. on a valuation of the exposed positives at annas seven per foot (17 cents). Not a "pie" will be refunded, unless the imported film is refused a certificate by the Boards of Film Censors on the ground of unsuitability for India, in which event only seven-eights will be refunded if the film is forthwith re-exported.

In these circumstances the American film business in India will show an adverse annual balance of something in the neighborhood of a million dollars.

Lavender Prints Imported

To mitigate the loss, one or two distributors have imported lavender prints from which black and white positive prints can be made inexpensively in the local film laboratories. It may be mentioned that the import duty on lavender prints is the same as on black and white positives.

In the past when there was a rumor that the distributors intended to circumvent the abolition of the drawback or refund by importing exposed negatives to be copied on positives in India, as the duty on such negatives was only 37½ per cent. on the invoice value, protest was voiced on behalf of the Indian producers that the duty per foot on exposed negatives must be raised to as much as Rs. 2/8 (approximately a dollar) so that the respective costs of positive prints of foreign and indigenous films would be such as to avert any cutthroat competition against Indian films. A similar proposal will be made against the importing of lavender prints and it might be accepted by the Government.

American producers however, can adopt a different method of meeting the projected deficit in their turnover. Almost half of the scheduled programs are occupied by short subjects of various descriptions. Shorts such as the Magic Carpet series, Pete Smith's Oddities, travelogues, the "Strange As It May Seem" series, even newsreels, and occasionally full length pictures like "The Aerial Epic over Africa," are predominantly educational in character and can be admitted free of import duty under the League of Nations Convention governing the circulation of educational films, already ratified by the Indian Government.

It may be said at the outset that matters would be considerably eased if films, shorts or full-length, considered educational in America, were first submitted to the International Institute of Educational Cinematography Rome, or the British Film Institute, London, for certification as "educational," entitling them to free entry into any country ratifying the convention. The certificates of these institutes are binding.

Method of Procedure

If this cannot be done the following procedure must be adhered to at Bombay and Calcutta, the principal ports of entry into India:

As soon as the film is landed, and before the case containing the film is opened, the importer must make a declaration to the collector of customs in a prescribed form that the film is educational in character, and pay a deposit equal to the duty that ordinarily would be payable. The collector of customs then seals the box and forwards it to the film censor under escort for certification as to whether the contention of the importer is correct. If the certificate is affirmative, the deposit paid previously is fully refunded. To obtain this certificate is no easy task, and regular reasons why the film should be considered to belong to the educational category should be forwarded in writing to the film censor in advance of his examination.

The producer may rest assured that if these precautions are observed, 75 per cent of the films considered as educational in the West will be treated identically in India, and customs duty to the extent of a million dollars may be saved annually.

ACADEMY ANNUAL AWARDS BANQUET

Virtually all of Hollywood's leaders were to assemble Thursday evening at the Ambassador hotel in Los Angeles for the banquet at which the winners of the Academy's annual awards were to be announced.

Recognition is to be given, in the form of statuettes, for the best production, feature and short subject and best acting, directing and assistant direction, the best original script, adaptation, music writing, musical scoring, art direction, photography, film editing and the best studio sound achievement.

Critics Present 'Informer' Award

New York Film Critics made formal presentation of their award to "The Informer" as the best picture of 1935 and issued a separate award to John Ford, its director, for the year's finest direction, at a party given to screen, newspaper and trade representatives at the Ritz-Carlton hotel March 1st. M. H. Aylesworth, chairman of RKO-Radio, addressed the gathering by wire from Hollywood in accepting the award, as did Mr. Ford, Victor McLaglen and Margot Grahame, its stars. (Picture on page 10.)

Greta Garbo's performance in "Anna Karenina" was labeled the finest portrayal of the year by an actress and Swedish Consul-General Martin Kastengren accepted the award in her behalf. Sir Gerald Campbell, British consul-general, acted similarly for Charles Laughton, whose work in "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" won him the masculine award.

Robert E. Sherwood, former film critic and present playwright, presided as master of ceremonies. Constituent critics of the organization issuing the awards are Bland Johaneson, of The Daily Mirror; Rose Pelswick, of The New York Evening Journal; Regina Crewe, of The New York American; Thornton Delehanty, of The New York Post; Kate Cameron, of The Daily News; Seymour Roman, of The Brooklyn Times Union; William Boehnel, of The World Telegram; Richard Watts, Jr., of the New York Herald Tribune; Leo Mishkin, of The Morning Telegraph; Frank Nugent, of The New York Times, and Martin Dickstein, of The Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Among the guests were the Reverend Joseph A. Daly, executive secretary of the Legion of Decency; Winfield Sheehan, Samuel Goldwyn, Ernst Lubitsch, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Brown, Robert Young, Genevieve Tobin, William Wyler, Tilly Losch, Mrs. M. H. Aylesworth, Kitty Carlisle, Helen Chandler, Bramwell Fletcher, Bereniece Claire, Carmel Myers, Ilka Chase and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

LACK OF FUNDS CUTS CLASSROOM FILM USE

National Exchange for Educational Picture Clearance Is Sought in Government Survey

The United States Government this week confirmed the general impression in the trade that, despite widespread expressions to the contrary, the motion picture is at this time far from occupying an important position in the classroom. Growing interest of educators in motion pictures as an adjunct to textbooks, but inability to put any plans for the use of films into effect because of lack of funds, is shown by a survey which the United States Government's Bureau of Education has undertaken.

While far from completed, the survey, it was said by Washington officials of the Bureau, shows that in some of the larger cities motion pictures are being used in varying extent, but in cities of less than metropolis population the cost of conducting school systems has been so great, in proportion to depression depleted income, that little in the way of experimentation has been possible.

Practically all schools now being built in the larger cities have auditoriums, most of them with projection machines. Where available, educational pictures are shown and in some cases educational authorities have been able to make arrangements for the showing of newsreels and an occasional feature of educational interest.

Lending to Film Treatment

A number of studies are seen as susceptible of treatment by films, particularly history, geography and industrial development. Other studies are held to be aided by the use of pictures in conjunction with standard text books. Such side subjects as health and highway safety are particularly good for film education.

Only a comparatively few replies so far have been received to a questionnaire sent out by the Office of Education, probably 1,500 or 2,000 out of a total of 21,000, so that officials point out no final conclusions can be drawn from the material obtained. The answers, however, it was stated, do show that educators in all sections of the country are fully alive to the possibilities of motion pictures in education.

National Exchange Suggested

The field, it was said, is one which must be built up through the years to come. Some sort of arrangement should be made, it was suggested, for a sort of national exchange through which educational films could clear and from which they could be sent all over the country, thus securing a maximum of service from the films, particularly those for which the demand would be of limited extent.

At the same time, teachers will have to learn a new technique if they are to use pictures in conjunction with text books, it was pointed out. Educators generally do not believe that the occasional showing of an educational picture, often at a time when a class is not studying the particular subject involved, is of adequate value; rather, there should be a regular program of films, the same as there is a program of study from books. The two should be used conjointly, the pictures bringing out graphically the major points of the subject under study.

Simplified Practice For Photographic Paper Approved

The current revision of Simplified Practice Recommendation R98, Photographic Paper, has been accorded the required degree of acceptance by the industry and is to become effective February 1, 1936, according to an announcement by the Division of Simplified Practice, National Bureau of Standards. The original Simplified Recommendation established a simplified list of sizes of photo finishing, portrait and commercial paper, and the width and length of single and double weight rolls. It was approved at a general conference held in 1928, and reaffirmed without change in 1930.

The current revision eliminates one size of the original schedule and adds five new sizes. The revised recommendation will remain in effect until it is again revised by the Standing Committee of the industry. Mimeographed copies of the recommendation may be obtained from the Divison of Simplified Practice, National Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C.

Actors' Equity Meetings

Actors' Equity Association this week announced "three meetings in one" for March 16 at the Hotel Astor, New York. The triple bill consists of: a special meeting to select a nominating committee to prepare the regular ticket of councillors, to be presented at the annual meeting; the first 1936 quarterly meeting of the association, and an informal discussion session. Equity reports also the resignation from the council of Jonathan Hale and Mrs. Joseph Hull.

Fire Starts Storage Inquiry

An investigation of film storage in Denver will be started as a result of a $7,500 fire at the Filmcraft Laboratories, in which five firemen were overcome. Careless handling of film caused the blaze, it is alleged. City ordinances prohibit the storing of more than five reels outside a vault.

Australian Actors' Equity

With a desire to emulate Equity in America the Actors' Association of Australia, now more than 20 years old, has obtained permission to assume the name of Actors' Equity of Australia. Bertie Wright is general secretary.

920 Use Screeno, Claim Its Owners

Added to the 4,400 exhibitor users of Bank Night, claimed by its copyright owners, are 920 theatres now using the Screeno game of box office stimulation, according to J. S. Markstein, president of Screeno.

Chance games continue to suffer setbacks in the courts and elsewhere, decisions against one or another form of the practice coming this week from Colorado, where a chance game insurance scheme was declared illegal; from Connecticut, where infringement suits are pending; in Louisiana, the scene of pending legislation; in Massachusetts, whose courts ruled the practice a lottery, and in New Hampshire, were a similar decision was obtained by the state.

Mr. Markstein, who left for Detroit after spending a week in New York, said Chicago is the largest territory for Screeno with Greater New York second. Chicago has had a high of 170 accounts at one time but because Balaban and Katz has reinstated stage shows in a number of houses, games have been discontinued in about 25 units. In New York, 46 Loew houses feature the game, Mr. Markstein said. The total being 110. In certain cities where the legality of the games has been disputed, Screeno is not represented, according to Mr. Markstein. He referred to Cleveland and Milwaukee. In Milwaukee all games have been stopped.

About 70 theatres in California are now on the Screeno books, it was said, with Warner theatres going in for the game in Los Angeles and Hollywood units. The company is also doing well in Kansas City and Texas, he said.

In Denver, the scheme to insure against loss to winners in bank or cash night drawings at theatres has been declared illegal in an opinion by Assistant Attorney General J. Glenn Donaldson, and approved by Attorney General Paul P. Prosser. They branded the plan a lottery. The Theatre Guarantee Corporation had conceived the idea, charging from 10 cents for $100 to 25 cents for $500 insurance, to be paid if party was not at theatre. More than 40 agencies were established before the plan was ruled out.

Motion for more particulars has been filed in Federal court in New Haven by defendants in the Bank Night infringement cases. The defense has asked for the filing by Bank Night, or Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of copies of certificates and other alleged copyright material in connection with the plan, including form of license agreement, advertising trailers, registration book.

In New Orleans, both sides to the controversy as to whether premiums and cash awards will be allowed in the state are making preparations for a movement in the state legislature to allow or to prohibit.

The Massachusetts supreme court has declared that Beano and Sweepstakes are lotteries, in upholding the ruling of Judge Daniel Gillen of the Boston municipal court that the Beano game organized by the Brookline General Hospital was a violation of state laws. Acting Attorney General James Ronan has declared he will launch a statewide drive against all such games.

St. Louis theatremen are awaiting with interest the outcome of the proceedings brought in the Missouri supreme court at Jefferson City by G. E. McKeen, state representative of Bank Night. He seeks release from charges that he violated the lottery laws in operating Bank Night in a Fredericktown, Mo., theatre. Arrested December 24, 1935, he has since been under the technical custody of the sheriff of Madison County.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 11.—(A) Describe proper method of soldering a wire to a binding post. (B) Where should a motor generator set be located, how should it be supported and why? (C) How does a P.E. cell "see" frequency?

Answer to Question No. 6 (New Series)

Bluebook School Question No. 6 (January 25 issue) was: (A) What routine is needed in starting a show and why? (B) Explain how the complete loss of sound may be traced down and remedied. (C) Does any current at all flow through an open switch in a d.c. circuit?

The following made creditable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; A. F. Sprafke (also answered No. 5 correctly but answer was overlooked); G. E. Doe; W. C. Brown; W. Limmroth; J. R. Prater; H. Polies; E. Toedte; P. and L. Felt; A. L. Cooper; H. C. Goodman and N. N. Gray; P. Howard; W. H. Edmonds; C. Loft; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; G. Thompson; D. Pollock; L. D. Hunt; M. and J. Robbins and H. Winkle; A. L. Long and J. T. McGuire; C. L. Sexton; D. L. Slimger and W. H. Remick; B. B. Hornstein; O. L. Harris; Nic Granby; R. Tompkins and H. K. Abernathy; L. A. Dodson and H. T. Todd; D. Emmerson; H. T. Granger; K. M. Michael; T. L. and G. Daniels; L. B. Hardy; L. Henderson and K. L. Knight; S. G. Sanders and G. Sargent; J. Jenson and V. Sanders; A. L. Cooper; B. L. Jennings; W. D. Samuels; D. J. Rosen, B. L. Mathew and R. Marks; I. B. Bancroft; B. M. Powell and N. T. Brown; N. R. Tomlinson; N. E. Olliver and D. McGee; C. Hawkens; W. L. Simmons; W. Jones and B. R. Shepherd; S. E. Gay; L. N. Morgan; F. Maddon and F. I. Daniels.

(A) G. E. Doe says: "I shall describe my regular routine. First I vacuum the interior of the lamphouses and put the lamps in order. Next I lubricate all machine parts requiring it. I then wipe all machines clean. Next I vacuum the floor and once each week the walls and ceiling, arriving a bit earlier that day.

"I then inspect commutators and brushes, doing any cleaning and adjusting that may be necessary, once each week inspecting the grounds. Next comes inspection of batteries, cleaning them and giving such other attention as may be necessary. Next I click check the loud speakers and all meter readings. The exciter lamps are then examined for filament straightness and their globes are cleaned and contacts inspected. If the filament is normal and everything was O. K. at last run the previous day there is no reason for checking the sound optical system.

"I am now ready to thread up and proceed with the show. I have not included film inspection, which is of course a thing apart, the necessity for which varies from day to day."

J. R. Prater says: "Before starting a show, it is necessary to follow a regular routine covering all the places needing care or adjustment which cannot properly be attended to while the show is on. Individual procedure for any certain theatre must be formed to fit the particular requirements of that theatre and equipment, but the general points to be covered are as follows:

(a) Properly lubricate every bearing in a systematic way which will prevent overlooking any part.
(b) Clean all lenses and mirrors.
(c) Check condition of all batteries used.
(d) Turn on sound system and check all meter readings.
(e) Check focus of exciter lamp and its optical system, adjusting if necessary.
(f) Click test each film and disc pickup and test microphones, if used, by speaking into them.
(g) If speakers can be switched on separately, click test each one.
(h) In larger theatres, run a trial reel to check sound quality."

A. F. Sprafke says: "First trim the lamps. Clean idlers, sprockets and tension shoes; also lenses. Check sound system, starting with exciter lamps and going right through the system, ending by giving the loud speakers the click test. Close the motor generator switch and give arc final adjustment, thread the projectors and the show is ready to start. If this routine is followed day by day there is small chance of trouble developing."

(B) J. R. Prater says: "Complete loss of sound can readily be traced down by first observing the meters and indicators in the sound circuit and looking for a burned out exciter lamp or vacuum tube. If these do not reveal the trouble, test with head phones, starting at the sound pickup and working toward the speakers until the trouble is reached. The remedy will be to replace, repair, or eliminate the faulty part. In any event, get the show going as soon as possible. If permanent repair would require considerable time and the show could be restored quickly by a temporary hookup that would do no further damage, by all means use the short cut until the day's run is finished; then make proper repairs."

Weldon Limmroth answers thus: "Complete loss of sound usually is the easiest trouble to locate. Apply head phones to transmission lines, beginning at the sound head, and follow through to the loud speakers. If the system is provided with meters and signal lamps the seat of trouble usually may be detected without the use of head phones. In case the power line signal light is out, the trouble may be located with a voltmeter. Naturally the remedy to apply depends upon what is wrong. It may involve the repair of a broken circuit, elimination of a short, replacement of a faulty P E cell or tube, or some other part."

Herman Polies says this is the way: "Complete loss of sound may be traced down to the source of trouble as follows: The trouble must of course have its seat in some part in which both the head amplifier and P. E. cell are involved. Going therefore directly to the head amplifier, assuming it to have meters in the plate circuit, if the readings are not normal, locating the trouble and remedying it is a simple matter, but if all meters, including exciter lamp, read normal, then remove one of the output tubes for the fraction of a second. If this does not produce a click in the loud speakers the trouble will be found in the voice coil leads; either that or the secondary of the output transformer is open or shorted. Since both the voice coils of stage and monitor are unlikely to open at the same time, remove the voice coil leads to the transformer and try a pair of head phones across it. If you get sound, run temporary leads to the stage speakers.

"If sound is heard when removing the output tube the trouble lies ahead of that point and may be traced with phones (one lead to ground, the other to the grids of the voltage amplifier tubes) until sound is heard. The trouble may be in a shorted coupling condenser. A shorted one will show on the meter. If touching the input transformer on the main amplifier makes a noise in the speakers, the fader then should be checked for dirty contacts or open or shorted leads. A resistance meter is very handy for locating opens or shorts. Using head phones in series with a small condenser the P E cell voltage may be checked.

"If amplifiers are without meters, head phones may be used in the same way, and the tube test also. If the fuses do not blow, look at the plates of the rectifier tubes. A shorted by-pass condenser across the output tubes bias resistor allowing full current to flow, the condenser may cut out the circuit. Note: Keep phones away from high voltage. If shunted across it they will loose their magnetism. Meter fields should be checked. Those with meters check themselves. Those without may be checked by holding the blade of a screwdriver close to the pole piece. If no magnetism, it means the open field coil lead or the field supply is defective, as both coils are unlikely to go bad at the same time. If that is the case the arc generator may supply the current, provided the fields are of the high resistance type. If they are of the low voltage kind, then a battery may be used."

Dear Herald:

An Open Letter to George Ade

Dear George:

We recently read your letter, written from Miami Beach, Florida, in which you deplored the fact that you had arrived at your 70th milestone and were ready to take to the rocking chair and review your past through the clouds of smoke from your old Meerschaum.

Forget about that seventy-year stuff, boy; you are getting better and better all the while. Someone (Walt Whitman, as we remember) once said that a man was not at his best until he had arrived at the age of 80. The recounting of your past seventy years' experience will be valuable to the present generation, for the present generation doesn't know of the many pleasant experiences through which you have passed.

You deplore the fact that you have arrived at the age of 70, but that's nothing, you've just got started, and there are many milestones between 70 and 80. You are not old. We were playing hide-and-go-seek and "Knucks Down" with the boys in the alley when you were born. Do you remember when we went to Teachers Institute in Kentland, Indiana? Do you remember the time when your father (John Ade) was the head of the banking firm of Ade & McCray at Kentland, Indiana? And do you remember when Mack Caldwell and I took a couple of mules over to Kentland from the Caldwell home near Pilot Grove and sold them to your father for $400 cash? And do you remember the time when we were delegates to the Bull Moose convention in Chicago that nominated "Teddy" and he wouldn't accept the nomination? And do you remember how that threw a chill into all of us?

People say that the world is getting wiser and better all the while. It may be getting wiser, but that "getting better stuff" is a lot of horseradish. Two kids, one 12 and the other 14, couldn't go from Kentland to Pilot Grove over the open prairie today with $400 in cash without being held up and robbed before they got to the Iroquois river, but we two made the trip by moonlight, leaving Kentland at sundown and arriving home at midnight with that $400 safe in our jeans, that is, safe in Mack's jeans.

You probably remember also when you went to Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana, and we went to Central Indiana college at Danville, Indiana, but maybe that's why the Purdue school has grown so rapidly and why the Danville school is about the same.

If we had as beautiful a country home as you have at Ade, Indiana, with flower gardens, golf links 'n' everything, we wouldn't worry about being 70, we'd retire there and play golf and try and write something partly as interesting as you do, 70 or no 70.

Forget about that guy Methuselah, George. You can't trot in his class, and don't put in too much time thinking about Solomon and Reno, leave those thoughts to Hollywood. Being a fellow Newton county Hoosier, it would please us very much if you would write of your early experiences in Newton county, the Kankakee river and Beaver lake country.

There, now, the weather man has guessed it this time. It has started to snow and it is coming from the east and it looks like it would keep it up all night, and this, on top of two feet already here, will give the unemployed a chance to use the snow shovels. We know, for we have given them jobs of shoveling a 150-foot walk three times already. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

Recently we went to the Moon Theatre and saw Victor McLaglen in "Professional Soldier," and while we wouldn't want to rate this as one of the "Ten Best," yet we believe it will be accepted by the theatre-going public as fairly satisfactory. There was part of the picture wherein we think the director gave Victor rather too much to do when he required him to capture a whole army all by himself.

We remember a few years back when "Broncho Billy" killed seven or eight in each reel, and we have a Marine in our town who was largely responsible in the late war for the map of Europe remaining as it is today, but neither of these boys had anything on Victor.

Unless we are mistaken, Tay Garnett directed the picture, and his direction suggested to us that most likely he was fishing with Elmer Gaily of Wayne, Nebraska, when Elmer claimed to have landed three sharks in Big Stone lake in Minnesota with an eight-ounce fly rod.

These unprecedented exploits remind us of what a blonde said to a sergeant when he told her about capturing a whole German regiment single handed—"I simply adore men who do things in a big way."

When we were in Winnipeg, Canada, last fall we mentioned in this colyum the difficulty we had in finding the Royal Alexandria hotel. We drove around the city for an hour to find it and were finally directed to it by one of the Winnipeg Bobbies. We have just received a letter from J. Royal Caven of Winnipeg, who says he saw our comment in the Herald, and he enclosed a clipping from a Winnipeg paper saying that the committee had approved an electric sign for the Royal Alexandria. Mr. Caven didn't say so, and we are wondering if our comment came to the attention of the management of the Royal Alexandria.

While Mr. Caven's letterhead doesn't state his business, we are presuming he is connected with some theatre, since he evidently reads the Herald, just about as everyone else does. They say that it pays to advertise, and this would seem to prove it.

We went to the Moon to see Lily Pons in "I Dream Too Much," and if we ever see Lily we are going to tell her that there are two of us. If your audiences enjoy grand opera they will most likely enjoy this one, as Miss Pons is a delightful singer.

Clayton Watkins, the superintendent of that "Shelterbelt" here in Nebraska for the government, says that the trees they planted last fall are doing nicely in spite of this extreme cold weather.

Clayton is a dandy boy, and that's probably because he was raised here in our town, but he should have withheld his report until next fall after the fall winds had drifted the "belt" full of tumbleweeds and Russian thistles and the prairie fires had gotten into it, then what? Then he will have another job replanting the belt at Government expense.

Since the state of the weather seems to be the common topic of radio and press, it occurred to us that possibly you might be interested in knowing how the people out here in the sagebrush are getting along. This morning it was 22 below zero here in this cow town metropolis. Yesterday one of the superintendents of one of the alphabetical bureaus was coming from Grand Island and he got stuck in the snow, but was finally rescued and brought here and taken to the hospital and his chances for recovery were said to be rather slim. Elmer Hunkee, a film salesmen for RKO, was stuck in a snowdrift about 10 miles from Bertlett, but was finally rescued by a couple of men and was carried to a filing station then brought here in an exhausted condition, but physicions said he would recover. Those of you who think that these film boys have an easy time better revise your opinions.

The weatherman reports that more snow and colder weather is on the way. Oh, my gosh, gee whiz. But—

When this snow has melted off
And the lawns are getting green,
When we hear the singing oriole and wren,
Then we'll take our flannels off
For we'll know that it will mean
That the springtime days have come to us again.

All right, Ernie, let's let it go at that.

"Women in White" Set

Treo Film Exchange of New York has acquired the new Guaranteed picture, "Women in White," for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. Molly Lamont and Lester Matthews head the cast.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

AWAKENING OF JIM BURKE: Jack Holt, Jimmy Butler—A splendid "father and son" story that was liked here better than "O'Shaughnessy's Boy." Although the title fits the picture it is not a good title for a Holt picture. Played February 14-15.—A N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE MISSING MAN, THE: Roger Pryor, Joan Perry—Good programmer with another picture. Looks as if they are making them now days to encourage this double feature thing. Anyway it takes two of most of the program pictures to make a show. Very few of the program pictures will stand alone and draw film rent in this town. Played February 11-12.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard, Joan Perry—A nice clean little western and should be shown on double bill. Hardly strong enough to stand alone. Ken and his horse turn in a fine performance, and a baby that smiles makes it good.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WESTERN FRONTIER: Ken Maynard, Lucile Browne—Ken Maynard turns in another swell piece of acting in this story of the Western frontier. It has action, romance and a good story and that is what the Saturday fans like. Running time, six reels. Played February 15.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Du World

DON QUIXOTE: Feodor Chaliapin, Sydney Fox—"Don Quixote" a fine classic from the great inspiring book by the Spanish author Cervantes. The film was entirely spoken and sung in English. The great Russian operatic artist took the part of Don Quixote. Great acting and singing, also a fine story as well. We did great business on this picture. We had four performances daily and were sold out for every one. The teachers cooperated with us and sent all of their English classes to see it. We made every effort to get the music lovers interested in this film and were very successful in doing so, as they turned out one hundred per cent. It was truly a masterpiece. The filming was different from the average run of American pictures. It was a treat for Grand Rapids and they realized it, as we have had nothing but praise from our patrons. This is a picture that one could do very well on if it was handled right and if one got the right people behind it to sell the idea for you. Eight reels and a very fine print. Running time, 79 minutes. Played February 18-21.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Adult and high school patronage.

First National

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—This is packed with laughs from start to finish. Joe E. Brown was never better and the patrons were pleased 100 per cent. Business not quite up to average due to weather conditions. Played February 10-11.—J. M. Lakeman, Princes Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY HOSTESS Winifred Shaw—This picture gave fair satisfaction but Winifred Shaw's singing spoiled it.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: Pat O'Brien, James Cagney—A very good picture showing the inside workings of commercial aviation, and the hazards the pilots have in extreme bad weather conditions. Good for extended run. Running time, 95 minutes. Played February 2.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Pleased most of the patrons. Kay Francis has a following here. Played February 21.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARIS: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—A well-produced picture that pleased a large crowd. Made the mistake of playing it only one day.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

IRISH IN US, THE: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—We played this a little late so did just fair. The picture is very good, however.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

PAYOFF, THE: James Dunn, Patricia Ellis, Claire Dodd—Good action picture with Dunn in the kind of role he does the best. Ellis looked like a million dollars in this but far from up to standard in "Freshman Love," which we showed just previously. Watch those calories, Patricia. Running time, 64 minutes. Played February 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

G B Pictures

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—The posters on this picture advertised it as the surprise of the year and that is what it is. It sure surprised me as it is very good and a very well made picture. I did a little better than average Sunday and Monday business. They should give Arliss more roles of this type. I didn't think I could ever say anything good about a foreign picture but changed my mind after seeing this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 16-17.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—It speaks for itself. Broke all records since first of the year. Played four days. It was the talk of the town. Opposition hurt by its playing Book it, but play it more than one day. The lobby display for "First a Girl" has my patrons talking. —Bob Guise, manager, Dickinson Wareham Theatre, Manhattan, Kansas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ANNA KARENINA: Greta Garbo, Frederic March—A mighty good picture, liked by our patrons better than any of this star's pictures to date. Wonderful settings and direction. We had to play it on a double bill in order to get film rental out of the date. The picture is too good for small towns, over their heads. This type of picture is made for city theatres, and us small town guys had not ought to be compelled to play them. Played February 18-19.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HERE COMES THE BAND: Ted Lewis, Virginia Bruce—The picture pleased and everybody was happy. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE AIR: Jack Benny, Ted Healy—The show pleased. Had several good comments on it and people went out laughing. Ted Healy stole the show.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KIND LADY: Aline MacMahon, Basil Rathbone—If your patrons like English pictures and English language it might pay film rental.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Charles Laughton—It's a grand show and we think everyone was pleased. The weather hurt business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—This comedy team has never been a big draw for us, but this topped all the other pictures they've made both in fun and box office receipts. Played February 16-18.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—It's a honey of a Marx Brothers show. Plenty of fun and the customers will eat it up. The harp and piano playing adds to the show. Played February 16.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PERFECT GENTLEMAN, THE: Frank Morgan, Cicely Courtneidge—Might be o.k. if you have enough English patrons. Didn't mean anything here.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Just a rough and rowdy program picture. Running time, 94 minutes. Played February 24-26.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Just about everything that Metro claims for this picture—is there. We had hoped to go to town on this picture, but the worst blizzard I have ever seen hit us the first night and didn't let up any during the run. You can get behind this feature with everything you've "got" and not be afraid of saying too much. It will appeal to any class audience, as we had the boys from the sawmill applauding it. Running time, 113 minuts. Played February 16-18.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—All and more than Metro claims for it. Wonderful cast, singing and scenery unsurpassed. It has everything to please all classes and will draw them in. Played in zero weather and had fine business considering. Running time, 109 minutes. Played February 16.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Fredric March, Leslie Howard, Norma Shearer—Do not believe there was ever a more pleasing picture made. The acting was wonderful. The third time here and in spite of below zero weather the business was satisfactory.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Another swell picture from Metro. Arkansas is experiencing the worst cold weather that I have ever seen, and it seems that every time I get a really big picture the weather man does his bit to keep the people at home. The high schools got behind this show, and it brought out the people that weren't in a habit of attending our show. Running time, 126 minutes. Played January 26-27. —B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Splendid production. Story of the French revolution with plenty of action. Will please any audience and is good for extended run. Running time, 126 minutes. Played January 26.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen—Good program picture, rather thin but it got by. The British stuff is poison here so the English talk did not make a hit.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Beryl Mercer, Cecilia Parker—Amusing comedy with Beryl Mercer taking the show. No cast to draw in the customers, but will please if you get them in. Played February 17.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Charlie Ruggles, Ethel Merman—A nice comedy with music. The quartet is fine. Bing sings and acts better than in past few pictures. Ethel Merman good. Ruggles does his stuff. A jam up good entertainment. But Bing has lost his draw in our town. Played February 20-21.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Wasn't sure about this one but it did better than average business and pleased everyone. In my opinion a much better picture could have been made with all the array of talent used, but, after all, the cash customers seemed to like it and that's what counts. Played February 13-14.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Frances Langford—Very good musical comedy romance. Best Penner picture yet. Generally our people do not care for him at all. Running time, 81 minutes. Played February 16-17.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CORONADO: Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess—Although this lacked draw names it was a good little picture.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye, Patsy Kelly, Frances Langford—A good little story about amateur nights and radio success. Our favorite, of course, was wise-cracking, goofy-looking Patsy Kelly. The boys were quite surprised to find out she can sing. Well rounded-out with good musical numbers. This one will please any audience. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 22.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Larry is making quite a hit here in these Zane Grey westerns. He may not ride as fancy or shoot as quick as some of the other western heroes but he has a chance to show his swimming prowess in this and he makes a grand looking hero, which appeals to the girls. This is a good western that drew good business. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin—A good picture to poor business. No matter how good pictures are they must have star value to draw people in. I overlooked Rosalind Russell's name in this cast, for which I paid. She made such a hit here in "Rendezvous" that if I had put her name on the banner it might have drawn a few extra quarters.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott— A well-produced picture that did just fair at the box office.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

SOAK THE RICH: Walter Connolly—Title should have been "Soak the Customers." It may be smart entertainment, but not for small towns. The producers of "Crime Without Passion" score another hit. Played February 15.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—A delightful picture which small town audiences will like very much. It seems to me that Walter Kelly could really be a box office name if given the right stories and support. Stepin Fetchit helped a great deal to draw people in on this to average business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—A good family picture that got lots of laughs.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

Republic

FRISCO WATERFRONT: Ben Lyon, Helen Twelvetrees—Lots of pro-and-con comments on this one. A very good story well done, but seemed to lack the action for the length of the picture. One good gang-fight. However, it's not a bad picture. —Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

HITCH HIKE LADY: Allison Skipworth, James Ellison, Mae Clarke—This is a very good program picture, but not a special. Lots of good comedy. The whole cast very good, but very hard to understand. We have the best of equipment but we can't get good results on most of this company's pictures as to sound, also some other companies have the same fault found with their pictures by our patrons. Played February 18-19.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LEAVENWORTH CASE, THE: Norman Foster, Jean Rouverol—A fair program picture. The cast good, story interesting, sound poor. With five short subjects we got a satisfactory show out of it, and got film rental only, and that's that. Played February 13.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

OREGON TRAIL: John Wayne, Ann Rutherford One of the best westerns that I have ever played and I play 52 a year. The new Waynes are all good from Republic. Let's hope that this company keeps up the pace that they have set on all pictures. Played February 1.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

SINGING VAGABOND, THE: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford—I can't add anything to this picture in way of praise any more than I have the others of this series. They are so far ahead of other pictures this year that I lack words to describe them. If other companies would drop a lot of their society dramas and add a number of this type of picture, us small town exhibitors would have something to live for. Played February 9-10.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—A mighty fine special program picture. One of the best out-of-doors cloth house show business productions we ever played. The director must have known his business. Most of the circus pictures have been overdone, but this was true to life. A great start and a wonderful cast gave good satisfaction to them we got, but with the country buried in snow, roads blocked, did not pay out. Played February 16-17.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FOUR EXHIBITORS JOIN REPORTERS

From Kansas and Minnesota come new reporters on "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

Robert Guise, Dickinson Wareham Theatre, Manhattan, Kansas.

J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minnesota.

Two showmen whose names and comment on product have been familiar to readers of the department return to the fold after more than a year of absence. Welcomed back are:

E. M. Starkey, Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wisconsin.

J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Missouri.

Read the reports of these exhibitors in the columns of this issue.

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford—An exceptionally good program picture, that didn't click so well at the box office. This one really deserves livewire advertising, for it will satisfy the majority. Played February 12.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda —Patrons thought I had dreamed too much and stayed away. Just wasted three days of good playing time. Lily Pons can sing but the picture did not please. We have RCA High Fidelity sound and it was working good so it was not the sound; it was the type of picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda —Just a small town pain. Played to the lowest Sunday and Monday gross this winter. Who wants grand opera in a small town. The box office says nobody. What few saw it said it was good. If that picture is good I never want to see a bad one. I can't understand how a company that can make pictures like "Annie Oakley" can make such a colossal flop as this. Pay for it and put it on the shelf, and do yourself and patrons a big favor. Running time, 95 minutes. Played February 23-24. —M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—This was a very good picture and pleased generally. Several commented they missed Fred Astaire.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart, Virginia Weidler—If you haven't played this one you're missing one of the best program pictures of 1935. We played it late, but that didn't matter. They came, they saw, they raved. If we could get another picture with little Virginia Weidler in it, our worries would be over for that run, as she really sold herself with her performance in "Laddie." It's tops for down-to-earth entertainment. Running time, seven reels. Played February 13-14.—B. A. McConnell Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—This picture might have grossed big money in the cities but I couldn't even get film rent. Picture itself is beautiful, but that doesn't keep the cashier busy. Advise all small town exhibitors to pass this one up. Running time, 95 minutes. Played February 21-22.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Preston Foster, Dorothy Wilson—Foster was excellent in a picture that proved the worst Sunday attraction we have had in nearly a year. People here as just not interested in this type of picture. Running time, 98 minutes. Played February 9-11.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Yea! "Laugh-makers"! They really go for this team in this neck of the woods and this one went better than the last one. The house was in an uproar. Anybody that can sit through this without a laugh should be an undertaker, if he isn't already one. There is a continual flow of wisecracks and comedy from start to finish as well as plenty of thrills! If you haven't played it, play it. The laughs will do you good. Played January 19-20.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE: Gene Raymond—Will do on a double bill.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant—Say Cary, listen to a little advice from an old showman. Don't let 'em put you into another one as silly as this one. You are really capable of going to town when cast with the right people. Not this one. Fellow exhibitors, if you want me to tell you, pay for it and leave it. Katharine Hepburn, you have been appearing in some pretty poor stuff here of late and this is the poorest. It certainly does not help a theatre any to play this picture.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant—The poorest picture I've run for six months. Set it out.—R. N. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Small town patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Showed this just one night because of weather conditions. But every one of the patrons was satisfied. Broderick and Herbert make a good comedy team and brought down the house with their wisecracks. There are also some good song numbers and a good dancing number atop the piano and chairs. Plenty of comedy and a good plot.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert, Roger Pryor—This is one of them crazy pictures. Commences very poor, but after a while it begins to get into quite a program picture. We had walkouts but them that stayed and suffered through the first few reels said it was a pretty good picture after all. I can't tell you what was the matter with it. I guess poor direction as there was a lot of splendid talent, but they didn't seem to know where to go. Played February 20.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Played this one several weeks ago and failed to report, but the patrons are still commenting on it when Lederer's name is mentioned. About the only thing wrong with this one, it wasn't advertised enough by the producers. This one should please almost anywhere, because it has enough comedy to please and entertain anyone. Let's have some more from Lederer.—Charles Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY DECEPTION, THE: Francis Lederer, Frances Dee—Francis Lederer is well liked here, and the picture pleased generally although not as good as his "Romance in Manhattan" or "Pursuit of Happiness."—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—The best picture from Rogers. The worst weather in years and still we did a good business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers—Will's best picture. A snowstorm hurt business. We hope to get a return date.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Did not think this as good as previous Temple pictures. Will still do business, but not as much as other Temples. Our children's patronage was off 75 per cent. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 27-29.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—While this was a good picture many parents commented that it was not a good picture for children as it was rather sad in spots. Business was off due to a storm.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker, Bebe Daniels—Just ordinary musical romance with build up at the end saving it from very low rating. Running time, 67 minutes. Played February 12-13. —Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—This was a good picture and pleased a large audience on Family Night.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—A very fine picture that will please every one. Running time, 77 minutes. Played February 16.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—The picture that was originally titled "Snatched" and changed. Deals with the kidnaping racket. Of doubtful value as entertainment. It is well acted but it is an unpleasant subject to make a picture out of. It brings too close to home what may happen to any child and I don't think that the women liked it at all.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak A fine musical and Powell was good. Weather was terrible and no business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson—Good entertainment. Not as stupendous as Barnum himself, of course, nor as stupid as the "banquet scene"; but still, just a good, all-around picture. Virginia Bruce, as Jenny Lind, was excellent. Here's a secret, however—the smallest lady in the picture was the biggest star! Cute? You said it! Running time, 105 minutes. Played February 15.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Universal

GREAT IMPERSONATION, THE: Edmund Lowe, Valerie Hobson—Extraordinary. It is as much like reading a book, and Edmund Lowe along with the balance of the cast turns in a fine performance. Business poor three days first part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—A lightweight but amusing program comedy that was well liked by our patronage. The dialogue is particularly clever and Horton turns in his usual characterization of the befuddled timid soul.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—I haven't been reporting lately, but it would be an injustice to Universal if I passed this up. This is positively the finest and most satisfactory picture this season. I don't remember when (if ever) of hearing so many raves as they give on this and it's got one whale of a draw. Congrats and thanks to Universal, John Stahl, Robert Taylor, Irene Dunne and all. It's the surprise package of the year. Running time, 112 minutes. Played Februry 23.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Bette Davis gives a good performance but it is one of those pictures that are dialogued to death. There are some flashes of comedy but that does not offset the fact that it depended entirely on talk to put the story over. Then Davis was tighter than a boot during two reels, and that does not set so well with small town audiences. I had a lot of walkouts on it. I don't think that it has any value as a box office attraction in a small town. The second day was nil.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Frank McHugh, Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull—Very good college musical with not too much music. Good cast put this over, especially McHugh, who was perfectly cast. This boy Hull is making lots of feminine hearts flutter. Played February 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MAN HUNT: William Gargan, Marguerite Churchill—A good action picture for short run. Good Saturday picture for small towns. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 14.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran—The picture went over all right. It will do.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST, THE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—A very fine production. A short run picture for small towns. A class picture good for Sunday. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 9.—E. M. Starkey, New Rex Theatre, Berlin, Wis. General patronage.

WIDOW FROM MONTE CARLO, THE: Dolores Del Rio, Warren William—A good program picture played on a double bill, and with another picture made a satisfactory show. Both looked to me as being built for double feature programs. Good but not strong enough to draw alone. Played February 11-12.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

GUMSHOES: Tom Kennedy—Fairly amusing slapstick comedy.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOT PAPRIKA: Andy Clyde—The funniest comedy we've played in months. Audience simply howled with delight. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KANNIBAL KASPERS: Krazy Kat—Very ordinary cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Educational

ALPINE YODELER: Terry-Toon—A fine black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

PANDORA: Terry-Toon—Very well done, it was liked by the children mostly.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Adult and high school patronage.

TWO LAME DUCKS: Vince Barnett, Billy Gilbert—Very few laughs. Everyone was glad when it was over. Running time, two reels.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the most beautiful of this series.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BURIED LOOT: Crime Does Not Pay Series—A two-reel "Crime Does Not Pay" series that everyone should play. Shows the foolishness of the perfect crime. Running time, two reels.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

CREW RACING: Sports Parade—A good sport, showing coaching methods in crew racing. An excellent filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

HEARST METROTONE NEWS: Too much political propaganda in this to suit me. People have to sit through a news and listen to the bunk that is put on your screen. It isn't like a newspaper or radio—they can turn off or read something else, but with us, you just give them something they distaste and I'm not going to do it from here on out. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HONOLULU, PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Thoroughly enjoyable. Most beautiful.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

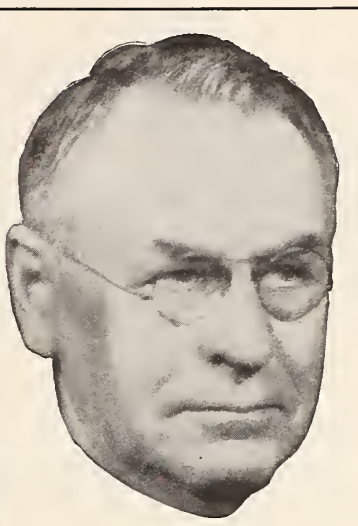
HOT MONEY: Todd-Kelly—Brought lots of laughs. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charley Chase—Good. We're in favor of letting Charley sing in each comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MONKEY BUSINESS: Charley Chase—High class comedy. Plenty of laughs. Charlie's singing of "When I Grow Too Old to Dream" is really good. He has a nice voice and I think would help his work a lot if he would sing in more of them. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

OKAY TOOTS: Charley Chase—Just fair. Why does Charley have to try and sing in all his comedies?—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale—When they come to giving the Gold Medal for shorts next year this should win in a walk. It's just what the title says, "The Perfect Tribute," and good old Chic Sale gives a marvelous portrayal. This one will live forever.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.



PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY: Oddity—These subjects are well received. This one did not happen to be in color. Those that are get some scattered applause at the conclusion and it is the only short that does.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC GHOST NO. 1: Charley Chase—Charley goes into the house haunting business and wins the girl. Real good slapstick comedy and your patrons will enjoy it. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

RURAL MEXICO: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—A beautiful colored travel picture of Mexico. Every exhibitor owes it to his public to show these reels. They are a thing of beauty, educational, excellent music and best of all very audience pleasing.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

SPRUCIN' UP: Our Gang—Very good. These kids are improving all the time. Deserves extra billing. Running time, two reels.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

BEACH MASTERS: Struggle for Life Series—One of the finest reels of its kind on the market. Educational, entertaining and will please any audience. Had many compliments on it. Shows the life of the seals.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR THEATRE OF THE AIR: Have played four of these and this one is one of the best. Nothing outstanding in any of them. Not as popular as the radio hour.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

NEWLY REWEDS: Monte Collins—Terrible.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS: No. 37—Very fine issue. It had fine pictures of Australia and foreign countries, no political scenes. It is made up on the idea of a travel reel, yet it gives you all of the news right up to date.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Adult and high school patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY'S BAND CONCERT: Mickey Mouse—Liberty gave this four stars; so do we. In color, this was a perfect blend of "William Tell Overture" and comic cartoon. We used it as a climax for our program, so good was it. Running time, nine minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MICKEY'S POLO TEAM: Mickey Mouse Cartoon—House in an uproar. For pure fun this has it. Give preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

Universal

MONKEY WRETCHES: Oswald Cartoon—This was certainly a dandy. These Universal cartoons are now the best black and white cartoons on the market.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

Vitaphone

BY REQUEST: Claude Hopkins and Orchestra—Another of those fine "Melody Masters." Can generally be counted upon as good when you want a musical short.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BY REQUEST: Claude Hopkins and his Orchestra—Good one reel short with Negro orchestra.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE OR NOTHING: Phil Harris—Entertaining short.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LONESOME TRAILER: Big V Comedies—El Brendel has always been a favorite comedian with me. However, the audience enjoyed this comedy very much. It is good entertainment for the grownups as well as the kids. Running tiine, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

REGULAR KIDS: Meglin Kids—A fine two-reel musical in color. Kids very clever. Good contortion act, singing and dancing. Running time, two reels.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

RIMAC'S RHUMBA ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—This is undoubtedly the fastest one-reel musical ever recorded. Not a single second is wasted. The dancing team is "tops," but the dance hall satire with the dummy "hostess" steals the picture. The boys requested that we show this one a second time at the close of the feature, which sets a new mark for a short subject. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

VITAPHONE CASINO: Buster West, Radio Rubes—Several good acts of vaudeville, including Buster West and the Radio Rubes. Entertaining.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE CASINO: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Snappy vaudeville acts. Just the kind to help out a weak program. Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE CASINO: Babs Ryan, Buster West, Paul Dukes—Excellent little groups of vaudeville skits. The prestidigitator was good, Babs was better, but Buster walked off, or rather danced off with the prize. The boys are already asking for more of his pictures. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

VITAPHONE CELEBRITIES: Remington Singers—Very fine subject with a "horse" act that was a scream.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE VARIETY: Louis Prima and Orchestra—These vaudeville subjects from Vitaphone are very good, usually having at least one knockout act. This one had one excellent eccentric dancer.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

FIGHTING MARINES, THE: Grant Withers, George Lewis—Little different type serial that is pleasing the serial fans.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

REFINANCING SEEN AS B&K ECONOMY MOVE

Hearst's 'American' Rejects "New Gulliver" Advertising as Russian Propaganda Film

by BILL CROUCH
Chicago Correspondent

Balaban & Katz Corporation will redeem as of May 1, 1936, one-half of its 7 per cent preferred stock outstanding, 13,063 shares out of a total issue of 26,126, obtaining necessary funds, about $1,500,000, by a bank loan said to be obtainable at a rate of interest "considerably lower than the preferred stock dividend rate." A substantial saving to the corporation is given as the reason for the refinancing. The stock to be redeemed is callable at $110 a share. The rate of interest to be paid for the bank loan has not been divulged.

When he stopped in to review "The New Gulliver," Sam Morris, Chicago American film editor, felt the picture too much on the propaganda side so he reported the matter to his office and as a result all advertising for the picture was dropped from the American.

The picture, which has one living person and 3,000 puppets in the cast, was made by Amkino and is showing currently at the Sonotone theatre. Newspapers less strict on propaganda pictures, commended the film.

Vaudeville is out permanently at the Palace theatre, according to those in charge here. A straight film policy will be the plan from now on, starting this week with the showing of "Follow the Fleet." Local executives figure the house can show more on the profit side with the heavy charges of a vaudeville show taken off.

J. J. Jovaney, head of Superior Pictures Exchange, is back from New York.

The most talked of picture along Film Row these days is "The Country Doctor." Numerous screenings have been given for exhibitors and the demand for dates has been terrific.

Eddie Silverman of Essaness Theatres took advantage of the Japanese turmoil and its top headlines by booking the United Artists picture "Thunder in the East" in to all Essaness houses. Special advertising on the locale and story of the picture is emphasized, as it is a spy story with a Japanese background.

The Chicago Amusement Publicists Associatio (CAPA) has moved to the Sherman hotel, where it is now ensconced in permanent headquarters. At a recent meeting Richard Cortez was made an honorary member.

Clyde Eckart is in St. Petersburgh, Fla., enjoying a well earned rest from his duties as manager of the Twentieth Century-Fox Exchange here. He will be gone a month.

The Balaban and Katz employees held another Bank Night-Screeno preview party Monday evening at the Oriental. Prizes of all kinds and descriptions were awarded, and Harold Lloyd's "The Milky Way" was shown on the screen.

Ernst Lubitsch, en route to Europe, stopped over for a few hours between the Santa Fe Chief and the Twentieth Century. Interviewed at the Blackstone Hotel, he denied, in emphatic terms that he had "pushed Mae West around," as Jim Timony, her manager, charged. "I'm not strong enough to push Mae West around," said the producer. "And this statement that she had been in show business long before I started is probably the truth. I started when I was very young but I'm only 44 now."

When the cost of bandages and iodine cut into the box-office receipts, the B&K press agents and managers called off their roller skate hockey games. To many casualties resulted in the first contests.

Aaron Saperstein is back from Florida. The Allied States executive is planning to see that the operators' union contract is taken care of in the next few weeks.

A new giveaway game is proving popular in many houses here. It is Broadway Handicap, with a horse race angle. Ten major circuit houses started the plan this week along with Screeno and Bank Night.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

POINT WITH PRIDE

On their often frostbitten toes at all times, theatremen continue to battle the snow and are doing a right good job of it to keep their houses open in all kinds of bad weather.

F'rinstance, from out in icebound Glasgow, Montana, Art Abelson sends along a cute picture card showing the local thermometer at 60 below, despite which Art manages to keep the latch string out at his Roxy Theatre.

Dick Wright, Ohio Warner district chief, gives comfort to his managers with a flock of ideas to move folks from their firesides. A "Come Downtown" and "Don't Let Cold Weather Keep You Home" merchants' co-op drive is Wright's suggestion with transportation companies coming in by giving round-trips for one fare. Garage attendants to pick up cars at the theatre and free coffee are other slants offered to fight the snow menace.

All of the above is set forth to indicate forcefully the agility of your showman's thinking machinery whatever the occasion. Emergencies that would flabbergast most folks are taken in their stride by theatremen who manage to keep the change machine rattling profitably in the face of blizzards, heat waves, floods, or what have you.

The ability displayed by managers in removing, with quickness and dispatch, box-office obstacles that seem insurmountable is something to which the industry might well and with every good reason point with pride.

THEATREMAN RECEIVES CIVIC HONORS

Page one stories, high editorial praise and city-wide commendation were forthcoming recently in Daytona Beach, Florida, with the announcement that to Round Tabler J. C. Cartwright, city manager of the local Sparks Theatres, was voted the annual Junior Chamber of Commerce Key for Distinguished Civic Service. In addition, "J. C." was chosen as runner-up in the selection of the 1935 Citizen Cup winner. This honor is given annually by the Daytona Beach News-Journal, leading newspaper.

The list of Cartwright's accomplishments as vice-president of the Senior Chamber of Commerce and chairman of its advertising committee is a long and impressive one. But what is more impressive is that this showman found time to do so handsome a job of civic boosting while successfully operating the theatres under his supervision.

Local theatre and civic set-ups do not always allow managers the opportunity of duplicating the fine record made by this Round Tabler. But in situations where such cooperation is called for it is to be noted that theatremen usually are listed high among those participating importantly in these outside activities.

SHOULD BE MORE OF IT

On behalf of Twentieth Century - Fox "The Country Doctor", starring the Dionne Quintuplets, Henry King who directed the picture is piloting his own plane about the country addressing women's clubs and visiting newspapers as a buildup for local dates. "Occasionally directors do this," says Motion Picture Daily, "but the instances come along infrequently."

The business of getting right out in the field to learn the exhibition slant is something Hollywood has neglected almost entirely. Every now and then an important studioite hits for the key spots and the results of these visits in extra publicity and good-will should by all means encourage much more of the same.

Yes, we know that the demands of production leave little time for much more than a breather between pictures. But a plan by which a definite and regular personal liaison could be maintained between the men who make the pictures and the men who exhibit them certainly should be encouraged.

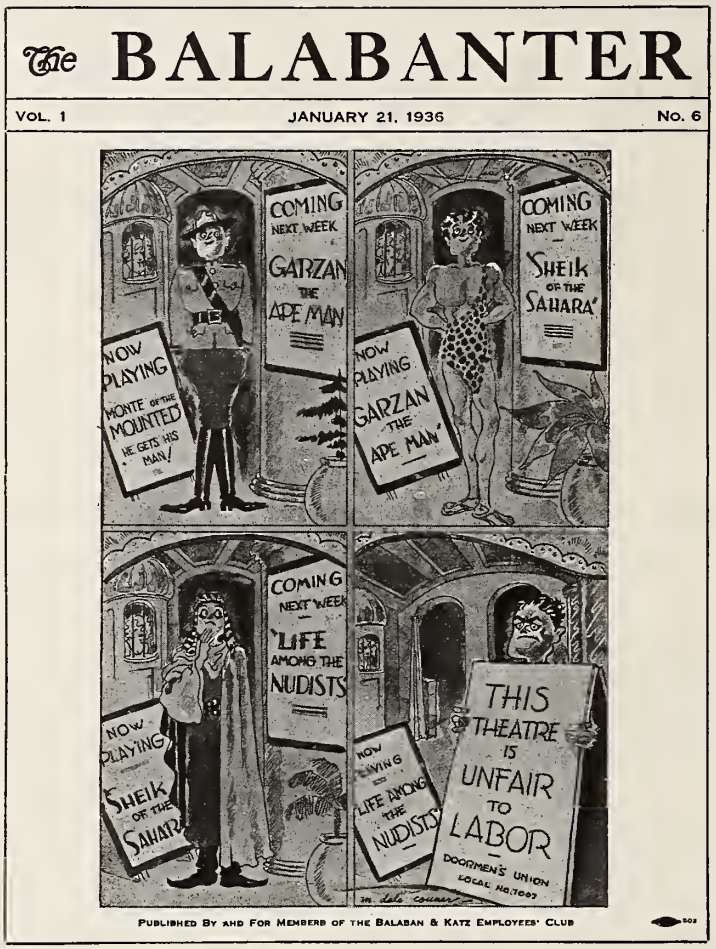
THE "DON'T-GIVE-A-HOOTS"

Returned recently from a vacation trip, Larry Woodin, of the Arcadia, Wellsboro, Pa., writes on various matters, laying particular stress upon the bad sound he discovered. Sez Larry:



"It seems that many theatres have forgotten a piece of sound equipment known as the fader. . . . Some theatres were putting out sound that would fairly make you think some blasting was going on backstage. Others gave the impression that the speech was being strained through a dirty cloth.

"Looking around some of those ace houses, I found as a rule, the reason. Disinterested employees who caught the first show and were not paying any attention. . . . "

There is little that needs be added to Woodin's observations. But even worse than poor sound or poor anything in the theatre is indifferent personnel. "Don't-give-a-hoots" on the payroll can make a good manager look awfully bad.

Dance and Music Tieups Top "Fleet" Opening

Several space-grabbing tie-ups and stunts engineered by the publicity departments of RKO Radio Pictures and the Radio City Music Hall helped get "Follow the Fleet" away to a flying start.

Close cooperation with the committee in charge of this year's Texas Centennial brought Ginger Rogers a commission as Admiral in the Texas Navy from Governor James V. Allred. In honor of Admiral Rogers a large delegation of prominent Texans attended the opening, with organist Richard Leibert playing the Texas official song while the state flag was carried to the stage. Miss Rogers' commission was on display in the lobby.

Dance features were highlighted when 500 dancing teachers gathered at the Hotel Astor for the first national meeting of the National Dance League. The new "Fleet Dance," a modern swing rhythm based on the "Let Yourself Go" number was demonstrated. This dance will be shown at dance conventions all over the country.

Both campaigns brought much newspaper space, locally and nationally. In addition, New York music stores featured "Fleet" records (see photo) in their windows and Macy's ran newspaper ads featuring fashions worn by Ginger Rogers.

Richmond's "Thanks" Contest

Newspapers aided Bill Richmond, Lincoln Park Theatre, Lincoln Park, Ill., on a "Thanks a Million" contest for which passes were awarded those submitting best letters for some deed or thought expressing the saying "Thanks a Million." Entire staff was instructed week ahead to use the "thanks" slogan. With a highway running past the theatre there is a "Slow" caution sign on road and Bill secured permission to paint "thanks a million" next to it.

Shock Stuff Builds "Road Gang" Opening

Pointed to stop 'em and shock 'em was the drive by Irv Windisch and Zeb Epstin that accompanied the opening and advance publicity of Warner Bros.' "Road Gang" date at the New York Strand, special efforts being made to dig up prison equipment with which the picture deals.

With this in view, cooperation was obtained from detective magazine which supplied police circulars of wanted criminals and also loaned expert on criminology to assist in planning the prison displays, such as leg irons, steel neck collars, bull whips, etc., shown in the lobby. Advance also featured 12-foot reproduction of torture machine and life-sized whipping post.

For street bally, private ambulance was planted out front opening day with uniformed interne, idea being that picture's strength caused theatre to prepare for emergencies. Police cars not in the know were reported to have stopped to find out what was wrong.

Sign Carries Largest Letters

Special heralds of the display ad in the "believe it or not" manner with drawings of torture scenes in the picture were distributed and what was said to be the largest illuminated letters used on a Broadway sign were used on the south corner of the building.

Front, illustrated on a following page, was decorated in black and white with red for contrast. Against solid white, title was built of block letters, black flittered top with shadowed sides. Black and white cutout enlargements were built across bottom of arch with black cutout links in chain form making border around arch.

In center was 12-foot display moved from lobby. It was constructed of two-by-four timbers treated, scaffold, with rope nooses, in which hung by wrist was cutout enlargement of character in picture with toes resting on wooden cutout half section of barrel.

Barr's "Blood" Preview

An advance preview of "Captain Blood" was held by Stan Barr, Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., to which leading locals were invited. As an added plug to impress playdate on preview audience, special "personal endorsement" trailer was run. Heralds were distributed house to house and residents listed in telephone book were called and given picture plug.

FEBRUARY JUDGES ARE ANNOUNCED

Serving on the Committee of Judging for February are the following industry executives:

Harry Thomas, First Division Pictures, Arthur Mayer, Rialto Theatre, N. Y., and Hy Daab, Columbia Pictures.

Decision of the judges will be announced in issue of March fourteenth.

Many Slants Click On "Music" Advance

Reports of early dates on "Music Goes Round" from various sectors indicate a lot of activity on the picture, including personal appearances of Farley and Riley, who authored the song that started it all.

Much publicity was obtained for the New York opening at the Capitol by using songwriters in tieup ads and for different picture breaks. They signed safety pledges in a newspaper traffic drive, were fingerprinted at police headquarters and posed with new model radio set for half-page co-op ad. The boys also appeared at department stores to plug "kazoo" novelties, these featured in window along with picture credits. The Lucky Loop cards and emblems were distributed round town and of course music stores tied in strongly.

Theatre featured an animated front with display of colored bulbs in red, blue and green. Motivated by a generator and motor, bulbs passed each other at points mathematically figured by means of governors so as to give optical illusions of geometric designs.

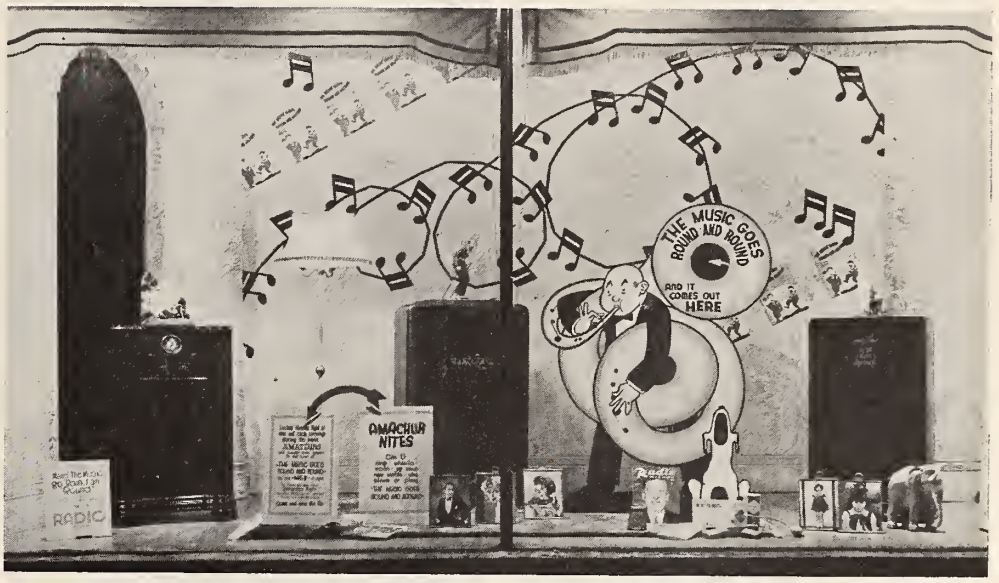
Adaptation of this is suggested with three bulbs, red, blue and green, each attached to as many armature extensions attached to metal disc which is attached to motor. Armatures can be set eccentrically so that bulbs will pass each other as motor turns disc. Governors control speeds of disc, causing difference in centrifugal force, swinging bulbs in and out at will.

Star at Miami Beach

Star of the picture, Harry Richman, vacationing in Miami, was called upon to make appearance at the "Hollywood" premiere put on by Sonny Shepherd at Wometco's new Lincoln, Miami Beach. Celebs were on hand, lobby broadcast was arranged and all the usual fixin's planted for the premiere.

"Richman Day" at the Hialeah racetrack was put on with handicap named after title. Planes carrying banners flew over city and bannered boat equipped with loud speaker sailed off the beach.

Adams Sponsors Amateurs



Up in Regina, Canada, Manager J. C. Adams, Metropolitan, promoted double-truck with top daily to build up amateur contest based on the song, entrants doing their stuff to the tune, either singing, dancing, whistling or playing instrument.

Eliminations were held each night of week starting Monday with finals on Saturday. Nightly and final prizes, promoted, were given, winners selected by audience applause. Adams also planted a number of excellent windows plugging the event, one being reproduced above.

Pollock Works Fast

Receiving notice of his booking on a Thursday, by the following day Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, had co-op page lined up and newspaper contests planted, writes Ed Rosenbaum, cooperating Columbia exploiteer, who voted Les a bow for his work.

One of the contests arranged by Pollock was a parody idea with readers invited to submit new lyrics to fit the music of the song hit. Cash and tickets were given.

Fain's "Glory" Contest

Merchants in Roanoka, Ala., tied in with A. E. Fain, Ritz Theatre, in his Dawn Glory Contest, donating complete wardrobe to the winner. Advance stories with entry blanks were run in papers, fifteen girls selected and audience chose Miss Glory. Beauty parlor and dress shop devoted window display to picture and a Dawn Glory dance party was held on stage.

Melniker's Giant "Pagans" Theatre Front Cutout

Excursion Rates Arranged By Melniker On "Pagans"

That was a heap of smart exploitation and advertising arranged by Manager Eddie Melniker and his staff at Loew's Grand, Atlanta, for "Last of the Pagans" that took such forms for instance as tiein with railroads and busses for special round-trip rates to town, the transportation companies planting jumbo cards with theatre copy in all stations within 50 mile area.

Also ahead, imprinted money wrappers were used at theatre, these placed around new dollar bills and given in change when necessary. Ed got aboard local safety drive by distributing strips with tiein copy to be inserted on windshields. And on same idea had gals give these out from decorated float.

Bakery inserted lettered slips in bread packages, slips carrying single letters. For each complete set spelling out "Loew's" passes were given—the key letter "L" printed only 150 times. Bakery trucks carried banners on the tieup and chain grocery tabloid printed serial, this plugged in all stores.

Typewriter Company Cooperation

Hookin with typewriter company brought big windows and Melniker decked out truck with foliage, carrying typewriters and tables. Six typists alternated at machines typing messages plugging picture and machine, and giving these to crowds at every stop. Another neat gal stunt was a group in window near theatre calling subscribers about the date.

Front featured large trellis covered with foliage with title in four-foot letters. Outside display was something new to Atlanta, a giant cutout forty-foot high (see photo left).

Eddie does a regular weekly theatre broadcast and used this exclusively ahead for the opening with Hawaiian orchestra to enhance atmosphere. Same crew was used in window ahead and opening night music amplified over house p.a. system.

Newspaper ads, publicity, billing and other sound slants were in keeping and Melniker credits Ed Pentecost, Walter Meier, J. Bramlett and Sid Smith for cooperation on the campaign.

Lucky Number Contest Used on "Obsession"

Before Al Beckerich left Warner's Hipp, Cleveland for the Albany zone, he and publicist Mort Goodman on "Obsession" distributed numbered blotters in all downtown offices. Each day during engagement easel was placed in lobby (see photo) on which were listed lucky numbers. To those presenting blotters with corresponding numbers, tickets were awarded.

Window and counter displays were secured in downtown bookstores, still displays in public libraries and streamers planted in drug and grocery stores with toilet soap endorsement by Irene Dunne. For his direct mail coverage, postcards containing cut of operating table with picture copy were sent to doctors and nurses.

Rose Welcomes Rubinoff

Charlie Rose, Smalley's Theatre, Norwich, N. Y. saw to it that the town turned out to give the proper welcome to Rubinoff when he made a recent personal at the theatre. An old violin search was planted in papers with the maestro personally examining the "relics." Special letters were mailed to all musical societies, cards were tacked on all bulletin boards and store windows carried "Welcome Rubinoff" streamers and house staff and restaurant cashiers all wore imprinted chest ribbons. Bill Green assisted on the campaign.

Merchants Aid Moyer On "Dangerous"

This recent cold blast served to gain a little break for Charlie Moyer at the State in Hanover, Pa. when he played "Dangerous" and planted cards around streets reading "Dangerous, watch the ice and see." Moyer also tied up druggists who used cards in window with copy: "It's dangerous to have prescriptions carelessly filled, we employ experts, also don't miss, etc. etc." Department stores cooperated using "dangerous to buy elsewhere" slogans, and police department did their part by telling pedestrians it was dangerous to cross against lights.

Binstock Sells Merchants On "Littlest Rebel"

Through tieup with cooperating merchant, Paul Binstock, Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, for "Littlest Rebel" promoted 3,000 trick checks made payable to Shirley Temple, each for 1,000,000 hugs and kisses. On signature line, kids were asked to fill in their names and addresses. Checks bore lucky numbers and to children holding these promoted prizes were given after drawing on stage. Left corner of check carried merchant's ad and reverse, theatre and picture copy.

Accompanying photo shows atmospheric foyer display constructed by house staff. For lighting effects, cannons had red lights on flashers and were connected to radiator steamline which brought "smoke" from the cannons. Large flood light from chandelier with red gelatin flashing on and off gave bombshell effect.

Temple rulers—"make it a rule to see"—were distributed to children, as were bookmarks in schools and local libraries. Jumbo telegram from Shirley were planted in various stores, cooperating merchant paying for services of costumed girl in lobby who handed out circulars one week ahead. For goodwill Paul arranged for children at local orphanage to attend showing, each kiddie presented with candy and Temple photo.

Hartnett Ties "Thanks" To Merchants Sales Day

William Hartnett, Embassy Theatre, Waltham, Mass., for "Thanks a Million," made a very satisfactory tieup with the Retail Merchants' Committee of local Chamber of Commerce in connection with an annual "sales day" held there.

Ten days ahead Bill secured front page announcements that the major awards had been placed on display in his lobby. Cooperating stores carried displays of photos and picture mention, bulletins leaving Chamber headquarters suggested that merchants plug the picture and Hartnett netted still further breaks through giveaways at theatre of automobile which was on display in foyer (see photo).

Birmingham Theatre Sponsors Largest "Mickey Mouse" Club

110,000 Attended Special Shows for Members in 1935, Says Round Tabler

by GEORGE J. NEALEANS

Manager, Alabama Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

Acceptance by President and Mrs. Roosevelt of membership in his "Mickey Mouse" Club is one of the many accomplishments credited to George Nealeans—known as Grandpa Mickey Mouse to thousands of children and their elders—in building up what is said to be the largest club of children in the world.

There are over 10,000 youngsters listed on the membership books of Nealean's club reported the most wide-awake association in Birmingham. The juniors join in to put across worthwhile activities of every kind and their efforts are recognized in the local press which also includes club and theatre credits in all stories and there is plenty of "Mouse" publicity.

Nealeans in these columns explains the history, method of operation and results of this nationally-known juvenile organization.

Many theatre managers have false impressions of kiddie clubs. They look upon these Saturday morning shows as a nuisance; too much bother to handle several thousand or even several hundred kids once a week.

"Why do I want a bunch of kids every Saturday morning? You can't control them. They are into everything from the rest rooms to the projection booth and by the time the regular matinee opens the house is a wreck. I should go through all of that for a few dollars!" a theatre manager once said.

He was half right and half wrong. An improperly managed and controlled club may be a nuisance. As for the kids being unruly I can't say that we have had this experience to any great extent. Children must be handled as children, not as adults. They must be understood for what they are and treated as such.

So that excuse is just an alibi that doesn't hold water.

We feel sure that we have the outstanding theatre kiddie club in the entire nation. I have tried to learn if there is another club larger than ours and have yet to locate one. The club was organized on June 9, 1933, with only 183 charter members. Today on our books we have over 10,000 members, each listed numerically, alphabetically and according to birthdays. For the calendar year of 1935 our attendance has been:

Children under 12 years of age, 82,402; children over 12 years and adults, 27,744.

After three years of operation, the reactions of the club may be summarized as follows:

Goodwill of the public toward the theatre. Parents realize that we are taking an interest in their children and providing a type of entertainment which meets with the approval of the most exacting person.

The club is self-sustaining.

We have carried the name of the current picture into several thousand homes each week. Don't think those kids don't talk about the picture to the folks at home.

That we are building for the future is just another angle. We are giving the children an elementary education in the theatre, stirring up interest in stars and plays. In just a few years those children will be having dates. Will they attend the theatre or will they go to roadhouses?

Inasmuch as we encourage children to appear on the stage we are developing culture and talent.

A special program is arranged every Saturday morning for members. It runs from 10 till 11 o'clock, when the regular show starts. The members are allowed to remain for the regular feature picture.

What do we do to amuse the kids for an hour? That is one of our simplest problems. Out of an enrollment of over 10,000 we find hundreds of kids with unusual talents for dancing, singing, etc. However, no one is restricted from the program because of little talent. A democratic system is one of our strongest points.

Any child who has a desire to entertain will always be accorded a place on a program. The demand for places on the program is so great that a child is not permitted to appear but once each two months. The programs, which are all rehearsed, are filled for months ahead.

Added to the stage program is always news of interest on outside contests. There is always a stage contest, i.e., pie eating, chewing gum pulling, milk drinking, etc., with prizes for winners. A song leader always finds the thousands ready to sing to song slides accompanied by the organ.

It might be added that teachers of dancing schools here and in adjoining towns are particularly anxious to stage their recitals at the Mickey Mouse Club, for they not only reach a larger audience than they ordinarily would at a private recital but they receive publicity on the radio and in the newspapers.

We have found that with a large membership we have been able to obtain publicity tie-ups and newspaper space almost when we ask for it. For example, we have a column in the local Sunday paper devoted exclusively to the club. One must be alert, though, in digging up stunts and see that they are properly put over. Even more diligence than that which goes to put over a stunt with a regular show must be used for the kiddie club.

Merchants have co-operated with us splendidly and they are reaping the rewards for this co-operation. Birmingham stores working with us hand in hand have moved at least $35,000 worth of Mickey Mouse merchandise.

This figure is still more important when it is realized that before the Mickey Mouse Club was organized there was not a piece of Mickey Mouse merchandise in any of the department stores here. The advertising manager of one store told me he credited the club with moving every piece of goods of this type sold by the store.

Through merchants and manufacturers we have given away all kinds of merchandise from dresses to bicycles. I'd estimate the number of gifts and souvenirs at more than one-half million, and the gifts were not all of the trivial variety. Some were souvenirs, but some ran in value from $50.00 to $100.00.

Birthday Cakes Given Members

We have an agreement with a large bakery to give a birthday cake to each member, and a dairy delivers a pint of milk also to each member having a birthday. The only requirement to be entitled to the cake or milk card is that the child must attend the meeting on the Saturday of the week in which his birthday falls. In 1935 alone we gave away 3,620 cakes and milk cards.

All of the merchandise given to the kiddies has been without cost to the theatre. Merchants and manufacturers have come to us and asked for the opportunity of working with us.

One of the ace stunts of all was secured when I went to Warm Springs, Ga., while President and Mrs. Roosevelt were taking one of their vacations. I secured the memberships of President and Mrs. Roosevelt in the club. I consider this one of our outstanding stunts. The local papers gave us a good play.

When a celebrity passes through town a membership card is presented, if possible, and a picture made of the presentation if possible. In addition to the Roosevelts, we have among our honor roll the following members: Dorothy Stone, Robert Wardlow (young giant), Celia Villa, daughter of Pancho Villa, Shirley Temple, Bobby Clark of

More On Nealeans' Club

Clark and McCullough, Fifi D'Orsay, Virginia Reid, RKO screen actress, Amos and Andy, city commissioners and members of police and fire department, heads of department stores, newspaper publishers, etc.

Another trump in exploitation was the endorsement of the club by the Visual Educational Committee of the Parent-Teachers Association. This is one of the hardest groups to secure a tie-up with and I consider their endorsement of the club a real honor. We also have the endorsement of the Department of Child Welfare of the State of Alabama.

Schools Cooperate Closely

We are getting close co-operation from the schools, something no other organization of this type has been able to do. We secured this co-operation by encouraging members to study and work hard in classes. Each year we award a gold medal to the boy and the girl graduating from grammar school, who at the end of the current semester can show the highest average record for all subjects studied over the longest period of time, accompanied by a 50-word essay on the value of the contest. Two silver medals are awarded for second place.

We encourage Sunday School attendance, traffic rule observation and safety, fire prevention, athletic prowess, sewing, writing, etc.

Station Broadcasts All Meetings

A local radio station has run a line to the theatre and each Saturday morning picks up the meeting as a sustaining program and sends out the name of the feature picture, the entire program and club news throughout the state and into thousands of homes in the Birmingham district. All of this is free to the theatre.

Once a theatre has built up a club, the publicity comes naturally. This doesn't imply that the club will carry itself after reaching gigantic stages, it will not. The director must be after new stunts, new ideas, new contests constantly. That means without a break of even one week. The theatre must be ever alert for timely tie-ups with merchants, etc. It requires a great deal of effort and planning to keep so large a club growing and interesting, but the end fully justifies all effort.

Mrs. Roosevelt and George Nealeans

Officials of the Wilby-Kincey interests of which the Alabama Theatre is a unit have expressed themselves as being pleased with the local club. Managers from throughout the South have been here studying our methods in order to return to their respective cities and carry out the program there.

We have no additional expense in operating the hour's show. The talent is free and plentiful. We have a good size crowd each week and when they see the feature picture they go back to their parents and tell them what they saw. I'd say, roughly speaking, that we reach 8,000 homes each week with publicity, through radio and newspapers and the club attendance.

Wedding Ceremony Contest Sells "Bride" for Davis

C. W. Davis, Rockingham Theatre, Reidsville, N. C., offered guest tickets for "Bride Comes Home" to those submitting best idea of how a wedding ceremony should be conducted. Contest ran in daily with cuts showing Colbert about to take the fatal step. Another teaser used by Davis was insertion of ad in paper, offering prizes to any girls who would propose to their sweeties on the stage of the theatre.

Local auto dealer loaned bannered car in which girl and boy rode about town, stopping at street corners and distributing autographed photos of Colbert. Title was imprinted on "do not disturb" hotel cards with cast and playdates and gas company devoted window to display of frigidaires tying in with picture.

"MOUSE" MAGAZINE HAS NEW EDITOR

Succeeding Mickey, himself, as Editor-in-Chief of the Mickey Mouse Magazine, Donald Duck now takes over, according to an announcement from publisher Hal Horne.

"He knew what was coming," stated Donald, "and he quit before he got fired."

Warner "Pasteur" Drive Clicks In Two Cities

Campaign that covered thoroughly openings of "Pasteur" at the Branford, Newark and Stanley, Jersey City, was handled by Bob Paskow, Warner Theatres New Jersey ad head, who shot out letters on the date to all worthwhile organizations. At the Stanley, Bob worked with Manager Rudy Kuehn.

Among groups contacted were top men's and women's clubs, doctors, nurses and hospital superintendents, the latter group invited to special screening. Preview for the Branford date was held two days ahead for principals and members of state Finer Film Federation. Papers broke stories and photos on the latter event.

Heralds with the "you might not be alive today" copy were distributed in downtown sections, stop catchline copy in lobby setpieces, blowups and teaser trailers well ahead in 50 of the circuit's neighborhood houses. Window cards were planted in chain drug stores.

Health Head Endorses Picture

Postal Telegraph was tied in on Valentine Day—the premiere at the Stanley—with theatre stickers on all outgoing messages and the emergency seat cards were distributed to doctors and nurses. Newspaper topper was endorsement of picture by Jersey City Health Commissioner, and also unusual was story and photos of Newark resident treated in Paris by Pasteur for dog-bite in 1885.

Libraries aided by furnishing list of books on Pasteur on shelves. Bookmarks were printed to cover all branches and distributed in each outgoing book.

Ralston Goes Pirate

Out in San Bernardino, Cal., Howard Ralston at the Ritz went pirate for "Captain Blood," placing large chest in his foyer filled with brass utensils, gold coins and jewelry. Ushers wore pirate costumes, pennants hung under marquee with large skull and crossbones and treasure maps with theatre copy were distributed from theatre one week ahead.

ANIMATION. Perry Spencer, Loew's Metropolitan Theatres zone publicist, used this "Strike Me Pink" display at Loew's Paradise and Fairmont. Cantor's legs moved up and down as in a dance.

Police Department Aids Irwin on "Obsession"

George Irwin, Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, Minn., contacted local police department for safety tieup on a sequence in "Magnificent Obsession" which shows penalty for careless driving.

Special preview was held for stenogs, clerks and newspaper critics, the latter were asked for personal comments which were published. Official paper of local church carried story on picture with commendation.

George's Good-Will Builder

What Doug George, Warner's Parker, Darby, Pa. reports to be an excellent goodwill builder is a form letter he mails out to all school teachers, stressing historical, geographical or other educational value contained in his current picture. Doug has also secured permission from school supervisors in four surrounding towns for teachers to make announcements in classes and distribute heralds.

KNOW THIS ONE? Electric bulb in flower pot has false plug glued to top. Real plug is in bottom and wire runs down through the hole. That's how, says Cleveland Warner-ite Mort Goodman.

Sparrow Plants Contests On "Modern Times"

Through tieup with local merchant, Allan Sparrow, Loew's State, Norfolk, Va., planted a full page ad with greater portion devoted to large cut of Chaplin in "Modern Times" and a jig saw puzzle contest in which pieces had to be assembled to form duplicate of cut used in ad.

For school ballyhoo large figure of Chaplin bearing a target in the form of the star and title of picture was taken around to schools. Children threw darts in effort to "make the hit of Modern Times," winners receiving guest tickets.

Model T Ford was driven about town by Chaplin impersonator and stalled at strategic spots, where operator attracted crowds by amusing antics.

Prominents Attend "Zero" for Allen

Real "Hollywood" was premiere of "Ceiling Zero" held by Wally Allen at the Keeney, Elmira, N. Y., with officials of local airport and American Airways making personal appearances and talking from stage. Mayor and other local prominents also made addresses and high school band played in front of theatre. Celebrities were introduced over mike hookup in lobby. Appreciation cards were handed out and comments used in following day's ads.

Tabloids with "big plane crash" streamer headline in red were handed out by newsies shouting "Extra" and ads ran in papers calling attention to guest tickets which were dropped from plane circling city.

"Ray" Bally Carries Speaker and Microphone

Constructed inexpensively and suggested for use in different ways is Manager Art Wartha's stunt on "Invisible Ray." Accompanying photo shows bally on the street in outfit appearing to be metal, but Wartha says it was made of cardboard and covered with silver paper to give it that gleam.

Small speaker and "mike" were placed inside and lad doing the bally gave out loud noises to heighten the effect. During evenings, gag was brought into the lobby, where it created quite a bit of excitement.

Mensing's Blotter

Down at the Warner Empress in Owensboro, Ky., Charlie Mensing for his "Wife Versus Secretary" engagement distributed tan blotters printed in red at top of which were instructions to hold blotter to mirror in order to read message which was printed in reverse.

FRONTS, STUNTS AND OTHERWISE

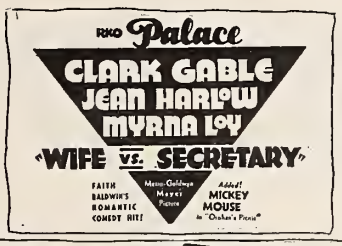
REALISM. The shock slant on "Road Gang" was carried through by Irv Windisch and Zeb Epstin for front on date at the New York Strand. In addition to blowups of ads and prison camp newspaper torture stories, panel showing actual implements of punishment used was also put on display.

MOTOR CARAVAN. Ballyhoo train to be conducted by Earl Collins, special Goldwyn representative, through various western sectors in advance of "Strike Me Pink". Train comprises sound projection unit, public address system, and is painted pink with black trimming and blue lettering.

HEAP MOUTH. Giant blackface painting of Jolson with mouth bordering theatre entrance topped front at Cinema Massino, Palermo, Italy, on "Go Into Your Dance" (entitled "Casino de Paris" over there). Mario Zarna, Warner Bros. Italy manager, cooperated on this highly effective display.

MARX QINTUPLETS. Ushers at Loew's, Harrisburg, were decked out with the Groucho cigar, mustache and eyebrow makeup by Manager Sam Gilman for "Night at the Opera". Another laugh was costumed impersonators of the three Marxes pedaling around town on bannered old-fashioned bicycle.

GHOST PICKETS THEATRE. For "Ghost Goes West", Al Lippe, publicity head, Loew's State, Newark, N. J., had man dressed as ghost parade, carrying sign that theatre was unfair to organized ghosts. Lippe also rounded up a flock of new model bannered Lincolns for additional publicity.



RED HEADS MARCH. On tieup to plug "Redheads On Parade", Manager John T. Floore, Empire, San Antonio, Tex., dug up this bevy of titian-locked lassies, promoted beauty parlor treatments for the group and then marched gals to the theatre. That's N. Schwartz, W. O'Donnell and John in the rear.

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

acts as assistant manager of the Ritz Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, and while he tells us with his application that we shall hear from him, we are still waiting and nothing has been forthcoming. How about letting us in on how you put your shows over at the Ritz, Ventola?

is the owner and manager of the Liberty Theatre, North Wilkesboro, N. C., the first member from your city to join our ranks, Anderson, so we are going to count on you to keep us informed of how you keep the shekels coming into your box office.

manages the Capitol Theatre, Kamloops, B. C., Canada, and starts his membership off by sending along a Lobby Laff. Well, that's a good beginning and we hope it will be followed up with other contributions.

manages the Dillsburg Theatre, Dillsburg, Pa., and is fairly new to showbusiness, having started as usher at the Strand Theatre in Steeltown and then his present assignment. Those are the only houses Waltz has been with and he promises to be a live member.

is at the Prospect Theatre, Bronx, N. Y., in the capacity of Assistant manager and he's certainly close enough to Club headquarters to drop in and say hello. Remember on that next day off, make it a point to stop and get acquainted; we like to meet our members personally.

managing the Park Theatre in Dexter, Maine, is the first member to "jern up" from that fair city, so it's going to be up to him to keep us posted on what's what, so that we can publicize it in our pages for the rest of the boys to read about. Can we depend on you Fred?

is in Brooklyn, N. Y., managing the Grand Theatre there. Five short years ago Mack was usher at the Bijou and from there went to the Clinton as chief usher. Later he was transferred to the Apollo under Harry Blinderman and from there assisted Sam Hoffstetter at the New 14th Street Theatre and, incidentally, all club members. When that theatre changed hands Oringer went to the Folly and thence to his present assignment.

is the assistant manager of the Arcade in Springfield, Mass., starting as an usher at the Broadway there, and then to front house department, Paramount Publix. From there Larry went into the field as assistant manager and on to his present assignment.

WILLIAM KLEIN to Mr. and Mrs. Joe Klein on February 22. Weight, 6 lbs. 6 oz. Daddy manages the Sunnyside Theatre, Sunnyside, L. I.

CHARLES HARDY EDWARDS

started in showbusiness at a tender age selling popcorn, after which he sold tickets. Charlie says his earliest recollections of this enticing game was his own show put on in a tent made of sacks with a Keystone machine and kids in the neighborhood for his patrons. Later, some time later we take it, Edwards became projectionist of a theatre and held this job until 1933, when he was made manager of a house in Gadsden, Ala., and we now find him holding down the managerial reins of the Capitol in Decatur.

lost no time joining the club as soon as he was made manager of his own theatre, the Regent, in Norfolk Downs, Quincy, Mass., having been promoted to that job from assistant at the Strand in Dorchester. Five years prior to that were spent at the Metropolitan in Boston as doorman, chief doorman, treasurer and assistant.

manages the Rosetta Theatre in Miami, Fla., for the Wometco Theatres. That makes that particular circuit tied up about 100% so far as the Round Table Club is concerned. As you have doubtless noticed, Burton, your theatres down there are well represented in our section, so how about helping swell the total with some contributions yourself?

is assistant manager of the Ritz Theatre, Tifton, Ga., working for Joe Abercrombie, formerly of Sid Graumann's Chinese in Los Angeles. Otis worked as doorman in Barnesville, Ga., assistant operator and chief operator for eighteen months and then over to the Forsythe. Later we find him at the Regent in Miami in the same capacity and then to his present house.

comes to us proposed by Maury Ashmann, an old and active member of the club. Peter manages the Capitol Theatre in Brooklyn and is close enough to us to drop in and get acquainted. Next day off, be sure to come over and let's hear from you from this point on.

is the manager of the Leonia Theatre in Leonia, N. J. just across the river and that theatre has been well represented in our pages with previous managers there, so here's hoping Bill will keep in touch.

acts as the assistant manager of the Ritz Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa. and that's one town that is sure showminded and in constant touch with this department. Here's hoping that between you and your superior, we'll be hearing what's going on at the Ritz.

New York Code Will Reduce Restrictions

PERMISSION to build skyscrapers over theatre auditoriums, and to eliminate aisles perpendicular to the stage, are rather radical changes in the New York City building regulations which are practically assured enactment with passage of a new code by the Board of Aldermen. According to Alderman Edward J. Sullivan, chairman of the committee which now is steering the code through legislative processes, final action is likely to be taken no later than April.

The new regulations, which will be welcome to theatre owners and architects, is expected to act as something of a spur to theatre construction in New York City. Their importance may be regarded as in a sense national, inasmuch as the New York code has always served as more or less of a pattern for similar regulations in other cities.

Fundamental changes in construction methods and the development of safer materials for both structural elements and decoration, account for much of the willingness of the municipal authorities to reduce the restrictions, some of which have been called absurd for a long time. The Merchants Association, acting under the chairmanship of John Lowry, began organized efforts for a new code about eight years ago, and new proposals were formally presented in 1932. The code now submitted, upon which open public hearings have closed, represents substantial amendments to the original proposals.

The ban on the erection of apartments and commercial structures over auditoriums long has been an obstacle to the development of theatre enterprises, since no income could be derived from vertical area over the major part of a theatre building. From the lifting of this restriction is expected the greatest impetus to theatre construction in New York.

The provision affecting aisles legalizes the plan in general use in Europe. Space between rows would be increased to a degree permitting easy passage in front of chairs, and access to seats would thus be across the house from passages along the side. While this necessitates a fewer number of rows, less seating area is taken up by aisles. The new code, of course, would not require such a seating plan—the present aisle arrangements, with no more than 14 seats to a row, would still be permitted under the new code.

Another important change proposed would effect a saving in space which the existing code has required for exit area. Instead of 8-foot open courts on each side of the auditorium for emergency exits leading to fire escapes, such passage through enclosed fireproof exits reached by open balconies would be permitted.

The new code also would allow extension of the stage apron 15 feet (this may be helpful to picture houses presenting an intimate type of stage show), and further removes the ban on the storage of scenery beneath the stage.

Greater Safety Sought As Building Increases

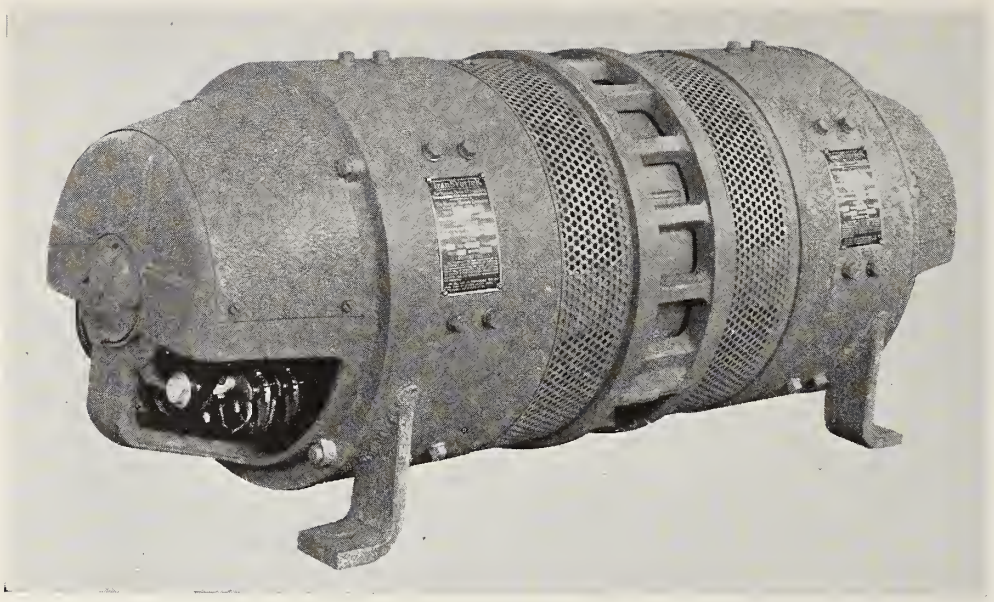
A REVIVAL of theatre building and remodeling in Iowa has suggested to authorities of that State a possible need for a revision of regulations covering fire and other hazards. J. Vincent Pyle, State Fire Marshal, is visiting various sections to observe conditions upon which new legislation affecting theatre construction may be based.

The fire marshal's office has displayed considerable interest in a Cedar Rapids ordinance requiring that a fireman be stationed during operating hours in each theatre seating over 1,000. The fireman is selected by the fire chief from among retired members of the department, but he is paid by the theatre at the rate of $85 per month.

New legislation setting up stricter fireproofing requirements for projection rooms, however, is regarded by the Labor Commission as certain. These probably would increase construction costs about 12%.

Drastic Code Changes Opposed in Wilmington

IN WILMINGTON, DEL., theatre interests are alarmed, rather than cheered, by changes to building regulations proposed in that city, and counter proposals have been submitted by Robert L. Mills, head of Warner maintenance in that area, to the Law Committee of the City Council. According to Joseph A. DeFiore, manager of the Park and president of the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, the committee has promised a thorough review of the regulations, which are embodied in a bill that already has been up for second reading.



Independent operators have united with the Warner and Loew organizations in fighting the proposed changes in the local code, not only calling for revision making them less drastic, but demanding that a clause applying them, retroactively, to existing houses, be stricken out. This clause would of course affect replacement and remodeling programs being planned for many Wilmington theatres, and compel extensive revamping of others.

One of the regulations proposed would require all chairs to be at least 20 inches wide. Another stipulates that each aisle shall lead to an exit, or to a cross-aisle leading to an exit. To provide for the proposed aisle arrangement in existing theatres would of course necessitate expensive structural changes in many instances, while replacement amounting substantially to complete reseating would have to be undertaken by practically all Wilmington houses if the 20-inch chair requirement were to apply retroactively.

It is, in fact, this imposition of the new specifications upon existing theatres which is the center of the attack. Most of the proposals call for conditions required by building codes in many cities.

A FRONT OF GRANITE AND GLASS

■ The sketch on the opposite page is an architect's rendering of a design for a new theatre about to be placed in construction at Teaneck, N. J. The front construction is finished in cast granite, composed of the elements of natural glass, but cast instead of cut, with consequent control of coloration, lower cost and ease of application. The design is dominated by a tower built of Pyrex glass construction units. The marquee is frankly a double-face sign affording sufficient space for changeable letters, yet limited in size so as to allow an unobstructed view of the tower. The tower is translucent except for narrow steel framing members. Illumination is from within, changing color effects alternating with moving shadows. Teaneck is essentially a residential community suburban to New York City, located just over the George Washington bridge. The theatre, which is being erected by Max Aaronson of New York, will seat 1,000. Ben Schlanger is the architect.

The Hertner "Universal" Transverter newly developed for varied arc needs.

One of these, affecting aisle widths, does, however, impose greater restrictions than usual in that no exception is made as to the size of the auditorium. In New York, for example, theatres seating no more than 600 can have a width of only 3 feet the full length of the aisle. The proposed requirement in Wilmington is for a width of 3 feet at the first row, with widening at a rate of an inch and a half to five running feet. For side aisles, however, the initial width would have to be only 2½ feet, while the New York code calls for 3 feet here also.

Wilmington exhibitors are demanding that motion picture houses be placed in a separate classification from stage theatres with a separate set of regulations applying to each class.

Generator Developed For Varied Arc Needs

AS A RESULT of a rather interesting situation in which the theatre management wished, in purchasing new current rectification equipment, to provide for a possible change from low-intensity to suprex, the Hertner Electric Company of Cleveland has developed a motor-generator applicable, without other equipment modification, to both types of arcs.

The experiment, for such it was originally, involved a number of circuit houses. Most of them were equipped with small motor-generator sets and low-intensity reflector arc lamps, the lamps operating at from 20 to 25 amperes. The circuit management desired to use existing lamp equipment for the present and increase the projection light by using SRA carbons at 35 amperes, with possible change later to high-intensity, low-voltage lamps. An experimental motor-generator set was built and installed in one of the theatres, and the projectors were equipped with Magnarc lamps. The latter were operated nominally at 45-46 amperes. There were also one effect machine with two arcs, each at 35 amperes and 55 volts; and a spot at 70 amperes and 55 volts. The test resulted in the addition of this type of motor-generator set to the Hertner line, under the trade name of "Universal Transverter."

One phase of the designer's problem was to meet conditions imposed by lamp equipment other than that for motion picture projection. The use of a low-voltage direct current source, while satisfactory for only suprex arcs, makes it impracticable to use a spot lamp on the arc lamps of a dissolver.

Better Theatres is published by the Quigley Publishing Company, Rockefeller Center, New York, every fourth week as Section Two of Motion Picture Herald. Contents copyrighted 1936. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief. George Schutz, editor. Colvin Brown, advertising manager. Ray Gallo, Eastern advertising manager. C. B. O'Neill, Western advertising manager, 624 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago. Hollywood Bureau: Postal Union Life Building: Boone Mancall, manager. London Bureau: Remo House, 310 Regent Street, W.1; Bruce Allan, manager. Other Quigley publications: Motion Picture Daily, Motion Picture Almanac, The Box Office Check-Up.

Several methods were suggested. With static rectifiers and some types of twin-generators it is possible to connect the two sources of low voltage supply in series, operating each suprex arc from its own source of direct current; then when it is desired to operate the spot lamp, the projection arcs are cut off and the one high voltage arc supplied from the two sources in series. But in practically every installation it is desirable to be able to light the spot lamp or effect machine arcs before the projector arcs are cut off. This is not possible with the static rectifiers, or the usual two-generator units. Duplicate low-voltage, flat compound-wound generators have been used, and when connected in series, suitable voltage could be obtained for the suprex arc and the higher-voltage lamps simultaneously.

The "Universal Transverter" consists of two identical 42-volt flat compound-wound generators driven by a squirrel cage induction motor. Mechanically it is a four-bearing, ball bearing unit. The motor is self-contained with bearings on each end of the rotor shaft so that either armature may be removed and the set operated with one armature. Solid bolted flange couplings are used.

The field winding of the two generators are inter-connected in such a way that with the load shifting on one or the other generator, thus changing the operating speed of the motor slightly, constant output voltage is obtained. The two suprex arcs may be operated simultaneously, a spot arc and a suprex arc, several spot arcs with the suprex arc, with both arcs of an effect machine, or a suprex arc and both arcs of the effect machine, all of these combinations being on the assumption that the rating of the generators is not exceeded.

The rating of the Universal generators, due to the possibility of variation in loads, must be made on a different basis from that of a definite duty unit. Each generator of this Transverter has a definite, continuous capacity rating in amperes and volts. The voltage will remain practically constant regardless of the load, within the rating placed on the machine.

Projection room service calls for careful consideration of the number of lamps to be operated simultaneously and the amount of current which each lamp will be using, together with the length of time these varaious pieces of apparatus are used.

The "Universal" is available in several ratings—75 amperes, 42 volts; 100 amperes, 42 volts; 150 amperes, 42 volts; and 200 amperes, 42 volts.

Parking Problems Met In Several New Plans

AMONG NEW theatre projects reported during the last two or three weeks, several emphasize provisions for automobile parking, the importance of which is frequently overlooked despite the fact that the motion picture theatre is patronized somewhat casually and matters of convenience are always factors.

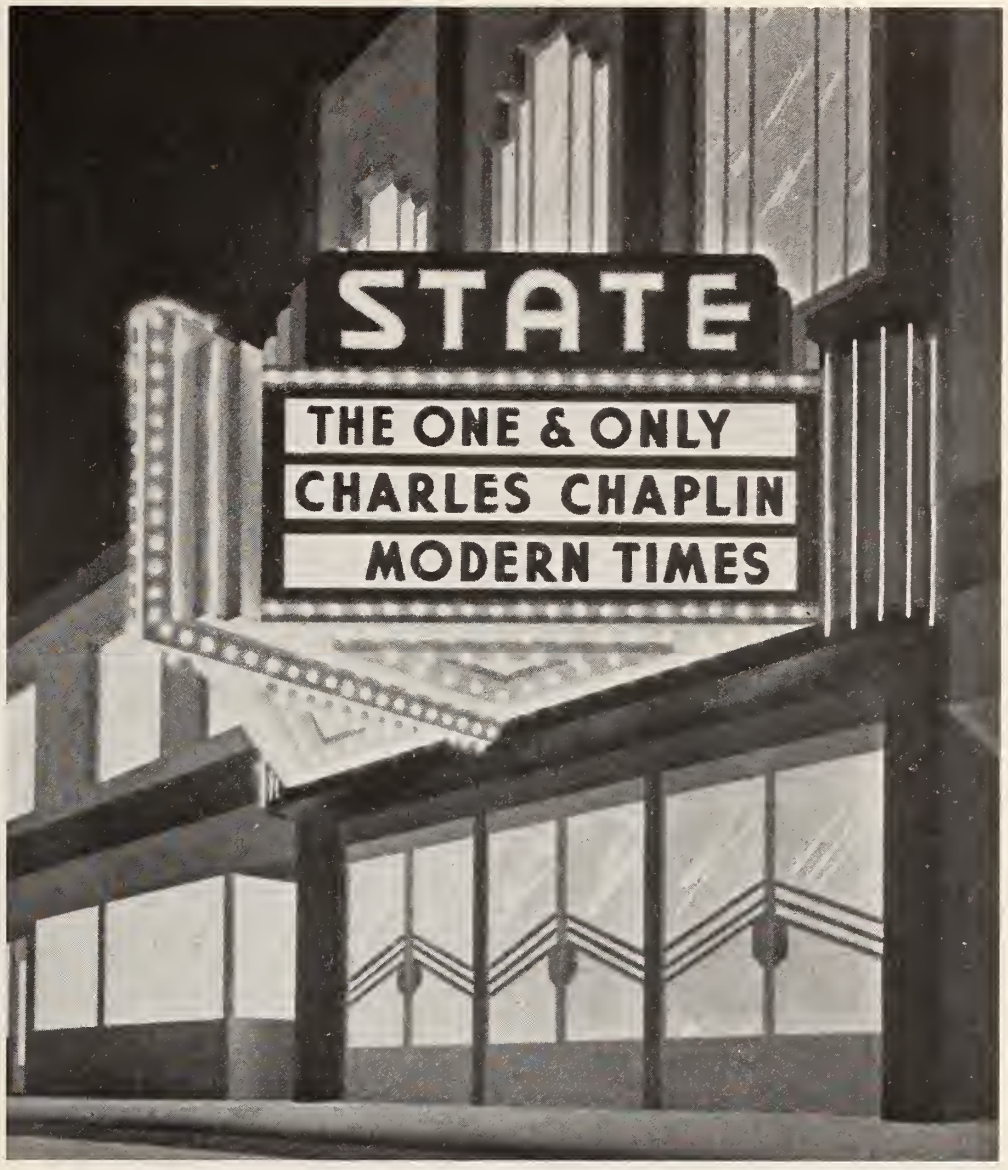
Ample area has been provided for the parking requirements of a theatre to seat at least 1,100 which the Aubrey Realty Company is to erect in Clayton, Mo., county seat of St. Louis County. The house will be operated by the St. Louis Amusement Company. The design will provide for the addition of several hundred more seats later.

Adjoining a theatre to be constructed by the Parkview Amusement Company in Memphis will be space for 500 cars, and it is planned to have theatre attendants in control of parking and traffic.

This theatre, according to plans disclosed by Joseph Hanover, vice president of the owning company, which will also operate the house, will be of striking modern architecture, with decorative treatment being executed in such modern materials as aluminum and stainless steel. Walks and wide driveways will lead to the free parking area in the rear of the building. The capacity will be 1,000.

Karl Hoblitzelle of Dallas, head of the Interstate circuit, promises the largest theatre parking lot in the United States for the convenience of the patrons of Interstate's Tower theatre in Houston, Tex. The lot, which adjoins the Tower, has been purchased for a reported price of $90,000.



Marquee Complete with Sign Work Developed

A MARQUEE, completely constructed at the factory with steel work, sheet metal work, electrical provisions, attraction boards and name sign, has become available as the result of developmental work undertaken some time ago by the Artkraft Sign Company of Lima, Ohio, which had developed a unique type of V-shaped marquee. The equipment is shipped in units and assembled at the job, providing complete entrance effects in one installation (see accompanying illustration).

The marquee and related sign elements are built on a mass production basis for the purpose of reducing costs, and of course there is elimination of installation charges encountered when part of the construction is done locally by several contractors.

All units are standard, having been developed to fit a front of any width greater than 18 feet. Sign elements can include traveling borders, neon borders, name in neon or incandescent lamps, and any spectacular effects.

The marquee provides for the use of Artkraft embossed silhouette letters, several hundred of which are provided with each installation. The flasher is built in. Arrangements can be made for supplying a vertical display designed and built in conjunction with the marquee, as desired.

Sketch of a theatre illustrating the complete-unit Artkraft sign-marquee.

Contract for Cooling Units

THE U. S. Air Conditioning Corporation of Minneapolis, through its New York office, which is in charge of J. J. Ferretti, has entered into an agreement with the Backer Ice Machine Company of Omaha, for the distribution of Baker compressors and condensers in the theatre field. The first installation of the former's Kooler-Aire system using Baker refrigeration units wil be in the Monarch circuit's Palace theatre in Youngstown, Ohio. This will have a capacity of 150 tons of refrigeration. The house seats 2,400. A 50-ton system will be installed in the Lyceum theatre in Bayonne, N. J.

A Kooler-Aire system employing well water for cooling will be installed in the Penn theatre in Newcastle, Ohio, another Monarch house. Water will be pumped from a 120-foot well located on the theatre premises. The system will have a capacity of 40 cubic feet of conditioned air per person.

Add Domestic Glass Lenses

CONDENSING lenses of domestic raw glass have been added to the line of the Fish-Schurman Corporation of New York, which also makes condensing lenses of imported glass.

Seating Company Moves

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD, manufacturers of theatre chairs and other types of furniture, has leased the entire east end of the first floor at No. 1 Park Avenue for its New York offices and salesrooms, moving from the 34th location occupied since nickelodeon days (incidentally, the company is 110 years old). No manufacturing will be done henceforth in New York, but all will be confined to the main factory in Boston.

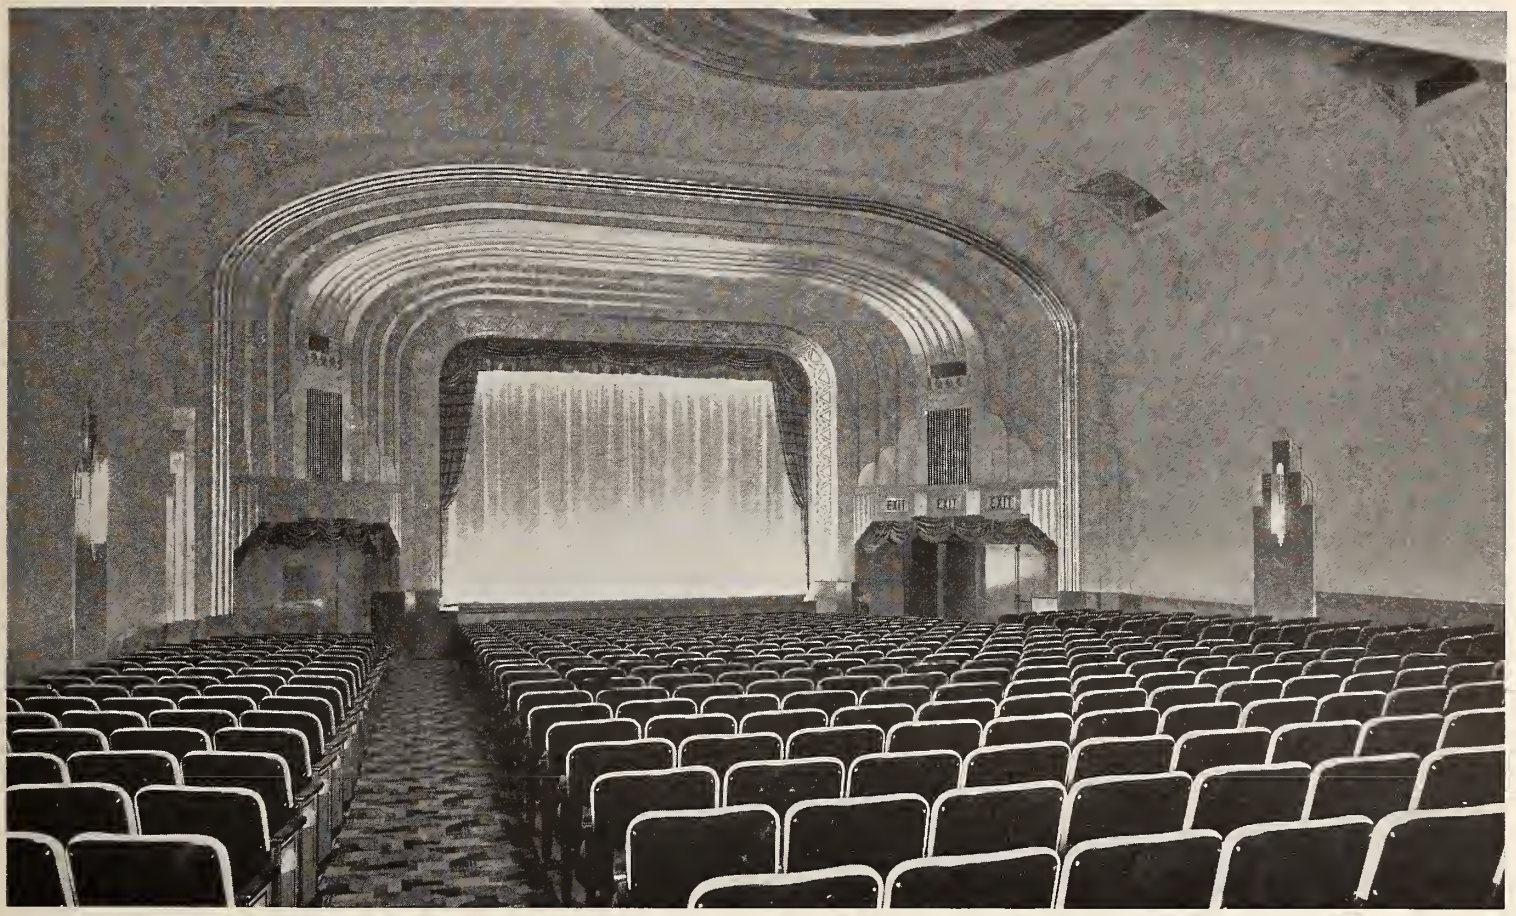
Convention Date Changed

THE ANNUAL convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association will be held June 5-8. Later dates, which had been desired, were impossible, according to Joe Robin, executive secretary, because of inability to get accommodations at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago, where the four-day meeting will take place. Equipment exhibits are planned again this year.

Screen Studies Begun

AT THE FIRST meeting of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers since the return of Harry Rubin to the chairmanship, held a little over a week ago in New York, study of projection illumination and related problems was resumed. The committee also plans further work in equipment standardization and the planning of projection rooms.

Two 600-Seat Neighborhood Theatres



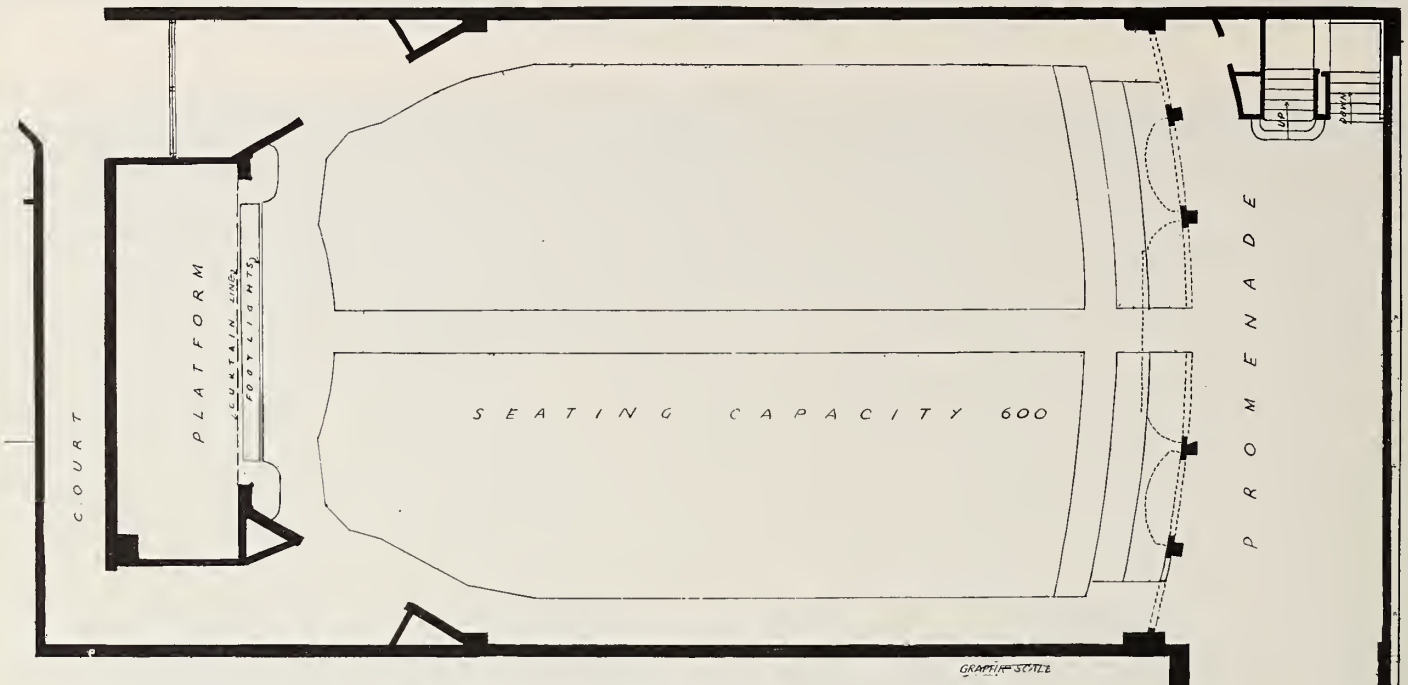
Two views of the Ascot—the auditorium and the sign-like front.

SIXTEEN THEATRES of the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises in New York, flank the Eighth Avenue subway above 160th Street as it takes to the air, threads the Bronx and jostles its way to North and West. Step off at almost any station and a Consolidated box office is not far away. Twelve of the sixteen are big houses, seating two thousand and more, each, directly tapping densely peopled areas. Four are small, new, smartly modern, situated midway between larger units in the circuit, designed and operated for the discriminating minority willing to pay more for better. Two of these are the Surrey and the Ascot, which are hereinafter described.

Policy considerations responsible for the insertion of small, emphatically "deluxe" houses periodically in a sequence of major theatres geographically dominating an area, reflect mature analysis of attendance trend, confidence in the present, and a thoughtful, logically supported faith in the future. Defensive strategy is a factor, naturally, but cultivation of new patronage through program specialization may be a more important one. Flexibility in circuit operation is another. Reduction of gross operating expense, according to Laurence Bolognino, general manager of the circuit, with increase in gross income per population unit, is a prime objective of Consolidated in these property developments.

Designed to Fit an Experiment in Policy

The Surrey auditorium, with walls of acoustic plaster bearing stenciled designs.



The Surrey and the Ascot are 600-seat houses, identical in many details and dimensions, and both are strictly modern. Each is located midway between two of the circuit's larger theatres. Pictures come to the Surrey and Ascot, which change programs twice weekly, immediately following exhibition at the larger houses, which change three times a week, affording one-out-of-three selection. The Surrey and Ascot charge 30c and 35c admission, against 25c at the larger theatres. They draw support from patrons disposed to wait a little while and pay a little more to see what they want to see presented in the intimate, exclusive atmosphere of the smaller houses.

POLICY OF OPERATION

This atmosphere of intimacy and exclusiveness is painstakingly accomplished in design and furnishings of the small theatres and zealously guarded in operation. Appeal is frankly to adult patronage. Programs are arranged with discouragement of juvenile interest in mind. Strict insistence upon enforcement to the letter of New York's law forbidding children under sixteen to attend theatres unless accompanied by parent or guardian, combines with a 15c and 25c juvenile admission price, comparing with a standard 10c scale at the larger houses, to keep child patronage at a minimum, ensure auditorium quiet and lobby orderliness in a neighborhood where these refinements were practically unknown before the opening of these new theatres.

Service standards are attuned to policy. Usherettes are coached in courtesy and are richly but not ostentatiously costumed. Smoking is permitted on the mezzanine lounge, off which men's and women's rooms are located. The screen is comfortably visible from the mezzanine.

Professional people attending the theatres are invited to register at the box office and receive a number; in case of a call, this number is unobstrusively projected upon a surface provided for that purpose at one side of the proscenium. Exploitation methods are in dignified keeping with the policy. No giveaways or similar artificial stimulants of patronage are used at any time.

Actual results of the policy in operation are definitely on the plus side as pertains to the small theatres individually. It is a little early to know how much of the patronage is distinctly new business, but watchful check conducted thus far supports an estimate that out of five persons attending one of the new, small theatres, one is drawn from each of the two larger adjacent theatres, paying from 5c to 10c more into the coffers of the circuit. Three are new customers.

Projected into the future, the plan visualizes a steadily larger, closer grouping of smaller, better theatres, with program specialization functioning in a manner calculated to increase attendance frequency. for example, three 600-seat theatres serving an area currently supporting one 1,800-seat theatre, would offer three grades or types of entertainment, each appealing directly and constantly to the corresponding grade or type of patron. The hypothetical advantage is as that of the rifle over the blunderbuss. Flexibility in the matter of admission scales, with a controllably higher average, is an envisioned potentiality.

THEATRE PLAN AND STYLE

Both the Ascot and the Surrey theatre buildings provide space for commercial tenancy. The Ascot occupies a ground area 51 by 110 feet, with an 18-foot lobby; the Surrey 50 feet by 100, with a 24-foot lobby. The Surrey is fireproof, the Ascot semi-fireproof. Each has a terra cotta front. Each cost about $50,000 to build and $15,000 to equip and furnish. The Ascot was erected under a general contract, and the Surrey under sub-contracts. The architect for both was Eugene De Rosa.

In each theatre the 600 seats are arranged in 24 rows. Scattered chairs are provided in the mezzanine lounge.

Projection rooms in both theatres are 12 feet deep by 20 feet wide by 9 feet high. Each has two Simplex projectors with Brenkert lamphouses. Motor-generators are housed on the same level. The sound system is RCA Photophone. The projection angle is 12°. The interior of both projection rooms is finished in gray. In each house the maximum screen size is 14 x 20 feet and the screen is 18 feet from the first row of seats.

Both theatres are equipped for complete air conditioning of the auditoriums with a high velocity duct system. Mechanical refrigeration is provided, employing York units.

Acoustical plaster is employed throughout the auditorium walls. Subdued three-color concealed lighting is provided in the auditorium. Foot and border-lights and curtain control apparatus make up the stage equipment, for both theatres restrict their programs to screen material. Both prosceniums measure 25 by 20 feet.

Rear of the auditorium and the mezzanine of the Surrey.

DESIGN OF THE ASCOT

Constituting in its entirety a sign unit of maximum advertising emphasis, the front of the Ascot is finished without a marquee. An island box office faced with marble and with rounded, fluted corners is set back only slightly from the sidewalk line. Above Aluminum frames at each side which display title cards and, on occasion, stills, are panels of equal breadth running building-high and decorated with neon tubing set in four parallel, wavy lengths, red against a blue Formica backing.

Immediately above the entrance, four lines of changeable letter space, running the

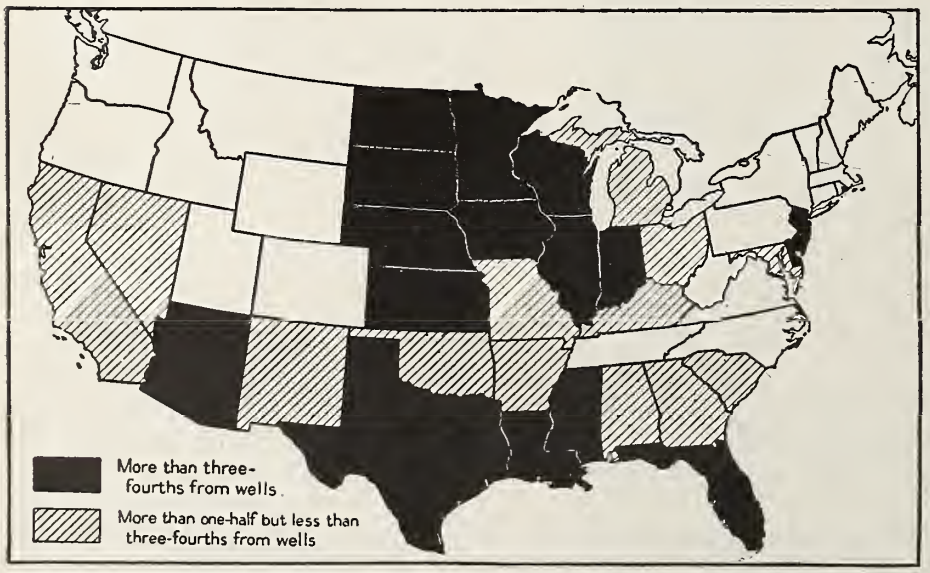
Well Water Availability For the Cooling of Theatres

By J. HOMER SANFORD



● A consulting engineer in charge of many groundwater projects discusses the economic and technical problems in developing wells

WOULD YOU avoid disappointment in the benefits anticipated from air-conditioning? Then first look carefully to whatever sources of cooling water there may be available. If you are certain of ample cold water during the hottest days of the year, there is little reason for worry on the score of gratifying results.

All too frequently theatre operators depend on what they pick up from contractors' representatives as their sole source of information on the amount and temperature of water necessary to operate the system finally selected. As a result, a misleading composite picture is usually created in the purchaser's mind out of statements that may be individually accurate enough, as made by the air conditioning engineer; the misleading factor arises because the engineer in devising his best fitted set-up to meet the job's requirements, must assume some theoretical temperature for the cooling of water.

Ordinarily, there are but two sources available: the purchase of water from the city mains, and well water. Often there may be a question of doubt as to the quantity of well water dependably available, whereupon the engineer uses the average city water temperature taken from the water department records. The purchaser is assured that when, and if, he finds he can get plenty of well water, this will be to his benefit because groundwater is ordinarily colder, and certainly cheaper, on the average.

It is a mistake to assume average temperature of water in city mains, because public water supply frequently gets very warm during torrid spells—the very time when low temperature is paramount for air conditioning! You must remember the success of air-conditioning is largely how it works on hot days, and particularly those hot days of high humidity. These occur through a period not exceeding 100 days, and the intervening mild spells will cause no concern if you make certain that your cooling water will be constant in maximum temperature irrespective of the weather.

[Reprinted from the Engineering News Record]

This map, prepared by the U. S. Geological Survey, shows the proportion of public water supplies derived from wells.

THE EQUIPMENT PROBLEM

Well water, when available, is the best bet, so look carefully into the possibilities of getting it. More information will be given later in this article on ways and means for doing this, but first we must consider certain facts about air-conditioning to show why it is better that the purchaser make certain what will be his peak cooling water temperatures on the torrid days, before he selects the type of air-conditioning machinery to install.

It has been my experience that notwithstanding the many explanations by air-conditioning salesmen and engineers to their prospects, many theatre managers have only vague conception of oft-repeated words like dew-point and other commonly used air-conditioning terms. The buyer usually assumes these are technical phrases which the seller understands better than he and naturally will look after them because it is his business to so do. The average air-conditioning engineer is sincere and strives to provide the best possible results from his particularly equipment. Under the stress of competition, however, he may be impelled to over-optimism concerning what his equipment will do, therefore, he may base his calculations on assumed cooling water temperatures that may not exist when the test comes in hot weather.

Now mechanical refrigeration can of course off-set this temperature difficulty. Manufacturers, from long experience, have learned how to operate refrigeration machinery on relatively high temperatured cooling water, but always at increasing cost for this refrigeration in proportion to the increased temperature of the cooling element. So we get right back to the fact that if you know beforehand that you have groundwater available for cooling, you can economize on both the installation and operating costs of your system.

Many theatres, moreover, are too small to afford the cost of refrigeration. For these the creation of dew-point and absorption of heat must be effected by direct contact with the chilling agency, and for them groundwater affords the best practical solution. The creation of a dew-point is a relatively simple physical phenomenon. It consists merely in changing the molecules of evaporated water in the air from gaseous to vaporized condition. Ordinarily during hot weather this hap-

A CHAT WITH AN INTERESTING PERSON OF THE THEATRE WORLD

JOSEPH D. BASSON, who says:

Good Projection Is A Union's Business

THE MOTION PICTURE theatre in New York is really quite a neighborhood affair. Of course New York is the city of Broadway, the reputation of which, though originating in the "legitimate theatre," has somehow become attached to the "movies" as well—or maybe more so. But after all the district known as Broadway, with its center at Times Square, holds few of the town's motion picture theatres. There are something like 800 of them in the five boroughs.

It is this huge concentration of motion picture theatres which makes Joe Basson's job quite different from that of another man in a similar post elsewhere. More theatres, a greater diversity of theatres. More projectionists, a greater labor problem in connection with projection. As head of Local 306 of the IATSE & MPMO, a body of about 1,850 members, he naturally has that plus-responsibility which the Big Town is apt to impose on anyone in a key position.

Because of this, his opinions should be worth repeating. There is many a problem in projection, not only with respect to operating technique, but involving organization and personnel. Now in big cities especially, "the union" is commonly looked upon as a device for the raising of wages rather than for the raising of standards. Our question to Joe Basson was right to the point:

"How do you regard the responsibility of the union to the industry and to the employer?"

His reply came quickly enough to indicate that he had pretty well established convictions on this matter. "I think it is the function of the union to see that the projectionist can, and that he does avail himself of all the knowledge of his craft and of new equipment and advances that are made in the projection end of the motion picture industry. The union should do this so that its members become more and more competent and do justice to the productions entrusted to them. In that way the patrons are given more satisfactory entertainment, which means that the box office is more likely to prosper."

If it is a function of the union to encourage and help its members toward greater skill in their craft and to inculcate in them a greater sense of responsibility, does it not follow that the individual projectionist has much to do in this direction on his own initiative?

"I believe," said Mr. Basson, "that a projectionist, in order to do full justice to the art of projection, and to keep pace with the great strides that have been made in the studios, should make it his own personal business to get thoroughly acquainted with all the new equipment, be always looking for better methods in projection. He must have a fair knowledge of electricity, mechanics, optics, sound amplification and related processes to do his job well."

It was by practicing what he now preaches that Joe Basson—Joseph D. Basson, to put the name as one seldom hears it—won the confidence of those who, a few years ago, were remaking Local 306. For eighteen years, until the theatre was closed for the construction of a new building, he was projectionist at the Rialto theatre at 42nd Street and Broadway. He employed his spare time in the invention of projection devices. There was the Basson & Stern rear shutter. The Basson and Stern changeover. A special film trap. A projector designed for rear projection. And others.

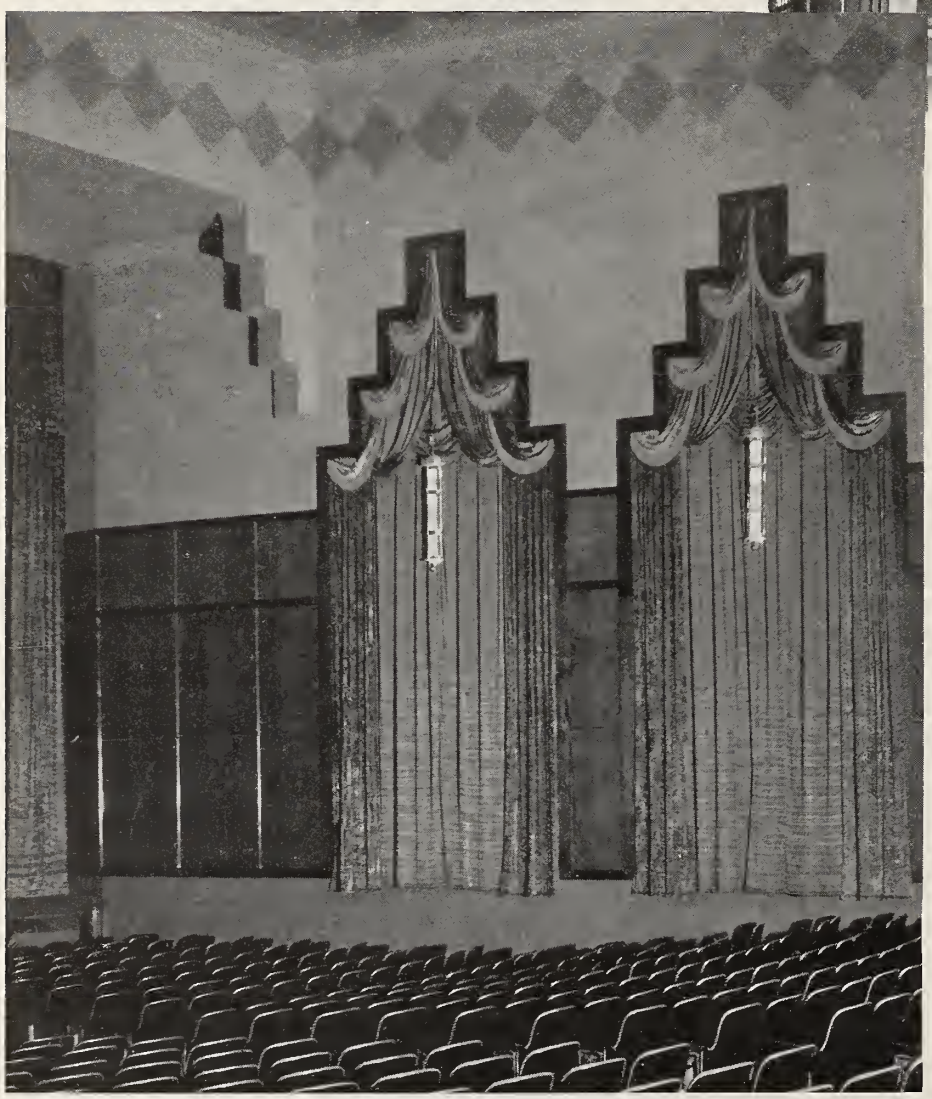
The present head of Local 306—he came into the presidency something like a year ago and was re-elected recently—was born in New York City in 1899. He attended the New York public schools, graduating from High school. Study at the law followed for a time. But somewhere about the time he was 17, he became interested in projection. A genuine, working interest in it has remained.

Above Mr. Basson is quoted in a reference to innovations in projection methods, and we have seen that he has designed many projection devices. We thought he might see possibilities in 16-millimeter projection for the commercial theatre, perhaps a special type of small house suited to very small communities. But he shook his head.

"It is my opinion," he replied, "that due to the necessary magnification for the use of 16-millimeter in the theatre, it would not be practicable. In the first place, the aperture is so small that it would be very difficult to get the required amount of light through to the screen, and at such great magnification it would be almost impossible to get a clear-cut picture. Furthermore, the only saving that could possibly result would be in the amount of film used to produce the picture, except that the original projector might be cheaper."

And the 2,000-foot reel?

"It won't make any difference so far as good projection is concerned. However, it will make things very inconvenient with respect to transportation. Also, I think it may saddle considerable expense upon theatres that are not now equipped for 2,000-foot reels."



In all sections of the motion picture industry are men like Joe Basson, doing highly valuable work. Also in every field are men whose work is of small value, and other men who are distinctly detrimental to the industry they are presumed to serve. The industry needs the helpful men.

Before using up all the available space, we would like to get this in: Joe Basson was one of the original five men, who included the writer, who formed the "Candle Club" that later became the American Projection Society, which did much pioneering on behalf of the projectionist.—F. H. RICHARDSON.

Remodeling at Low Cost With Wood Veneers

The foyer, built between lobby and auditorium.

Side wall of the auditorium after wood veneer and sheetrock treatment.

[The following description of the remodeling of the Avon theatre in Watertown, N. Y., has been prepared by the architect, Peter M. Hulsken, who conducts the Planning the Theatre Department of BETTER THEATRES.—THE EDITOR.]

LAST SEPTEMBER there was a fire in the Avon theatre at Watertown, N. Y. The lobby, foyer and mezzanine floors were ruined, and the decorations, drapes, seats and electric light fixtures were severely damaged.

The interior design has been along classical lines. The auditorium was provided with two balconies; in fact, the theatre was of the old "Opera House" type of the "Gay Nineties" period. It had been previously remodeled several times and on each such occasion, it seemed that there was a demand for more seats, so every time a remodeling took place the required space for seats was taken from the stage and a new proscenium arch installed, so the final result was that there were three proscenium arches.

The question was how to remodel this theatre into a modern one. The first decision made was to eliminate the second balcony, which was of the gallery type. To prevent the loss of seats by removing this balcony, the first balcony had to be enlarged so as to limit the loss of seats to the minimum.

The existing proscenium arch was rather narrow, so after removing as much masonry from each side of the proscenium as this structural part of the building would allow, flare walls were built on each side so as to make the proscenium look as wide as possible.

The next serious problem was raised by the fact that the cost of the modernization of the building could not greatly exceed the cost of repairing the building into its original state as before the fire. This was a most difficult matter, since the remodeling had to include new equipment, such as decorating, drapes, carpets, seats, electric light fixtures, hardware, etc., also modernizing the front and marquee.

With careful selection of materials, the extra cost of this modernization, including equipment, was $8,000 in excess of the contractors' proposal to repair the building into its original condition. This amount, however, included the rebuilding of the first balcony, a new front and a new projection room.

The old front which was built out of stone was covered with Carrara glass, a new ticket booth, illuminated poster frames and new doors were installed. The old marquee was repainted and modernized. The ceiling in the lobby was suspended, a new tile floor installed, illuminated poster frames provided, and ornamental plaster cornices applied.

In the foyer, a new wall was built between the foyer and auditorium, a ceiling suspended, and ornamental plaster cornices applied. The walls were decorated in layers of four shades of pale green with chromium horizontal strips.

The ceiling in the auditorium was lowered 20 feet, and this, of course, has created a great saving in fuel consumption alone. The ceiling was suspended with iron rods and metal lath, with one coat of plaster, applied. On this plaster surface 16 feet by 32 inches Nu-Wood tiles were cemented. The side walls were furred out and the lower part was plastered with keene cement to form a wainscoting. Above that to a height of 14 feet, wood-grained sheetrock—sheets of standard sizes—were fastened with chromium snap-on strips to the furring. The upper parts of the walls were carried out in 16 feet by 32 inches Nu-Wood tiles, with a Nu-Wood cornice in the angle of the ceiling and walls.

The designs in the ceiling and wall friezes were carried out in darker tiles. Draped wall panels were provided to break the plainness of the wall surface. All trim is in stained walnut. All drapes, carpets, seats, electric light fixtures, and hardware are new.

Acoustical plaster was installed at the soffit of the balcony and the rear wall above the balcony. A new projection room, 12 x 24 feet, was built above the balcony and provided with a toilet room. A new mezzanine floor was constructed, and on this floor a lounge, women's and men's rest rooms, manager's office, storage and usher rooms are located.

This mezzanine has plastered walls and ceilings, all simply decorated. The toilet rooms have tile floors and bases. The old toilet rooms and lounge in the basement were also refinished.

The old electrical installation had to be removed and a new installation provided.

Sign Contracts—Ozone Purification—Seat Spacing—Toilet Maintenance

● As the title indicates, this article offers suggestions concerning a variety of matters, each of them suggested by recent inspection of many theatres

THERE HAVE been several situations, conditions and local problems which have come to my attention during recent travels among theatres; and I would like to express my ideas about them in the hope that they might help the solution of problems in the field. One of them is this:

Many sign companies throughout the country are offering to erect marquees, attraction signs and vertical signs on a weekly lease basis for periods of from three to five years. These weekly charges range from $18 to $50 per week, depending entirely upon the size and elaborateness of the display and the amount of servicing the display requires. As a general practice the change of attraction copy is not included as part of the service. With such arrangements it is quite clear that to have a good looking marquee and sign involves no capital, no investment, and the weekly cost should be charged to advertising as an expense item.

It is quite obvious that such an arrangement should be of great benefit to the theatre operator—certainly it is a sales argument for the sign company. The apparent objection is to the long-term obligation and to inability to include equitably mutual cancellation clauses in such a deal. Nevertheless, there are a lot of theatres throughout the country that need new fronts, and when there is no ready cash but reasonably good credit, this means offers a possible solution to the problem.

WHAT IS A GOOD SIGN CONTRACT?

THERE ARE, according to present practice, several very real considerations for the theatre operator to weigh before going into such an arrangement. The weekly charge must be paid regardless of whether or not the theatre is operating or closed. Further, very often the signs and marquee remain the property of the sign company at the termination of the lease period. There definitely should be a clause permitting the theatre operator to purchase outright at the end of the period all of the signs and marquee for their salvage value. The salvage value should never be more than 10% of the basic or prime cost of the signs and marquee; undoubtedly 6% of the prime cost would be more equitable as a sale price at the termination of the lease period. Most naturally, at the time of such sale, the signs and marquee should be turned over in good mechanical, structural and electrical condition, reasonable wear and tear considered.

The usual procedure is for the sign company to make some sketches of the marquee and vertical sign. When they have created one that strikes your eye, and you ask what that combination will cost, the reply is usually something like this: "$32 a week including service for a three-year period, or $28 a week including service on a five-year contract." The decision is made whether a three- or five-year term is right, and the contract is drawn up. Some time after this I am shown the sketches and asked if it is a good deal.

BASIS OF CHARGES

Upon digging into a few such deals I'm inclined to believe that many of the deals are not good deals—I'll even go so far as to say that some of the sign companies don't know whether they are good deals for themselves, either! In brief, there is a lot of guess work in the compilation and, frequently, the use of empirical formula which may or may not be correct.

Certainly, upon quick analysis, the following items enter into the charge:

1. Basic or prime cost. This includes materials of fabrication, labor of fabrication, materials of erection and labor of erection.
2. Profit. The sign company is entitled to profit only on the prime cost, unless they themselves carry the financial burden; more often the contract is carried by the bank or commercial credit house.
3. Depreciation for the term of the contract.
4. Insurance for the term of the contract.
5. Interest on the prime cost.
6. Service. This charge should be based upon the number of inspections made, plus an item for actual repairs, plus painting at least twice each year, and, finally, plus a reasonable profit for this service.
7. Overhead. A proper charge against the gross contract because the sign company must render service, make collections, make payments to the bank or commercial credit company, keep books, etc.

With a breakdown of the entire proposition into these seven groups anyone can analyze a given situation and definitely state whether or not the deal is a good one. The theatre operator should insist upon such a breakdown.

In general, I believe that there are advantages to this method of financing front displays. In many spots marquees and vertical signs are a very real part of our business—they change with a cycle of designs and styles almost like automobiles. Too frequently the age and condition of a theatre is indicated by its front. Many theatres need to have their "faces lifted," and this plan of financing offers a way; however, we still have the right to know just what our weekly payments include.

Finally, depending upon the type of old marquee and vertical sign, many times the newer designs with the ingenious use of neon will save in current consumption an amount almost equal to the weekly charge on the new front.

MAINTENANCE OF TOILET ROOMS

IF I WERE asked what the most objectionable physical features in motion picture theatres throughout the country are today, I would answer as follows:

1. The condition of toilet and rest room facilities, and in some cases the total lack of them.

2. The spacing between rows of seats—in some places as little as 28 inches, and many not more than 30 inches.

Let's consider the first statement: Toilets found to be inadequate in the number of fixtures and in the care and upkeep of them; toilet rooms themselves are inadequately ventilated and need painting; floors are badly stained and new floor covering should be laid; the lighting of such rooms is dim, and lighting fixtures are dirty, fly-specked or broken, and in most every instance improperly placed; flush valves on fixtures are old, need repair, or not working at all; other toilet rooms are so filled with the odor of cheap perfume or disinfectants that one immediately says to himself, "Yes, even the manager acknowledges that this place is filthy."

IS THIS "SHOWMANSHIP"?

I recently saw a little girl approach the ticket-taker of a theatre to inquire if she left the theatre, could she come back. Being curious I stepped up to find out more about it, believing that she might want a candy bar (there was not any candy machine or booth in the theatre) or thinking she wanted to call her home on the telephone (there was not any public phone in the theatre). Her reply to me was, "You see my mother told me I could come to this theatre, but that I must not use the ladies' room, so I want to go to the ladies' room in the store next door and I want to come back to see the rest of the picture."

After the show that evening I went into the ladies' room. There were dirty old oak seats on the fixtures, cracked and unclean. The flushing mechanism and tank on one fixture would not carry away the waste, the bowls themselves were yellowish brown. The lavatory was equipped with only one faucet; where the other belonged there was only a gaping hole in the porcelain. The cold water faucet leaked and there was a dirty yellow stain in the bowl. No liquid was in the soap container, a sliver of hard soap lay on the basin. There were no towels, not even paper towels.

The floor was covered with a dirty old battleship linoleum that had been mopped for ages with dirty water and strong alkali soap until it had started to curl around the edges and crack. The window, half of which was taken up by a fan with a burned-out motor, and the other half painted with a green paint, was anything but pleasant to look at. And over all hung a pall of the odor of filth mixed with a pine oil.

This may be showmanship, but I wonder! Few adults would have the patience that the little girl had—grown people will just stay away. I have visited hundreds of theatres during the past twelve months, and this situation is not the worst.

BOILER HORSEPOWER: We often hear the expression "boiler horsepower," or "5-horsepower boiler." What does it mean in practical terms? According to a standard adopted by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, a boiler horsepower is the evaporation of 34½ pounds of water from water at 212°F. to steam at 212°F.. A 1-horsepower boiler will produce 33,479 b.t.u.'s per hour, and a 5-horsepower boiler 167,395 b.t.u.'s per hour.

1 cubic foot of water weighs 62½ pounds.

1 cubic inch of water weighs .03617 pounds.

A column of water 1 inch square and 1 foot high weighs .434 pounds (for quick estimating, the pressure in pounds per square inch of water in a pipe is figured ½-pound per foot of height of water in the pipe).

A gallon of water weighs 8⅓ pounds.

A gallon of water is equal to 231 cubic inches.

NOISE MEASUREMENT: The measurement of noise is relatively a new engineering problem, but it has been of great importance in theatres since the advent of sound. The decibel is used in this country as a standard unit of sound or noise intensity. The decibel is a rather difficult unit for one to, shall we say, visualize. Loudness and intensity are two different characteristics of a noise or tone. The decibel has been established, based upon the logarithmic relationship that exists between loudness and intensity of a sound. The relationship still does not help one picture in his mind just what a decibel is. The noise of a boiler factory is about 100 decibels, normal conversation is about 25 decibels.

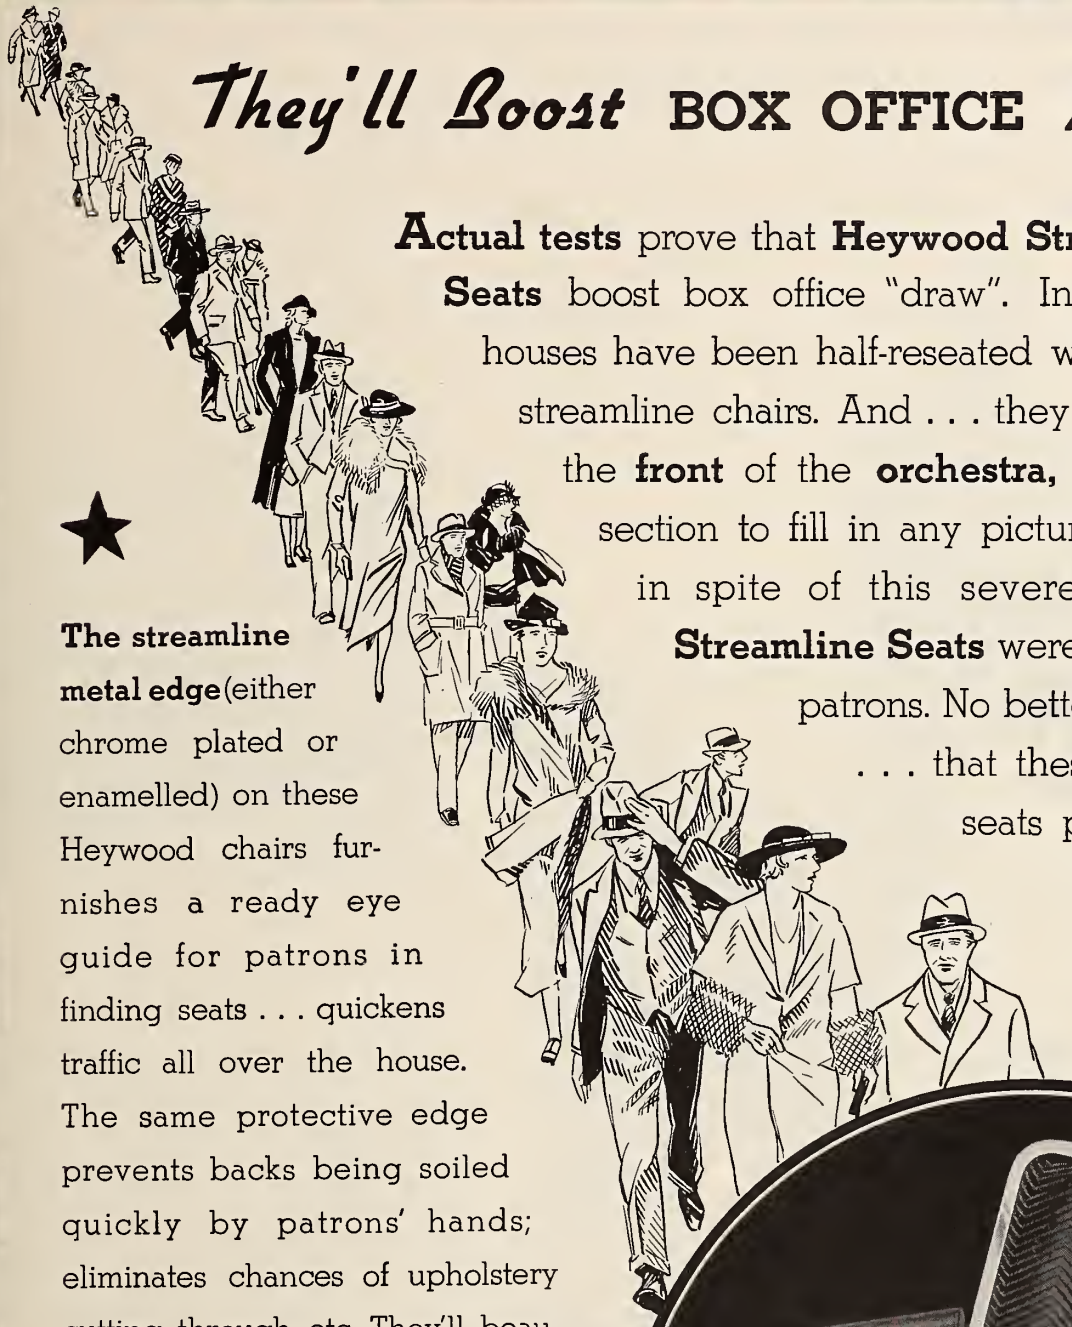
SEATING PLANS AND THE BOX OFFICE

NOW AS TO the spacing of seats: Theatre seats represent a substantial industry investment and many a chair, would be at least acceptable if it were properly spaced. The desire of the human being for personal comfort has long been recognized and has been universally accepted as the reason for the development of many innovations in the field of transportation—automobiles, buses, trains, aeroplanes; also, it has had its influence even on the design of clothing; the field of architecture has long since recognized it in the planning of hotels, apartments and houses. How do we know that in crowding in those extra two hundred seats so as to take advantage of the Saturday night rush business, the extra forty or eighty dollars taken in are not costing us equally that much if not more by keeping people away from the theatre all during the week? I have had this experience and so have you. I have sat in veneer seats with plenty of leg room and enjoyed a show more than when cramped into a seat with full upholstering.

HOW NOT TO SAVE

Long shows, which are becoming so much the practice, demand that we consider comfort as an extremely practical factor. And the point that I make here is that not enough emphasis has been put on the spacing of the seats.

Let's review the method by which we reseat a theatre. We call in a seating company and instruct them to draw up a seating plan for the theatre and "get as many seats in as the law will allow." So they do just that, and when we get the plan and the total cost, little time is given to examining the number of 18- and 19-inch seats, or the distance from row to row. So the only place to cut costs is to break down the seats into their component parts—maybe decide on a thinner back, a shallower spring for the seat, fewer aisle lights and a simplified end standard, etc. With much pride we reseat the theatre, then are astounded when the public indicates only casual acceptance of the "improvement."



Many theatres have a long winter season, when people wear heavy coats, overshoes, mufflers, etc. If you are a fair-sized individual, try some time, in your own theatre, to sit through a double feature show with overshoes on, balancing an overcoat, etc., on your lap, and keeping your knees from touching the woman next to you—try to do all this in an 18-inch seat, in a row spaced 30 inches from back to back. Then decide whether you would take that discomfort once or twice each week as a regular diet!

OZONE FOR AIR PURIFICATION

I HAVE BEEN asked many times recently, "What about ozone for use in smoking balconies, or where air from smoking balconies is recirculated, and for eliminating odors in toilets?"

Ozone has its proper uses, and it most certainly has a place in theatres. Why the factual information on it is so hard to get hold of I do not know. Ozone generating equipment has been used in Europe for a long time for purifying municipal water supplies, swimming pools in public baths, and for purifying air, but its use seems to be progressing slowly in this country. Even the people who sell ozone equipment seem to be woefully short on definite facts about the quantity of ozone generated by their equipment, and how one is to know that he is getting enough ozone, or whether one can get too much ozone. I have not come across any reports of research by any laboratory of national standing that answers all the practical questions involved.

In talking to one salesman for ozone equipment, I was told, "You see, the theatre man doesn't ask that kind of questions —they just say, 'Can you eliminate the odor in this toilet?' and we put our equipment in on a 30-day trial. At the end of that time, if the odor has been eliminated, he gives us an order for the machines and that's all there is to it."

That answer seems to be honest and to the point.

WHAT OZONE IS

Ozone is oxygen. Oxygen is the most widely distributed of all the elements. By weight, water is eight-ninths oxygen, air is one-fourth oxygen, silica (sand) is about one-half oxygen, and there is a large percentage of oxygen in chalk. Without oxygen life cannot exist, and yet it is the agency by which disintegration of the body takes place after death. Oxygen usually is found in the two-atom form, O_2, so when it is generated in the three-atom form, O_3, it is called ozone, or sometimes referred to as the allotropic form of oxygen. Ozone does destroy organic gases, bacteria and organic matter generally, and this is accomplished by oxidization—the third atom of oxygen, breaking away from the two atoms, combines with the organic substance and actually burns or destroys it.

OZONE GENERATION

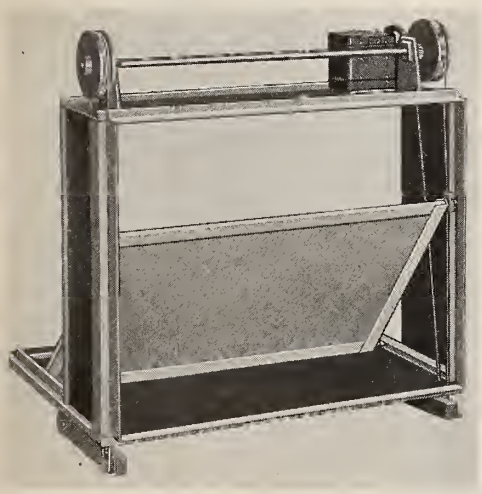
There are several ways in which ozone can be created or generated: (1) by chemical action, (2) by electrostatic-field, (3) by electrolysis, (4) by radio-activity, (5) by ultra-violet rays, (6) by exposure of incandescent solids to air, (7) by the evaporation of water under certain circumstances. Realizing that ozone is a great purifier, you can readily see how it is possible for it to act when you read over carefully how it is generated. The air is clearer and more refreshing after a lightning and thunder storm because of the ozone generated by the electric discharges from the sky.

The simplest form of generator consists in two concentric glass tubes, the inner surface of the inner tube and the outer surface of the outer tube being coated with tin foil, and each of the tin foil conductors are connected to the terminals of an induction coil. A slow stream of dry, filtered air is passed between the tubes and due to the electrical discharge the air becomes charged with from 2% to 8% of ozone.

Another form of generator uses mica plates covered on both sides with aluminum alloy. These plates are mounted side by side, spaced so that air can pass between the plates. Alternate plates are charged and discharged. This method will produce about 50 grams of ozone per kilowatt-hour of energy with a concentration of about 2 grams of ozone for each cubic yard of air passing through the apparatus.

Of course, there are various sizes of generators made, and generators are frequently of a multiple assembly of smaller units, but aside from the fact that ozone does destroy odors, we have not yet been told how much ozone is considered satisfactory, and how we can exactly adjust the output of a given generator, or whether an excess of ozone is objectionable or detrimental to life or physical comfort.

Small ozone generators have no moving parts, the larger ones have a small positive blower and filter arrangement for the air forced through the apparatus. Small units for use in toilet rooms, smoking rooms or offices supposed to be of sufficient capacity for 10,000 cubic feet of space, can be purchased for as little as $40 each. The larger units for use with central air-conditioning plants cost in proportion to the size of the plant with which they are supposed to function.—J. T. K.



Equalizing Air Distribution By Automatic Velocity Control

CONTROL OF air distribution so that regardless of changes in outside and inside atmospheric conditions, the proper circulation of air at desired temperature and relative humidity is assured each section of the auditorium—always a problem, of course, to be attacked by the designer of an air-conditioning system—has been sought by the U. S. Air-Conditioning Corporation of Minneapolis through a special mechanical arrangement, which has been introduced into their Kooler-Aire system under the trade name of "Equalizer."

The Kooler-Aire system is of the type which may be called high-velocity, in contradistinction to any method (such as the overhead duct "pan" type) which does not depend for proper distribution on the introduction of conditioned air under substantial pressures, and the "Equalizer" has been introduced into the system as a means of obtaining the established relative velocities for all sections of the auditorium whether the system is operating at full capacity or not.

The function of such "equalizing" of velocities applies to winter as well as summer operation. In winter, the volume of air supplied by the system for heating and ventilating is less than that required for cooling. Inasmuch as the deflector (inlet) sizes are designed for maximum (hot weather) volume, the velocity of the air when introduced into the auditorium is less without some means of control. A result is the "dumping" of air into the front area of the auditorium. Now in winter the air is warmed and it rises from the front area toward the ceiling, into the upper area into which warm air is being constantly introduced through the inlet system. The later, of course, is entering under some pressure, and it pushes the air that has risen from the front seating area back along the ceiling, at least part of it reaching the rear area, causing temperatures there that are too high and otherwise interfering with proper circulation of conditioned air in the rear sections of the auditorium.

The "equalizing" mechanism has been designed to meet the problem of faulty distribution automatically, with a damper arrangement atcuated through a thermostat in the auditorium. The Kooler-Aire system employs washed air taken either from wells or city mains, and includes mechanical refrigeration when local conditions require it. When deep well cold water is used for cooling, there is provided a water pump and mixing valve control for days when little cooling is wanted. On days, especially in spring and fall, when outside temperatures advise use of audience heat and no cooling whatever, the equalizer is applied to the control of air volume as well as to the distribution of the air at effective velocity.

Availability of Well Water for Cooling

pens whenever moisture-burdened air strikes a cold surface not exceeding 60° temperature. Every degree under 60° adds materially to the rapidity and efficiency of moisture condensation. In general, a maximum cooling water temperature of 58° will make either the simple air-fin or water-spray methods work satisfactorily. Groundwater in the northern half of the United States averages from 52° to 56° throughout the summer, except in certain densely populated areas where heat is artifically radiated in to the ground by industries.

GROUNDWATER AVAILABILITY

The following extract from a Government publication written by Dr. O. E. Meinzer, chief of the Division of Groundwater of the United States Geological Survey, reveals interesting information about widespread existence of groundwater in the United States:

"Most of the public water supplies are obtained from wells in virtually all parts of the United States except in New England, along the borders of the Great Lakes, and in some of the mountain and piedmont areas in the East and West. . . . With the above perspective, it should be obvious that groundwater for both public and private supplies has an importance that cannot easily be exaggerated. . . . Groundwater supplies that have not been overdeveloped, have, for the most part, an advantage over supplies obtained from streams, with respect to permanence and reliability, due to the great storage capacity of natural underground reservoirs.

"This advantage was rather strikingly shown in the severe drought of 1930, when relatively little difficulty was encountered with the public supplies derived from wells."

DRILLING FOR WATER

The fact that 65% of all our public water supplies in 1933, when the above article was written, were derived from groundwater sources, is encouraging evidence that theatre owners may develop wells for their own cooling water needs in many instances. The map showing groundwater utilization in the various States may interest readers who would like to investigate possibilities of getting well water on their property.

In general, groundwater is frequently found flowing through porous sands and gravels that fill our river and stream valleys. Fortunately, most of our cities and towns are built along streams, and your theatre may be located over underground water streams flowing above the bedrock of a valley. If the bedrock lies only a few feet under the surface, there still remains a lesser possibility of getting sufficient cooling water by drilling into the rock, but the safest groundwater supply usually is found in sand and gravel rather than in rock.

Surprising as it may seem, many well drillers are poorly informed about water that may exist above rock. Therefore, do not accept a well driller's opinion as final, even through it may seem natural to you that he should know about it, if anyone does. Go to your city water department and find out whether they obtain water from wells; where these wells are located and whether they have information of a possible buried underground valley passing in the vicinity of your property.

Inquire of dairies, ice plants and other manufacturers near you as to whether they have ever drilled wells and how deep they found the rock. Many have been amazed to learn through a little intelligent investigation that there exists near, or around them, private wells of good capacity.

One reason why well drillers ignore good water supplies at shallow depths is that they are paid on a footage basis, and because of the small return for their efforts, cannot afford to do work without drilling to considerable depth. Drillers will frequently state that they encountered "some water" above the rock but this was "surface" water, the inference being that surface water is impure or not fit for drinking, when, as a matter of fact, all water in the ground that is fit to drink is surface water that has ultimately percolated downward.

INVESTIGATING SOURCES

There are engineers with special knowledge of geology who make a business of determining where groundwater may be found. There are also certain large drilling contractors who will develop water on a guaranteed basis, but at an increased charge for this service to cover the risk. Certain engineers who specialize in groundwater study are thoroughly informed on drilling methods and can instruct an ordinary local driller how to proceed with developing the maximum yield afforded by the water bearing formations. Often the failure of local well diggers to produce ample water yield arises from lack of proper equipment or insufficient knowledge of modern drilling practice.

Many failures of wells to produce large capacity are because of the small diameters suitable only for ordinary drinking wells. These constitute a large part of the ordinary driller's business and his drilling rig may be too small for boring the large diameters necessary to high yield from shallow gravel and sand deposits.

Low-temperatured cooling water is paramount for air-conditioning. All that the conditioning machinery can do is to provided efficient or ingenious means of bringing the cooling element into more or less intimate contact with air, to chill it so that moisture be precipitated and temperature reduced.

For cold water, wells offer the cheapest and most reliable solution. Therefore, don't gamble on assumed average temperatures in the public supply. Determine first of all whether you can get well water. If so, a reliable conditioning unit can be determined upon with far greater certainty, and usually considerably lower installation cost.

Do Some of Your Patrons Shiver while Others Perspire?

The public rewards programs of good pictures right at your box office. But, in order to hold patronage, your patrons must be made comfortable. Your theatre's temperature must not only feel cool on hot days—but must also feel comfortable on all the cooler days in Summer, Spring and Fall. A new invention puts proper temperature control all over the house right at your finger tips. You can avoid excessive warmth in the back part of the house while the front rows are uncomfortably cool.

Equalized Kooler-Aire

The Kooler-Aire "Equalizer" positively eliminates all drafts—cold spots—overheated areas—dead air pockets. You can have it in the 1936 "Equalized" Kooler-Aire System or it may be easily added to any system which you may have. Whether the outside temperature be hot, warm, cold or cool, your inside temperature will be absolutely correct.

Efficient Boiler Connections in Heating Systems

• Outlining, with the aid of sketches, the operating characteristics of three methods, and showing how older equipment may be readily modernized

THERE ARE heating systems and heating systems, as has been pointed out in this department in the last two issues of BETTER THEATRES, with each possessing characteristics that must be considered in relation to the needs peculiar to the specific theatre involved in any contemplated installation, if efficiency, which is to say economy, is to be assured. Now, with the aid of three diagrams, we examine a particular division of a heating system, the boiler connections, not only to clarify understanding of these elements, but to show how present systems in which they are faulty, may be improved.

In Sketch A is shown an old-style standard connection between the boiler and the piping system that serves the radiators. This sketch represents a five-section cast iron boiler with two boiler risers. This system could have been served with one riser but by putting two on we reduced the steam velocity through the piping system about 50%. Note carefully the drip connection which is an open drip to a sump pit. Note the condensate return is a wet return because it is below the boiler water level. There are many theatres that have their boilers connected in this fashion, which to some extent is wasteful, noisy and inefficient.

Sketch B represents the same boiler as that of Sketch A, with the drip connection connected into the boiler return taps and the return condensation line connected to the drip connection high up but just below the boiler water line. With the layout shown in Sketch A you can see that an excess of pressure in the boiler would back all of the water from the boiler into the return lines. The connection shown in this sketch prevents that. The connecting of the wet return to the drip connection before it in turn joins the return taps to the boiler balances the pressure in the boiler so that any increase of steam pressure in the boiler reacts on the surface of the water in the drip connection thereby preventing the boiler water from being driven from the boiler into the return pipe. Please note in both the Sketches A and B that between the points X and Y the condensation flows in a contrary direction to the flow of steam. This creates noise.

Sketch C shows the same boiler with the main run-out connection to the main steam header connected in the rear, which means that the condensation between the points X and Y will flow in the same direction as the steam thereby reducing noise.—J. T. K.

Provisions Underway for Standardizing the 2,000-Foot Reel

● But while the technical committees proceed toward adoption of the double size on August 1, international union chiefs reassert their opposition

AFTER A SURVEY that approached being world-wide, the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, with the approval of nearly all major distributors, has arranged for the adoption of the much-discussed 2,000-foot reel and has set the date for its introduction as August 1, 1936. It then is perhaps in order to review the situation from all angles with some investigation as to just how the various elements affected regard the innovation.

First of all, opposition by the IATSE & MPMO must be faced. In General Bulletin No. 297, issued by the IA general office, occurs the following:

"Don't be Duped by 'Double-Reel' Propaganda—Falsified reports are being circulated throughout this country and Canada to the effect that the International Alliance interposes no objection to the common use of 'Double-Reels.'

"Nothing is further from the truth, as the stand taken by the General Office in this matter is one of absolute and emphatic disapproval.

"The most recent development in this direction is the attempt on the part of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to introduce a new projection reel standard of 2,000-foot reels, twice the length of the present standard. The seemingly harmless aspect of this endeavor, coupled with the copious support and endorsation accorded it by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, is highly significant in its simplicity.

"Our Local Organizations should become keenly alive to the underlying motive of this move—cutting in half the work required with a subsequent corresponding decrease in man-power—and forcibly protest against the use of other than single reels, as well as exerting every influence and pressure to definitely discourage the use of other than the present standard size reels."

This the writer brought to the attention of the chairman of the distributors' committee, which is headed by J. S. MacLeod of MGM. His reply was to the effect that in adopting the 2,000-foot reel but little change was being made, insofar as has to do with projection work, for the reason that a very large percentage of theatres are now doubling up reels, with resultant costly damage to the films. He continued:

"In my opinion the sole and only reason for adoption of the larger reel is to give the large majority of projectionists exactly what they want. Whether they or the organization representing them says it is wanted or not seems immaterial because they now are using the 2,000-foot reel for projection, doubling up the 1,000-foot lengths. It therefore is quite fair to assume they want the 2,000-foot reel.

"The only objection advanced to the committee by projectionist or unions representing them are based wholly upon what I would term industrial politics. Were it not for the fact that in many theatres the 1,000-foot reels are being doubled up, we would have no reason to want to distribute features on 2,000-foot reels."

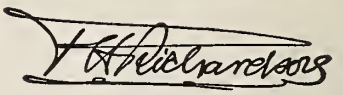
Mr. McLeod had in his possession two sample reels of the 2,000-foot capacity. It was shown, by experiment, that if the sides of one of them were pressed together, the reel did not assume its original shape when released. Pressing the sides of a rather heavy reel, made apparently from some aluminum composition, caused one of the spokes to break. The fact was pointed out that such reels had but slight stability, that while they were relatively cheap in first cost, they would be very expensive in the end; also that they would work considerable damage to films in the exchange rewinding process, even though other and better reels were used for projection.

There is yet no reliable data available as to the number of projectors that will have to be altered, more or less, in order to accommodate the larger reels. However, the committee is sending out a post-card request for information, which it is expected will supply full data in approximately a month. The questions are:

"What make and model number of projection machine do you use? Are the magazines on your projection equipment of sufficient size to accommodate a reel 15 inches in diameter? If not, what size reel will they accommodate? Are you now 'doubling' your reels onto a large reel?"

The general method as at present approved is to have laboratories continue to process films in approximately 1,000-foot lengths as now. These prints will be shipped to exchanges in cans, not mounted on reels. The first 1,000-foot length will be known as Section A; the second as Section B. The exchange will make the necessary splice and mount the combined sections on a 2,000-foot reel.

So far as recording is concerned, no change in present methods will be required, except that the first twenty divisions of Section B must appear on Section A. To accommodate the process of rewinding the Academy recommends an installation geared to a 2.75-to-1 ratio. This, of course, is to retain the old rewinding speed that not only compels the projectionist to remain beside the rewinder throughout the entire rewinding process, but increases the possibility of damage to the film.



The dimensions of the new reel, as approved by the Academy, will be, as more recently revised, 15 inches over-all diameter, with a 5-inch hub, and a 1.5-inch clearance between the sides. The center bushing will be of size to provide an easy fit to all standard 5/16-inch diameter rewinder and projector spindles. The keyway will be ⅛x⅛-inch.

An opening adjacent to the film slot will be provided of such shape and size as will make for convenient attachment of the film end to the reel hub in threading. The exact construction of the reel to be approved has not been decided.

THE PART-TIME SYSTEM AND ITS EFFECT ON STANDARDS

WHILE MANY union men may honestly disagree with what I shall say, I ask that they at least give the matter very serious consideration. Here is the question now under discussion:

Many unions now have more members than they have employment for.

We will not at the moment consider the reasons that have led up to this deplorable condition. It is well understood by us all, I believe. The practical effect, however, is that in many cities this has led to compulsory part-time idleness by some or all of the men, usually the higher paid ones on the theory that they can best afford it.

Now this seems on the surface to be not only quite all right, but the fine, manly, brotherly thing to do. As is said, however, there always are two sides to every question, and this is no exception.

We are trying to build up projection to the point where full justice may and will be done, not only to the work of our producers, which improves year by year, but also to the magnificent equipments now being placed in our theatres. To do this we must encourage and build up the morale of the men themselves. We must, as fast as possible, get rid of incompetence, either by dropping the incompetents or by building up their knowledge and making them competent, which is something our unions can help to do.

Since employment conditions are what they are, what just now is needed in most unions is less men, and naturally those remaining should and must be of the best. There are not now enough jobs for all. We may as well admit that many of the one-man rooms are here to stay.

Now let us consider the effect of the part-time plan many unions have been compelled to adopt and put into force. As before said, it usually is applied only to the higher paid men, which sounds right and proper from the financial viewpoint. However, with exceptions, we may admit that in effect this means that the brunt of part-time idleness falls largely upon the very best men we have.

Now this has two exceedingly bad effects. First, it is not in the least encouraging to those men who have had the ambition, energy and interest in their work to study hard and thus become highly competent, to be compelled to lay off and loaf for two to four days each week, as many men, especially in the large cities, are now compelled to do, regardless of what the reasons may be. Say what we will, the effect is a distinct let-down. In the very nature of things, these men do not have the interest they would have were they working steadily. The general effect is distinctly bad.

This part-time business has a second very bad effect in that part-time men cannot be expected to have the keen personal interest in the equipment under their charge that is had by those working with it all the time. Psychologically it works out that way. The man who, for example, works only with equipment for three days a week, comes on the job, puts in his hours, leaves, and that's that. Moreover, a man who is laid off two or three days a week, knowing another chap will be on the job tomorrow, feels inclined to leave some things he might do, undone. It is simply a case of "Let George do it," which is natural enough.

I appreciate the difficulties involved. But I also appreciate the need of skill, knowledge and a high sense of responsibility in the projection room in keeping with the exalted position of the motion picture today.

FAULTS IN FILM TRAP ASSEMBLY

A NUMBER of interesting suggestions regarding methods in matters related to projection are made in a letter from Allan E. Harvey of Newman, Cal. He says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Reading in your columns that projectionists have not taken an interest in your fine offer to do something about tension adjustment reminds me I have not answered your letter.

"The point I had in mind both with reference to tension and lateral guiding was that the film trap assemblies in general use in theatres do not serve so well, almost every theatre showing some little detail fault in the film trap assembly on the screen. The film trap assembly developed for studio use in projecting background shots, with its improved design and materials, seems to me ought to have general use in theatres. While the requirements for steady projection in studio work are severe, it is also true that correct prints can always be obtained. In theatre projection, on the other hand, while the standards are not high, the prints available vary widely in physical condition and offer a severe handicap to the projectionist. It seems to me that this as well as other technical improvements in projection developed by the studio engineers ought to be used by theatres as far as possible. If I remember correctly, you discussed some of these improvements in your columns some time ago, but I do not recall ever seeing the improved film trap for sale in a theatre supply house.

"I would very much like to see the Technical Section of the Academy act as liaison between the laboratories and theatres. It has been my experience that the various laboratories have no time to correspond about various details in connection with the film they supply the exchanges. The exchanges are not only reluctant to contact the laboratories, but because of exhibitor relations, sometimes ignore legitimate inquiries. If the Academy would serve as a direct contact, however, certain evils in the release print output of the laboratories could be reported by interested theatre projectionists for consideration.

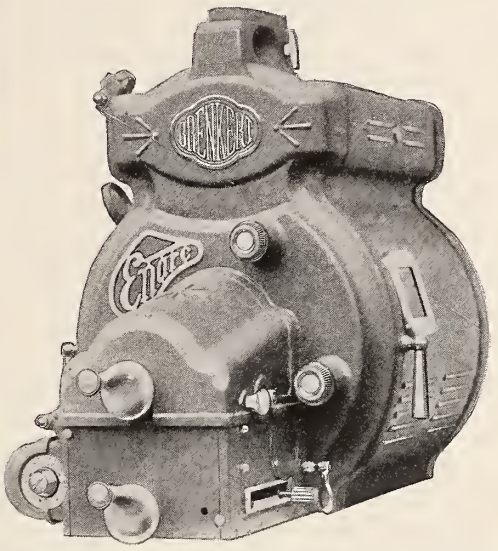
"Any exception is so interesting, however, I am glad to report the interest of the San Francisco Columbia exchange in their release prints. A few days ago I examined a new two-reel print which had been badly damaged during some previous projection. This print had offered severe resistance to the tension pads, showing not only the usual strain marks, but a very bad condition in the sprocket perforations, about every tenth sprocket hole being badly deformed on the driving edge. Long portions of this print in its present condition do not guide properly, allowing the picture edge and frequently the sprocket holes to show on the screne.

"The laboratory labels on this print stated the print had been processed by the laboratory and special warnings on the bands stated the print had been lubricated after hardening. As the condition of the print showed this lubrication had not been complete, I reported the matter to the exchange at once, asking them to refer the matter to their laboratory. I received a very cordial answer from the exchange and the promise they would cooperate fully.

"My attitude has been that such matters should be reported to the laboratories, as otherwise the release print production engineers cannot check fully against their routine procedure. If the Academy would serve as a contact, I have no doubt that the results would be worthwhile. In the matter of release print processing alone, a reduction of probable error of 1 per cent or 2 per cent would still be very important to the industry as a whole. Sometime, I hope, you will bring this suggestion to the attention of the Academy and of your eager readers."

As to the lack of interest in tension adjustment, it is deplorable. True, I did receive a limited number of letters commending my position in that matter, but for every one received, at least one hundred should have come. It would be useless to try to force the adoption of such a change with only lukewarm support from those who should be most interested.



As to the suggested liaison between theatres and the Academy, it was tried out when the adoption of the S.R.P. was under advisement, with just what success I am not certain, though I believe nothing too encouraging. Each theatre is too tied up in its own local troubles to bother much with outside matters, and the Academy too has troubles of its own. The reason MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES gets attention from theatre men is because it keeps pounding week by week, and month by month, to all theatres and to the Hollywood "big bugs" as well. It is the constant reaching to all sections of the field of motion pictures that effects results. Were the Academy able to reach all theatres constantly and often, it doubtless could accomplish great good in this matter.

union. Some of these come from working projectionists—the greater number by far—and some from young men who have some smattering of projection experience and desire to "bust in" so they may blossom out as full-fledged projectionists.

For the information of all and sundry joining the union is something that must be taken up with the union which it is one's wish to join. Each local union is the sole and absolute arbiter in the matter of receiving new members, or even nembers of other local unions who may wish to transfer. It can accept or reject, and that action is final.

Each union may set its own admission fee, which may be any sum it desires to name, and in some cases runs into hundreds of dollars. Each union may oblige applicants for membership to pass any examination it may wish to, or none at all. Neither I nor anyone else, except he be a member of the union you may wish to join, can help anyone to join a union. In fact, any attempt in that direction doubtless would arouse resentment, unions being very jealous of the membership right.

SOUND SPEED AND TEMPERATURE

D. L. VERNON of Minneapolis, Minn., asks, "To decide an argument, how fast does sound travel and does it travel faster in warm than in cold air?"

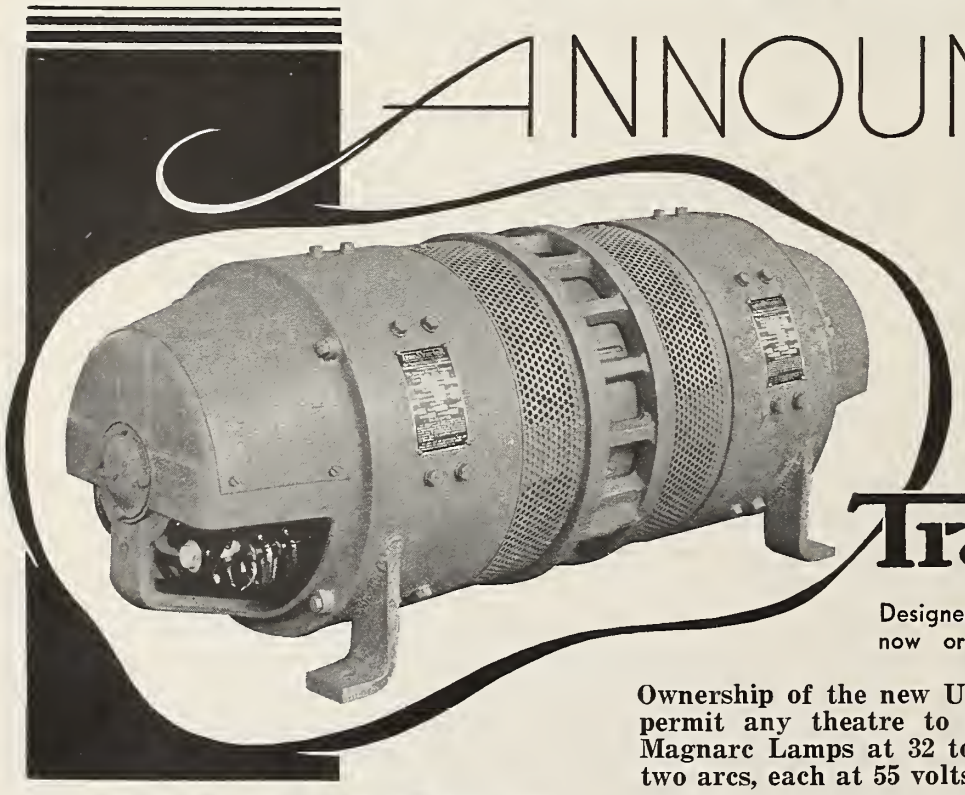
Answering this query, authoritative text books on physics give the speed of sound as 1086.7 feet per second when the temperature is zero Centigrade and the air pressure 76 centimeters. This figure represents the average of results obtained by two well-known scientists over an extended series of experiments.

Sound speed is wholly independent of both pitch and air pressure, but it does vary with temperature. It increases about 2 feet with every degree, centigrade, rise in temperature. There also is a variation in speed of sound as density and elasticity of the medium through which it is passing varies.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM A PROJECTIONIST

FROM CARL DORR, projectionist at the Strand theatre in Walhalla, S. C., comes this most interesting and helpful letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: It seems a little strange to be calling you Mr. Richardson when from reading your columns in BETTER THEATRES and MOTION PICTURE HERALD for so long a time I feel as through I knew you personally. Like other projectionists I sincerely appreciate your efforts to place projection on the level of a profession, where it most certainly belongs.



"I have been in the profession four years only, but try hard to be worthty of the title projectionist. Where I now am, and have been for eight months, we have the latest type DeForest sound and Powers 6B projectors equipped with Peerless light sources taking current through rectifiers.

"I have a few suggestions for projectionists using DeForest equipmens. First, to eliminate noise due to scratched sound track, using the exciter to the left (when the exciter to the right is in use it is against a stop pin and cannot be moved to the left), shift it a little to the left of normal position—enough so that the illumination on the right side of the sound track (where scratches usually are) is reduced. Then place the gain control at higher position than normal in order to compensate for loss of frequency response caused by reduced illumination.

"Other causes of motor boating noise and mushy sound may be (1) impedance pad roller (filter roller) stuck, (2) pad roller on top of sound scanning slit block stuck, (3) a small bit of dirt caught between the impedance roller and the arm supporting its outer bearing. Because of the small clearance between these parts it is advisable to keep a sharp on this.

"Another possible cause of mushy sound with DeForest equipment is to loose driving belt. Still another is excessive tension on the pivot screws supporting each end of the filter roller on the soundhead and incorrect centering of side adjustment of pivots (pivot screws) on impedance rollers. I trust these suggestions may be of some value to brother projectionists using DeForest equipments.

"And now may I ask what is the average entry fee to IA unions in a city of 50,000 population?"

Your question cannot be answered. It varies widely, each union having the power to fix its initiation fee. If all its jobs are taken and new members therefore are not wanted, it may be set at an absolutely prohibitive figure. If the condition be otherwise, the fee may be quite reasonable. It seems unjust to outsiders, but I can assure you it would be quite all right were all members of all unions thoroughly capable. Unfortunately, however, this is not always the case, and under that circumstance keeping a really high-grade projectionist out to protect an incompetent man in his job is unfair to all concerned. But it is a situation that is extremely hard to cope with.

In New York City, for example, there are a great many more men in the union that there are jobs for. Most of them are competent, willing and able to do their full duty. But there is a number of incompetent men—some of them very incompetent if judged by proper standards—and the pity is that high-grade men are compelled actually to lay off one to three days a week in order to provide them with work.

As to your suggestions for DeForest equipments, I pass them along, with the remark that while there may be a reason, I can see none for moving the spare lamp over. Why not just move the one in use a bit to the left? Anyhow, this sort of letter is intended to be helpful and doubtless will be appreciated by many projectionists handling DeForest equipments. Great good would result if we had more correspondents willing to give pointers on various troubles they have encountered with different equipments and how they were successfully handled.

EXAMINING AND LICENSING PROJECTIONISTS

RECENTLY I published a lengthy discussion regarding the licensing of projectionists, based upon the procedure followed in Alberta, Canada. More recently I wrote my old friend, G. P. Barber, chief inspector of theatres for the province of Alberta, asking that he set forth his impression of the effect of their very stiff examinations and high license fees. It is to be borne in mind that Mr. Barber has had every opportunity to form an unbiased opinion. He has responded with a discussion addressed to projectionists rather than to me. He writes:

"The request which prompted these opinions of mine was worded thus—'Will you kindly give me your views on the benefits derived from an examination for projectionists.' The reason that Mr. Richardson specifies projectionists is because, as you all know, projection matters have been his particular line of endeavour for many years, and while I shall try to keep to the subject of projectionsists throughout, it may be reasonably argued that all or any kind of examination is beneficial, since it has for its object the drawing out of the one examined and is similar in meaning to the root 'educe' of the word educate meaning to lead, or to draw out.

"The average youngster taking up projection work for the first time soon gets the notion he has arrived. He can make a splice, use the oil can, trim carbons, thread 'er up and never miss a changeover, so that's all there is to it. He certainly can not see any need for a lengthy apprenticeship. Show me the kid who hasn't reasoned thus and I'll show you the 'dud.' This is natural and is the necessary foundation, provided he receives the inevitable jolt in the right manner and just at the correct point in his mental evolution.

"He may get this jolt any time, of course, but he is sure to get it on his initial examination which follows his period of apprenticeship. So what happens? He discovers that the now familiar routine of splicing, threading, and changing over is anything but the whole show, and that if he is to be as good as he thought he was he will have to do some rehearsing along other lines if the show must go on. This, then, should be the cue for the preparation of examination questions, not to confuse, not to trick, but to arouse a desire to learn, to know and to apply.

"In projection, perhaps more than in any other class of work, examinations were first instituted as a public safety measure. It did not necessarily help much the person examined at that time, except to list him as a license holder and make him eligible to hold a job.

"In some cases that's all the examination was intended to do, as that was about all the ballyhoo showman wanted in those days—'protection in the event of fire or panic.' He was hiring a licensed man and perhaps didn't trouble to mention that the man had only received his license that day. All licenses were the same to him, anyway. There was no sort of classification based on length of experience or size of theatre.

"We can not blame anybody in particular, but accept such conditions as a natural mark of the beginning. The wonder is, however, there were not more serious accidents when we recall the risks taken.

"Many people imagine that all exhibitors opposed the adoption of more stringent regulations and the introduction of examination for projectionists. But the real exhibitors encouraged the idea. He altered his theatre to meet the new order of things, purchased up-to-date equipment, and what is more to his credit, recognized the advantages of an examination system which gave him the choice of classified projectionsists.

"He conceded that while a knowledge of, say, optics may be far removed from the question of public safety, together with several other things which are now considered to be a necessary part of examination papers, he nevertheless gradually came to depend upon the licensing of projectionists by examination in his selection of the men most suitable for the care and operation of the equipment he had so painstakingly chosen and purchased.

"It would be a narrow point of observation to say that an examination benefits only the projectionist. It does, of course, develop his sense of responsibility, and as he moves through the stages of apprentice, of third-, second-, and first-class ratings, his desire grows for a more complete understanding of the many technical phases of the work. But all this reacts in results upon the industry in general. The present-day exhibitor demands and recognizes a better class of projectionists than he did even five years ago, because the public know projection when they see it, although they may not be able to analyse their preferences. It is for the projectionist to analyse, and examinations teach him how."

Beyond asking that what Mr. Barber has said, be read very carefully and considered from an unbiased standpoint, I think comment by me neither necessary nor in place. I'm sure many join me in thanking Mr. Barber most cordially for his kindness.

THE PROJECTION BUSINESS IN ALBERTA

FROM A PROJECTIONIST in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, comes the following interesting letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson, I am a projectionist at a theatre in Edmonton. I have found your Bluebook of Projection to be of great value in aiding me to prepare for a projectionist license examination. From all I have been able to learn, Alberta demands a higher standard for projectionists than is required anywhere else."

The Alberta law reads, in part:

"First Class License.—Applicants must have held a second-class license or its equivalent in Alberta or elsewhere for a period of not less than one year prior to application.

"Second Class License.—Applicants must have held a third-class license or its equivalent in Alberta or elsewhere for a period of not less than one year prior to application.

"Third Class License.—Applicants must have served some form of apprenticeship of at least six months, either as holder of an apprentice license in Alberta, or elsewhere as an assistant to a projectionist.

"Apprentice License.—Applicants must be of the full age of eighteen years and shall be vouched for by the manager of the theatre and by the projectionist under whom the apprenticeship is to be served."

Returning to the Edmonton letter:

"Examination for first-class license covers or may cover everything even remotely connected with projection, as well as all Provincial fire regulations regarding theatres and entertainment halls.

"A man under examination is permitted eight hours in which to complete his paper and must obtain a rating of 80% to pass. I am, myself, at this time a second-class man, which entitles me to project motion pictures in any hall or theatre seating less than 500. Six hours are allotted to a man to complete his paper in second-class examinations. The examination covers all projection work and fire regulations. He must obtain an 80% rating to pass. And now here is something for U.S.A. men who kick like bay steers over a two- to five-dollar license fee: The fee here for first-class license is $25; for second-class, $20; for third-class, $15; for narrow gauge (16-mm.) $10; for apprentices, $5; for renewals (January 1 each year) $2. You therefore see what Alberta projectionists are up against."

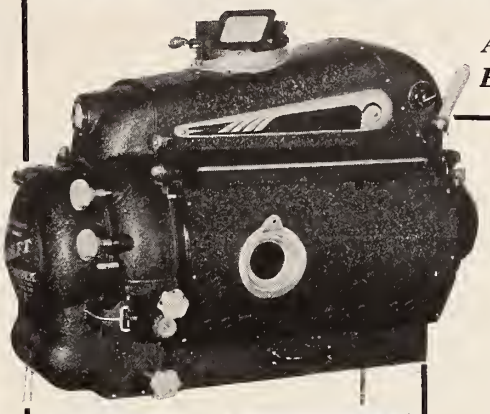
Yes, friend, but while the first- and second-class license may be pretty stiff, your men have one and a half years of practical work, coupled with study, to prepare for second-class, and two and a half years for first-class. The man who can not prepare himself to pass an examination in that length of time is, in my 'umble opinion, not fit to take charge of sound reproduction and picture projection.

Returning again to the letter:

"But enough of that. My real reason for writing is that in studying the fifth edition of the Bluebook of Projection I have come upon what may be either two contradictions or two places where I have misinterpreted your meaning. In volume 1, page 135 it says. 'It will thus be seen that with a plano-convex lens the curvature of the convex surface will always be the curvature of a circle the diameter of which is equal to the focal length of the lens.' However, on page 128, same volume, we are told that the bending of light rays (or focal length, if we consider the lens) depends upon the refractive index of the medium into which the light is entering, which statement seems to contradict that made on page 135. Please explain the matter.



"Again, on page 127 the subject of conjugate foci is treated, and from the text we gather that when the picture is in sharp focus upon the screen, the screen and film are the two conjugate foci points of the projection lens and that the distance from film to lens cannot be altered without losing sharpness of definition in the screen image. Now on page 21 (same volume) I am unable to understand that the illumination of the film photograph with parallel rays of light or otherwise can make the least difference as to distance of lens from film. So far as I am able to see the film and screen are conjugate foci points of the lens and those distances are in nowise dependent upon the angle of light rays illuminating the aperture. I intend applying for a first-class license next spring and desire that these points be cleared up."

If the good brother will re-read the two seections first cited he will see that it distinctly says, in the first, that bending of light rays depends upon two conditions, refractive index of the glass, and the angle at which the rays enter the glass. In the last instance (page 135) only the curvature of the lens is considered.

As to points of conjugate foci being affected by the angle of rays illuminating the aperture, the conjugate foci points are in some measure dependent upon the angle at which the rays enter the lens. Light travels in straight lines. Examine Figures 38 and 39, same volume, and I believe you will readily see that the diameter and the distance from the aperture of the converging element of a plano-convex condenser or a mirror will affect the angle at which the light enters the projection lens, and in that you will find your answer. If you use converging element (lens or mirror) of certain diameter at a certain distance from the aperture and change either the diameter or the distance, you will find that to maintain the sharpest possible focus you must alter the position of the projection lens slightly. I trust I have made the matter clear. If not, come again.

VENTILATION IN PROJECTION ROOMS

FROM A SMALL town in Kentucky, comes a letter saying, "While my trouble is one of health, it is possible you may help me. I am afflicted with tonsilitis, a peculiar ailment that makes one constantly tired and weak. I feel I cannot continue to do my work well if it continues. I believe the trouble is due to lack of pure air in the projection room.

"I attach a drawing of the room so that you may see what the ventilation now is. The walls of the room are hollow tile. The ceiling is 6 feet, 4 inches from the floor. I am myself 6 feet 1 inch tall, so you can see I must breath hot air all the time. Both projection and observation ports are glass covered. There is one 10-inch opening in the ceiling immediately over the projectionist when in working position at the left hand projector.

"There are no exhaust stacks on the lamphouses. The only air I get comes from the auditorium and from the negro balcony at the right. There is but little draft through the vent. What will such a condition lead to if continued?

"I have agreed to make all the necessary conduits for the vents if the management will supply the materials. I don't know whether or not I can be classed as a projectionist. Probably only a machine operator, but I do try to do my work right."

To ask a man to work under such a condition as you describe is extremely unjust. The condition is as bad as any I have ever heard of. I think the management of that little theatre certainly can not realize that with a ceiling 6 feet 4 inches high, and a vent flue right over the projectionist's head when in working position beside one of the projectors, he is breathing about one half air and one half gases from the arc. And even were that not true, the condition is very distinctly bad. It is one the health authorities of any large city would not permit a theatre to operate under for even one day.

First of all, those lamphouses should be provided with suitable exhaust pipes leading either into the vent duct or to the open air—preferably the latter. Second, if it is at all possible, the ceiling of that room should be raised at least 2 feet. If that is for any reason impractical, then most emphatically the location of the event pipe should be altered, its diameter increased to at least 18 inches, and a fresh air inlet having not less than 2 square feet of area installed, the inlet at one end of the room and the vent pipe at the other. Incidentally, the inlet must be at or near the floor level. It should be provided with a shutter so that the air current may be controlled. An exhaust fan should be installed in the vent pipe.

Certainly after due consideration the management of that theatre can not possibly fail to see the reasonableness of all this, nor do I believe it will. However, in the event the changes suggested are refused, I would advise you to quit, if you place any value on your health.

It is always possible that some men might work for a considerable time under such extremely unhealthful conditions without any visible damage, but the damage is done nevertheless and will show up later on in life. You cannot breath carbon gas and dust in quantity for extended periods without injury.

Any Competent physician will tell you that.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT CHEAP EQUIPMENT

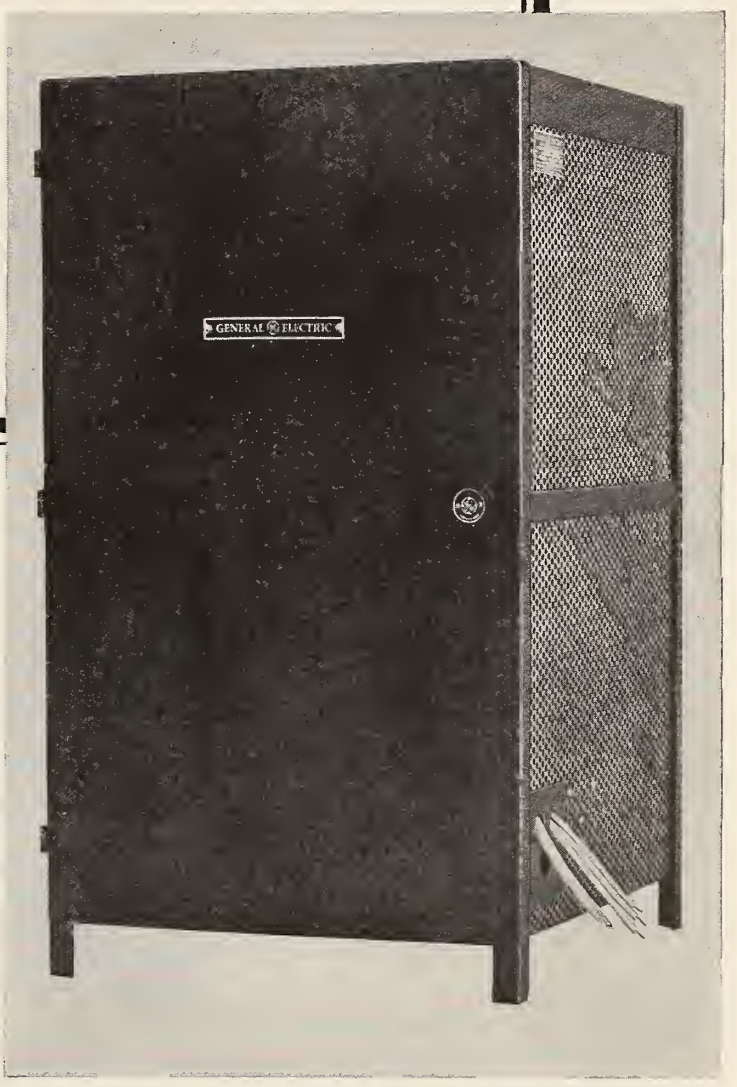
COMPLAINTS REACH my desk concerning cheap equipment offered for sale here and there, and sometimes these have been grossly misrepresented. For example, recently two second-hand rectifiers were sold to a theatre, upon delivery of which one was found to be a 110-volt and the other a 220-volt rectifier. The exhibitor was told that many theatres used one 110- and one 220-volt rectifier to rectify current for their projector light sources!

Economy is all right up to a certain point, but when prices are scaled too far down, beware! The chances are there is a colored gent in that particular woodpile and that the buyer will in the end find himself holding that well known sack. My advice is to deal with establishments of high standing among the people they serve.

BULLETIN DESCRIBES CANADIAN EFFORTS

I HAVE RECEIVED a copy of Volume 1, No. 1 of the IATSE Eleventh District Bulletin, covering Canada, edited by Arthur Milligan of Toronto, secretary-treaurer of the Eleventh District. May I compliment Brother Milligan on his most excellent first number, and also William Covert, second vice-president upon his excellent leading editorial. Brother Covert, an old and valued friend, has represented Canada on the National Executive Board of the IATSE & MPMO for many years.

I note in it that to replace the now defunct Toronto branch of the American Projection Society, the Toronto men have just perfected the organization of what they have named the International Society of Projection Engineers. The article says, in part:



"At the November meeting of a few men of the old APS Chapter, it was decided to spread the gospel of education. To begin on a new basis, or shall we say 'rebuild on an old foundation,' it was decided to change the name to International Society of Pro-

REDUCES CURRENT-COSTS

IMPROVES PROJECTION

INCREASES PROFITS

Hundreds of installations from coast to coast have proved the value of G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers For Motion Picture Service. They improve projection. And better projection makes for bigger box office receipts. They reduce current-costs . . . save from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current alone.

Those two features—plus many others, such as: smooth and uniform current-delivery, wide range of adjustments, reliability, durability, quietness, coolness and safety — place the G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier Unit in a class by itself.

G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers For Projection Service are made in two standard sizes: 40-50 amperes for 6-7 mm trim; and 50-65 amperes for 6.5-8 mm trim. All other ratings may be built to order. To operate a spotlight, two units can be connected in series to supply the necessary voltage.

ULTRA-VIOLET RAY PROCESS OF RECORDING

CONSIDERABLE INTERERST is being taken in RCA's new system of recording sound with ultra-violet rays only, which was described recently by Glenn L. Dimmick, RCA Photophone engineer, before the meeting of the New York section of the SMPE.

This new recording essentially represents an attempt to improve the photography of sound so as to get greater detail, and thus to capture the frequencies that may otherwise be lost.

The matter stacks up something like this (to reduce the explanation of RCA engineers to simpler terms): White light is composed of the various primary colors, into which it may readily be separated. Each of the primary colors tend to focus at different distances from the optical center or point of a lens, hence white light can not be focused with absolute sharpness, and to obtain recording that will reproduce faithfully all variations of the original sound, the picture of its characteristics on the film sound track must perforce be sharp and clear in all its details. This is of great importance, of course, when reproducing the higher frequency tones, this for the reason that they are represented on the sound track by the finely spaced peaks and valleys of RCA recording. Ultra-violet light is at the short-wave end of the spectrum and may be focused sharply, and greater definition, photographically, is achieved.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

• Mr. Hulsken is a member of the American Institute of Architects and has long specialized in theatre designing. In this department he will be glad to answer questions pertaining to preliminary considerations involved in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. Working plans and designs can not be supplied, however, since this department may not assume the functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York.

The Question:

WE ARE EXPECTING to build a theatre building in this town as soon as the weather permits. We are enclosing a sketch of the proposed building and would appreciate it if you would answer the following questions regarding our plan:

(1) Do you think the height is sufficient for the foyer and the entrance to the foyer? The height of the foyer is 10 feet, the height of the entrance is 12 feet, sloping to 10 feet where it enters the foyer.

(2) Do you advise placing the box office 4 feet back from the front of the building, and would you place it in the center of the entrance or put it on one side of the entrance?

(3) Would you advise putting double doors on each side of the box office?

(4) Would you have plate glass over the last row of seats between the foyer and the auditorium so that those waiting in the foyer might see the picture?

(5) As you may note on the sketch, the ceiling beams drop 10 feet below the height of the beam behind it. Our idea is to save on the height of the rear of the building. If this is practical, would you have the ceiling on a gradual slope, or as shown?

(6) What width would you make the screen?

(7) What do you think of the following specifications: concrete floor. Masonite or Celotex for ceiling; Walls, 8 inches of brick and 6 inches of cinder block for auditorium, store walls 12 inches of brick.

(8) Approximately how many will our building seat?

If and when the town needs a larger theatre, we expect to add 20 feet on the rear of the building. We are wondering if it would be better to build the floor on a grade suitable for use when we add the 20 feet, or would you build the floor on a grade suitable only for the size of building that we are building now. Please advise us if you think the height is sufficient for a balcony which we may add later. The seats in the balcony will be on both sides and in front of the projection room.—E. R. E.

The Answer:

I WILL ANSWER your questions in the order you have submitted them:

(1) Yes. (2) The center of the projection room should be on a line with the center of the auditorium. Place the front of this room flush with rear wall of auditorium. Plan for a toilet room off this room. If you can increase the width of 17 feet, do so. (3) If the projection room is of fireproof construction, as it should be, all that is required is one fireproof door. I know of no reason why double doors on each side should be installed. (4) This is a very good idea. I always have advised that this be done. (5) Personally, I prefer a level ceiling and I am afraid if you construct it as shown on your sketch, the proscenium arch will be too low, and I do not think that the saving derived from your construction will justify your doing so. (6) Make the screen as wide as the maximum height will allow. (7) I think your specifications are all right, but suggest that you build 12-inch brick piers in the 8-inch brick walls wherever the roof beams are to be supported. (8) The seating capacity on the lower floor will be about 600 seats. The toilet rooms should be redesigned. It is necessary to provide for an anteroom or vestibule before entering the toilets so as to keep out noise from the rest of the theatre and also to enhance privacy.

If you expect to enlarge the theatre by adding 20 feet later on, you may just as well start the slope of the auditorium floor at the first row of seats.

The height of the present auditorium ceiling is not sufficient for the installation of a balcony, as the first row of the balcony will be 10 feet above the high point of the auditorium floor, and there should be at least 8 feet, 6 inches from rear chairs to ceiling. How many rows you intend to plan in the balcony depends on how much space will be required between the first and the last row. The slope of the auditorium floor may also be increased.

The Question:

I AM GOING to make a few changes very shortly in my building and wish you could recommend to me some inexpensive way of making my projection room more sound-proof. Enclosed is a rough sketch.

The front and two side walls are just the plain brick wall, while the ceiling is of wood covered with heavy galvanized tin. The floor is of wood also and is covered with the same galvanized tin. The wall towards the screen in which the portholes are located seem to be of galvanized tin inside with some kind of furry substance hanging down between the tin and the other wooden wall part of it. Guess it is sound-absorbing felt.—B. B. H.

The Answer:

TO SOUND-PROOF your projection room, I suggest that the galvanized iron parts and masonry walls be furred out with ¾-inch wood stripping. On this apply sound-absorbing tiles or boards, such as Celotex, Nu-Wood or similar material of standard make. The wall between auditorium and projection room, and the ceiling should be treated, on both sides. (See accompanying diagram.)

Section through projection room showing sound-proofing. Scale: 1/8-inch equals 1 foot

For the floor, see to it that the galvanized iron covering is securely nailed to the wood sub-floor. Fasten over the metal, a layer of canvas and cement asphalt tiles (or linoleum) to this.

The Question:

WE HAVE a building 35-x50 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling, which we are planning on remodeling for a theatre. We plan on 280 or 300 seats.—V. K. F.

The Answer:

I AM UNABLE to figure out how it will be possible to get a theatre with a seating capacity of from 280 to 300 seats in a building 35x50 feet.

There certainly will have to be provisions for a lobby, which should be at least 8 feet deep, and there has to be space for speaker equipment, projection screen and thickness of walls, so that the maximum number of rows obtainable will be ten.

The largest amount of seats which can be placed across the width of the auditorium will be 16, so the total seating capacity can not exceed 160.

I doubt if such a small theatre would warrant the investment necessary to remodel and install proper equipment, so my advice is to look for a larger building.

The Question:

OUR COMPANY is dickering for a parcel of ground for the erection of a new theatre. We would appreciate it very much if you would advise us as to the seating capacity we can expect (including balcony) probable cost, etc.

This theatre will be in a suburban business section of a large city. The ground is 60x110 feet.—R. E. C.

The Answer:

A THEATRE with a floor area 60x110 feet may be planned to have a seating capacity of 1,000 to 1,050 seats—750 seats on the lower floor, and about 300 seats in the balcony. This capacity is based on planning for stage, foyer and lobby.

The minimum cost of such a theatre should be figured at not less than 18c per cubic foot, making a total approximate cost of $47,500. This includes general, heating, ventilating, electric wiring and plumbing contracts, but not equipment.

The Question:

I AM contemplating building a theatre on a lot 25 feet wide in the clear, and 150 feet long, and I want a seating capacity of 350 seats. Will you kindly tell me how the seating should be arranged and how long the building will have to be. I am not planning on building a stage. Would you also plan the size of the lobby?

I own the buildings on both sides of the lot, which are each 60 feet long and can be used for the walls of the theatre. I am also planning a very small basement. Could you give me an estimate on the cost of the building. How high should the building be?

How should the interior be built for good acoustics—A. A. M.

The Answer:

SINCE YOU INTEND to use the side walls of the adjoining buildings, the width of the auditorium will be 25 feet in the clear. This will allow eleven seats across the width after deduction has been made for an aisle along each side wall. To obtain a seating capacity of 350 seats, you will require 32 rows, spacing them 2 feet, 6 inches from back to back. This will take a floor space of 80 feet. As you do not plan to build a stage, there should be at least 20 feet provided for speakers, screen and space between first row of seats and screen.

Plan for an 8-foot foyer or cross-aisle, and a 14-foot lobby. The minimum total length of the building thus will be at least 125 feet. It would be best to have a ceiling height not less than 17 feet above the high part of the auditorium floor.

For acoustical treatment of walls and ceiling, use acoustical plaster or sound-absorbing tiles. The latter lend themselves admirably to decorative treatment.

Not being familiar with the construction of the adjoining buildings, which side walls you intend to use, it is impossible for me to give you a comprehensive estimate. However, a theatre of this size, entirely new, would cost about $17,000, exclusive of equipment.

The Question:

I AM contemplating building a small theatre of 250 seats and would like a few ideas and suggestions. I have a lot 70x100 feet. I want the building to be of wood construction with a brick veneer front. I also want a balcony for negroes of about 50 seats, this to be on either side of the projection booth.

I would certainly appreciate your giving me some sort of schematic layout and any other ideas that you might be able to propose on this matter. This building must of a necessity be of wooden construction because I am not able to build any other type. Lumber is cheap here.—J. R. H.

The Answer:

I AM SORRY to state that it is impossible for this department to furnish any sketches for an actual theatre project. Your lot, 70x100 feet, is certainly large enough for a theatre with a seating capacity of 250 seats. Half the width will be more than necessary.

Place the chairs in a row of thirteen or fourteen across the width of the auditorium with a wall aisle on each side. This will require an outside width of 30 feet.

I am not acquainted with the building code covering theatres in your State, but I advise you to find out if it is permissible to build this theatre out of wood construction, especially when a balcony is planned for. The projection room must be entirely of fireproof construction, of course.

TWO THEATRES BUILT TO FIT A POLICY

width of the building (deducting the narrow panels mentioned) provide attraction boards. Above these the name, Ascot, is emblazoned prominently in modern lettering, neon against Formica. The name is repeated vertically at top and above the building line on a two-way sign set at right angles to the facade.

Decorative treatment of the Ascot auditorium radiates from the proscenium arch. Tan curtain and drapes flank the Raytone screen. The proscenium arch is bordered in conservative design which is varied immediately and repeated steadily thereafter with diminishing frequency as the decorative scheme is continued back over a vaulted ceiling. These lateral bands are transversed by five horizontal counterparts. One of these on each side is unbroken save at intersections, where indirect lighting fixtures of diffusive wall type are placed; another on each side is punctuated by stylized medallions, and one at mid-ceiling is broken by medallions in a geometric pattern. Tan predominates in a color scheme which includes ivory, red and touches of gold. The decorative figures are stencilled upon acoustic plaster.

The mezzanine lounge of the Ascot is in three divisions, as pertains to view of screen, although in fact, it is a single space. It is completely carpeted adn informally arranged with unfixed chairs for patrons' use. Men's and women's retiring rooms are located off this space.

DESIGN OF THE SURREY

The Surrey front is dominated by a marquee understudded with rows of lights and surmounted on three sides by neon statements of the theatre name, surrounded by a frame-like figure continuing, at outer corners, downward to link up the ensemble with a single strip of lights bordering four-line changeable letter program copy, the display spaces facing up, down and across street. Neon tubing on the marquee soffit is bent briefly into the vestibule, where the box office projects slightly from the wall at the buyer's right. Walls, previously described, bear indirectly lighted walnut display frames.

Somewhat more formally treated than that of the Ascot, the auditorium of the Surrey looks toward a rectangular proscenium. A small, severely plain figure edges the proscenium arch, giving way immediately to straight lines repeated at progressively wider intervals to a point beyond forward exits.

Save for functional panels backing plainly designed lighting fixtures, widely separated, the tan side walls are plain, joining, in a gentle arc, the flat ceiling. Here a stiffly formalized pattern trisects the ceiling laterally and is broken twice at right angles by identical bands which combine to compose a frame centering a circular, indirect lighting fixture supplying the major source of illumination when lights are up.

The Surrey mezzanine lounge is undivided with respect to outlook upon the screen. As in the Ascot, retiring rooms are off this space and movable chairs are provided for patrons.

THE NEEDLE'S EYE

A billion and a half dollars worth of entertainment each year —the fate of the box offices of the world —depends upon good projection

WHEN St. Luke—Chapter 18, Verse 25—was trying for a metaphor denoting the extremely difficult, he wrote: "For it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle," etc.

That probably referred not to a sewing needle but was a picturesque designation of the narrow slitted, one-man side gates of the walled cities of Syria.

However, the putting of the camel through the needle's eye is no considerable undertaking as compared to the performance of the motion picture projector which puts maybe a billion and a half dollars' worth of entertainment in the United States each year through an aperture about the size of a postage stamp.

No other art or industry in the world narrows down the essence of its success in performance and delivery to quite such a needle's eye as that through which all of the motion picture has to pass.

The job is done in the continuous miracle of the screen by a man and his machine, the projectionist and his projector. They both have to be endowed with a competency close to perfection.

A theatre may have acres of carpets, miles of seats, tons of machinery, an army of staff, but the supreme essence of what it is all about goes through a spot 0.600 of an inch high and 0.825 wide—the picture opening in the aperture plate. Back of that stands the whole of the great production plant from Hollywood to London, and in front of it is the fate of the box offices of the world.

Projectionists have become so competent, machines so perfect in function, that we often tend to forget about projection. But after all it is not, in all of its perfection, automatic. High standards of projection are to be maintained only by unrelenting vigilance, constant, unwavering attention to that needle's eye of the industry. Ten thousandths of an inch, hundredths of a second, matter vastly at the needle's eye, and again out on the screen. In a considerable number of theatres, still, despite all of the facilities available, projection is yet to be brought up to the best attainable standards.

A great deal has been set down about refinements and enhancements of sound recording in "wide range" and "high fidelity" and much has been said about the necessity for bringing sound reproduction channels up to capacity to deliver all that the sound track carries. Meanwhile refinements of the camera, lenses and photographic emulsions, studio lighting and actinic values have also given to today's negatives and prints a new range of values in tone and quality that can be delivered to the audience only by the best of equipment and projectionist skill.

Brides Are Like That

Warners release of First National production, supervised by Bryan Foy. Directed by William McGann. Screen play by Ben Markson. From the play, 'Applesauce,' by Barry Conners. Photography by Sidney Hickox. Assistant director, Carroll Sax. Dialog director, Harry Seymour. Cast: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise, Joseph Cawthorn, Kathleen Lockhart, Gene Lockhart, Richard Purcell, Mary Treen, Joseph Crehan, Frank Darien, Robert Emmett Keane, Kay Hughes. Previewed at Warners Hollywood. Running time, 67 mins.

Comes as near perfection in sprightly, heart-warming comedy as the average diversion seeker will find. And if it doesn't return handsomely on the investment it will be because of inadequate selling.

Freely adapted from the Barry Conners play, 'Applesauce,' the screen version is a happy collaboration by Bryan Foy, who has given it perfect production coaching in every respect; by Ben Markson with a sparkling and poignant screen play; by the delightfully idyllic teamwork of Ross Alexander and Anita Louise and their able support, and by William McGann, whose direction crisply captures and delicately balances all the richly human comic and romantic elements.

For Ross Alexander and Anita Louise, and for Director McGann the picture certainly marks hightide. To expound the amusing tribulations of a young bridal pair beset by the harsh practicalities of a world represented by their elders and guardians, two youngsters couldn't have been found in the film roster who might better have done the job than Alexander and Miss Louise. This is intelligent use of talent by Warners-First National, and the two young leads have taken every advantage of the opportunity. Alexander's boyish, ingratiating personality will endear him to women particularly, young and not so young, and he plays the role of the applesaucer, who believes honeyed words are worth more than gold, with delicate skill and persuasive romantic manner. Part should put him in high demand, especially for pictures appealing to youth.

Miss Louise complements with charming appeal as the ingenue torn between the ardent lovemaking of the glib young man and the practical, plodding doctor, Richard Purcell. She reveals fine, facile talent.

Joseph Cawthorn, as the applesaucer's irascible uncle, fed up on his free spending-without-spinning, nephew contributes his standard tongue-twisting character, unleasing plenty laughs and a humorous gustiness. Gene Lockhart and his wife, Kathleen Lockhart, are playing together for first time in pictures, are a comic combo standout in their domestic squabbles as girl's parents. Customers will want to see more of their teaming. Lockhart's valid character antics are especially effective for wow laughs. Richard Purcell, playing the straight and deliberately dull-witted antagonist to Alexander does a capital job. Mary Treen is in for good short role, as is Joseph Crehan. Kay Hughes is bright and clear-cut in role of Miss Louise's temporary rival. Frank Darien and Robert Emmett Keane ably complete well selected cast.

Ben Markson's script, sparkling with well-selected dialog, is a top job of writing, blending comedy with constantly entertaining story advancement, keeping characters legitimate in the homespun-idyllic mood of the piece, and beautifully rounding his scenes with nice emotional quality and the genuine feel of youth in the love scenes.

William McGann's direction is always crisp, well in hand, alert to every value, deftly balaned and timed. And in both direction and writing, a lilting cheeriness and buoyancy has been kept as essential quality, to send audiences out in happy amusement.

Technically the picture is well put up, with Sidney Hickox's photography rating high, and dialog direction by Harry Seymour deserving very honorable mention.

ALPHABETIFICATION

DISTRIBUTION - PRODUCTION talk, more especially in budgeting Hollywood, is full of picture classifications "A" and "B".

An "A" picture is one that costs a lot of money and earns something resembling a lot of money. A "B" picture is one that is designed to fill up the program of output and does "as well as could be expected."

If a "B" picture does "A" picture business, it then becomes an "A" picture, and whoever can get to the center of the stage to take the bows first is a genius.

If, on the other hand, either an "A" picture does "B" business, or a "B" picture does no business, then nobody said anything and nothing occurred and we'll hear no more of it.

Paramount Pictures Corporation contributes an interesting variant in the alphabetification with an announcement of a schedule which contemplates three grades of pictures: "AA", "A" and "B". This obviously leaves open the opportunity for a competitor to announce an all "A" program, to consist of "AAA" and "AA" and just "A" pictures.

The cheerful constructive fact is that the whole motion picture industry, by dint of the force of experience, is beginning to admit that there are several publics and various strata of audiences and of theatres, and even of buying moods within audiences. It is being discovered that there may be honor and profit and glory in being a "Buck" Jones as well as being a Barrymore, and that there are even a lot of people in the world who would rather see a knock-'em-stiff serial than a super-feature.

Eventually it will be discovered that no small part of the troubles of the screen arise from covering too much territory with one negative. The mechanical repetitive process of the motion picture printer is a constant invitation to the process of selling pictures beyond their proper markets and thereby creating vast mass indigestions, bilious attacks and vertigo of the body politic.

WHOSE JOB?

DISCUSSING "It Can't Happen Here", the St. Louis Post-Dispatch says: "If the great power of the movies for education and enlightenment cannot be used in behalf of American democracy by depicting its antithesis, then the industry's plight is a sad one . . ."

Who told the Post-Dispatch that it was the movies' job to save the nation—what are statesmen and journalists supposed to be doing?

Is it "education and enlightenment" in its columns that makes the Post-Disptach advertising columns valuable?

FAME and FIGURES

FAME somehow contrives to acquire from time the multiplied dimensions of the long arm of the pantograph. Mayhap the law obtaining is that which lengthens the shadows as sunset approaches. Anyway the rule is: the older the greater, the bigger the more glorious.

Just now, incident to honors for Mr. David Wark Griffith from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, there is a wave of discussion of what he has done, including "The Birth of a Nation", of course, and "Intolerance". Characteristic of present attentions is the calm statement in the New York Times that "Intolerance" . . . "cost $2,500,000—which is believed to be an all time high . . ."

The fact is that "Intolerance" cost $330,000, or three times the cost of "The Birth of a Nation" at $110,000.

It is a token of our times and the higher arithmetic of these days, including the motion picture and the New Deal, that such figures will immediately be greeted as implausible. In terms of today's money maybe "Intolerance" is after all to be called two and a half million dollars' worth.

THE invention of a new substance for polarizing light, by Mr. Edwin H. Land of Boston, obviously makes available another approach to the stereoscopic motion picture—as always, only with a viewing device. But that will not deter the constant crop of hopefuls who, ignoring optics and physiology, keep on anticipating three dimension pictures for the naked eyes. Like perpetual motion, the notion persists.

"ONE does not need to be a Solomon to comprehend that a $200,000 picture cannot successfully compete with a million dollar 'epic' or even one costing half as much," observes Mr. Chester B. Bahn, cinema critic of the Syracuse Herald. There's "The Informer", for instance.

THE current story that Mr. James Hogan, directing "Desert Gold," has been having trouble getting his college bred Indian extras to act like redskins, reminds one of the difficulties that Mr. Robert Flaherty had teaching some Eskimos to build snow houses and Mr. Martin Johnson's school for lion spearing which he conducted among the docile farming Lumbwa tribesmen he took a-hunting in Tanganyika.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Palliative

Fears that television, when it comes, will exert competition against theatres were strongly discounted this week by M. H. Aylesworth, who predicted that the development would be coordinated with radio broadcasting and talking pictures.

Furthermore, Mr. Aylesworth believed that television would be limited to the home, and that only short films would be televised. It might, however, be used in theatres, but merely as a novelty, he maintained.

Meanwhile David Sarnoff, president of RCA, announced the company's first field tests of television to begin shortly in New York and elsewhere. This and other developments in the field of television are recounted in the story on page 65.

Surcease

The motion picture commences to breathe more easily as the 13 state legislatures in session this season start to adjourn, with virtually complete victory in sight for the industry in its defense against a most severe attack both in Congress and the states, where some 48 bills of various burdensome nature were presented by legislators.

A discussion of what is being done in Washington with relation to admission taxes, with a threatened lowering of exemptions to 10 cents, as well as comments on new measures introduced into the various legislatures, is found on page 15.

"Ecstasy"

After being denied a temporary injunction against Metropolis Pictures, Inc., in the New York supreme court, Eureka Productions, Inc., American distributor of the Czechoslovakian "Ecstasy," took its fight to the appellate division, where Judge Erwin Untermyer on Monday restrained the defendant from using the word "Ecstasy" in the title of its film, known as "Young Love" but advertised as "Ecstasy of Young Love."

The order was aimed at use of the word "in such a manner as to mislead or deceive the public into believing that it is the plaintiff's picture," according to Henry J. Pearlman, Eureka's attorney.

The picture had been scheduled for showing at the 55th Street Playhouse, but was canceled because of the suit, and it opened Monday under the composite title at the Bijou Theatre, operated by S. S. Krellberg. Both sides agreed on trial of the case March 23 in the supreme court. Eureka also asks $250,000 damages.

Newspaper advertising over the weekend displayed the words "Ecstasy" and "Young Love" in equal size, without undue prominence to the disputed word. That was a condition laid down by the New York Times.

On Tuesday Mr. Krellberg again took the matter before Judge Untermyer, claiming that the injunction did not affect the theatre, which contention the court overruled. The picture continued at the Bijou, but under the title "Young Love." All reference to "Ecstasy" was deleted in publicity and advertising.

While ruling that the need for a temporary injunction in advance of trial was not clearly shown, Judge William T. Collins in supreme court late last week cautioned Metropolis to avoid giving the impression that its picture was the much-publicized "Ecstasy," which has been condemned widely for its obscenity.

Judge Collins held: "If the plaintiff's film had been exhibited in this country and attained a local popularity under the title 'Ecstasy,' the defendants would be prohibited from palming off their picture, 'Ecstasy of Young Love,' for that of the plaintiff's 'Ecstasy.'

"The publicity which the banning of 'Ecstasy' received does not entitle the plaintiff to protect that name by a temporary injunction. More than foreign use and local publicity must be shown. The 'right arises out of the actual application of the mark to the vendible goods' (Bayuk Cigars, Inc., v. Schwartz, supra). It does not follow that the defendants may profit by the plaintiff's advertising and essay to pass their picture 'Ecstasy of Young Love' for that of the plaintiff's 'Ecstasy.'

"The defendants should be scrupulous—more scrupulous than they have been—not to lead the public into the belief that 'Ecstasy of Young Love' is the 'Ecstasy' which because of its obscenity has obtained such prominence and for which an appetite has been whetted."

Music Taxes

In two weeks, said Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music, exhibitors will know whether they are to pay a double music tax to Warner Bros. Meanwhile it was learned this week that the company does not now have such a levy in mind, believing that "the producer should pay the tax."

With the two large radio networks still refusing to be Warner-licensed, Harry M. Warner let it be known that the company is planning a third nationwide chain, in opposition. In full force, the campaign of litigation continues, with a total of 97 infringement actions against broadcasters and the first 10 of a series of suits against hotels and night clubs.

In Canada, H. T. Jamieson, president of the Canadian Performing Rights Society, answered a House of Commons attack on the Society as "an outrageous racket," pleaded for public support in its "struggle" against commercial music users, and demanded that it be permitted to charge the same rates as in England. Developments on both sides of the border are recounted in the stories starting on page 48.

Transferred

Ed Olmstead, Columbia's coast publicity director, has been transferred to New York, with Bill Thomas succeeding as top man in the Hollywood publicity office. . . . Twelve hundred and fifty member and their guests attended the annual Academy Awards banquet. . . . IATSE voted to abandon the two per cent tax on members which heretofore was used for the defense fund. . . . Hal Roach announced a revised schedule of twelve one-reel "Our Gang" comedies and six feature comedies to be released through MGM. . . . Burroughs-Tarzan acquired screen rights to "Alcatraz" from J. J. Gilbert. . . . Pat O'Brien was suspended by Warner for refusing a part in "Stage Struck." . . . Joe Shea, Pat Patterson and Mel Riddle joined the Paramount publicity staff. . . . Mel Templeton resigned as Paramount budget chief to accept a similar post with London Films.

French Taxes

A notice published in Paris in the "Journal des Contributions Indirects" quotes figures provided by Assistant Trade Commissioner Earle C. Taylor giving theatre tax receipts for 1935 at 81,316,000 francs, 22,007,000 below budget estimate. The tax on theatres in 1934 yielded 93,444,000 francs, approximately 13 per cent more than in 1935.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Boycott

Following a personal request by Manuel Azana, Spanish premier, the Catalonian Regional Government has urged arbitration of the exhibitors' protest against MGM's rentals and of the demanded removal of Jacques Edelstein, local manager for the distributor, a cable dispatch from Barcelona said Wednesday.

Exhibitors who have been dealing with MGM are seeking a revision of the distributors' contracts. MGM and Mutua, the local film board, have declined, with the board solidly behind the distributor.

On Monday night the exhibitors began a boycott against MGM. All distributors, with the exception of RKO and Columbia, who are not members of Mutua, will retaliate. Mutua has notified exhibitors of its stand and retaliatory moves will become effective eight days after legal notice has been given.

In New York the MGM home office said it had no knowledge of the cause of the Barcelona exhibitors' protest, but after receiving a cable from Mr. Edelstein, Mort Spring, assistant to Arthur Loew, MGM foreign manager, cabled the Paris office to start investigation.

Decentralized

Local operation of its approximately 1,000 theatres throughout the country will continue as a permanent feature of company policy, according to John E. Otterson, president. This policy was introduced in 1932 and results pursuant to its adoption are reported such as to argue decisively against return to the previously maintained system of centralized operation.

Practically all the company's theatre partnerships have been renewed on a long term basis. It is said that only the A. H. Blank Circuit and the Texas Consolidated theatres operated by Karl Hoblitzelle are not yet definitely set in this respect and that buy-back options held in these cases have been extended to April 1st and April 4th respectively to facilitate further study.

Dramatist Part

If the Broadway producing managers stick to their guns not to sign the new basic minimum agreement promulgated by the Dramatists' Guild last week, film production would be affected by the threatened curtailment of stage production, which has been a lively source of stories and talent for the screen.

The managers this week affirmed their objections to the new pact which sharply reduces their share in film rights sales. A meeting Wednesday of the contract committee of the League of New York Theatres, to which most of the producing managers belong, was followed on Thursday by a general membership meeting.

The Dramatists' Guild remained firm, declaring that the new terms are mild in comparison with what some of the members wanted, and that modifications would not meet with the members' approval.

Meanwhile a move to unify the managers and producers against the agreement was launched by a group of self-styled "younger producers" headed by James B. Ullman. Among its members are Frederick W. Ayer and Robinson Smith, producers of "Parnell." These producers notified the Guild they had pledged themselves against reading or buying scripts submitted by Guild members.

There also are threats of producing plays by non-Guild members, these playwrights, however, being unestablished, since virtually every recognized dramatist is a member of the Guild. Too, producers could become co-authors, or even list themselves as authors of their plays, and thus participate in the entire film rights, it was pointed out.

The playbrokers, who stand midway between the two factions, generally do not favor the agreement. Dramatists are discussing a franchise system for brokers which would prevent them from dealing with non-Guild members if they wanted to continue handling the works of Guild members.

The clause in the agreement dealing with the sale of screen rights prior to stage production, which opens the road to Hollywood subsidization of Broadway, is uncompleted, and is to be amplified to include provisions agreed upon by the Guild and film producers.

Excitement

Two unexpected developments enlivened the hearings on the Pettengill anti-block booking bill which opened Monday before the subcommittee of the House interstate and foreign commerce committee:

(1) Representative Francis D. Culkin announced he would discard his bill to create a motion picture commission and would concentrate on other block booking legislation; (2) the attorney general's office gave the committee an opinion that it believed legislation to outlaw the practices under fire would be sustained in the courts.

As the hearing progressed there appeared a doubt among committee members as to whether the Pettengill bill was the reform measure it is claimed or merely a device to obtain Congressional settlement of an industry controversy. The hearing is reported in the story starting on page 51.

Fading Relief

Hope for enactment of copyright legislation—and relief for payers of music taxes—at this session of Congress virtually faded this week when the House patents committee decided to extend its hearings on the subject four or five additional weeks.

Opponents of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers this week returned the fire directed at them by ASCAP interests in the last two weeks.

Senator F. Ryan Duffy, sponsor of the bill bearing his name, assailed the Society for its charges and defended his measure, declaring it would "remove the blackjack which enables ASCAP to levy an unconscionable tax on music users." See page 53.

More Furore

Furore greeting release of Mae West's Paramount picture, "Klondike Annie," swelled to resounding proportions this week, echoed back and forth across the nation, as the film appeared in more cities and towns and was prevented from appearing in others on divers grounds. While the Hearst newspapers continued colorful denunciation, exhibitors rearranged program schedules to accommodate anticipated capacity attendance.

Public figures expressed themselves freely, for and against the star and picture, and the Legion of Decency issued a statement urging renewed vigilance on the part of all persons interested in the maintenance of wholesome pictures. Details on page 34.

Soviet Buying

An intensive study by a commission of Russian film engineers has led them to recommend that the Soviet film industry pattern its expansion after American technique.

Also, they have found that American film equipment is the "best," and large purchases are foreshadowed. A second commission arrived this week. See page 68.

IT'S OPEN SEASON FOR STAR-STUDIO SQUABBLES

Court Reserves Decision Until Monday in Cagney's Attempt to Abrogate $4,500 a Week Contract on Overwork Charge

Spring's call to the great outdoors merrily echoes over Hollywood's hilltops, and a round half-dozen of the film colony's well-known inhabitants have answered it, walking out on their studios as they passed the contractual barriers which normally confine them to motion picture acting; in some cases the more daring even abandoned their posts on pictures in the making.

It is the day of loud temperamental outbursts by the stars in Hollywood, the reverberations rocking the walls of both studios and courtrooms as some of the really recalcitrant players plaintively air their socalled "grievances" in the open.

Outstanding in the star-versus-studio fracas is the case of "Bad Boy" James Cagney, who haled the Warners into a courtroom and a public trial to abrogate his contract. Mr. Cagney pitifully pleaded that the brothers are overworking him—at $4,500 a week!

Choice epithets were hurled across the crowded Los Angeles courtroom by both sides, for judge, spectators and reporters for the national newspress wire services to hear. And there the battle rested for a decision by Justice Charles L. Bogue next monday.

"Our chief interest in this case is to see that people are made to live up to their contracts," openly declared Mr. Warner between rounds of the courtroom clash. And that seemed to be the chief interest of Mr. Warner in connection with the outbursts of other stars on his lot.

Regardless of the justification, or lack of it, in the present matters, a growing haughtiness on the part of some stars in the top ranks appears to be discernible as far as Broadway.

The present "open season" in Hollywood for star shootings at studio heads already has embroiled George Raft, Marlene Dietrich and Mae West at Paramount, and Ann Dvorak, Pat O'Brien and Mr. Cagney at Warner, all with varying consequences.

Paramount both won and lost the Raft tilt, labeled along Hollywood Boulevard as a case of "professional jealousy." Mr. Raft had objected to the cameraman assigned to shoot him with Carole Lombard. The sleekhaired star complained that Cinematographer Teddy Tetzlaff gave Miss Lombard "all the breaks." Mr. Tetzlaff was not removed, but Paramount pacified Mr. Raft with another assignment.

Marlene Dietrich just upped and walked off the Paramount lot, in the middle of shooting, for a trip to Europe. Paramount got her "promise" to return some time—probably in September.

Mae West dropped Paramount and Paramount dropped Mae West.

Pat O'Brien dropped Pat O'Brien—and Mr. O'Brien has remained dropped, having objected to the kind of parts assigned to him.

The Ann Dvorak affair was a contract fight, both sides winning.

Mr. Cagney's and Miss Dvorak's airing of their contractual troubles publicly in the courtroom might be construed as evidence of how little Hollywood's "big names" think of existing industry conciliation machinery for adjusting differences between player and producer. Both stars are members of the "independent" Screen Actors' Guild, but neither submited their cases to the Guild's conciliation committee, nor were they presented at this time to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' conciliation committee for actors. Both pranced into court without further ado.

The cases of the stars versus the studios and/or the studios versus the stars are appended hereto:

James Cagney vs. Warners

The public has never before had the opportunity of listening at first hand to such choice enlightenments on studio-star relations as those offered in the open courtrooms of Los Angeles in the trial of James Cagney vs. Warner Brothers, from whom the "Bottom" of Warners' Shakespeare sought the protecting arm of justice against Warners' alleged insistence that he appear in five instead of four pictures yearly.

The New York-born and Brooklyn-raised vaudeville "hoofer" freely testified that he "saved" Jack Warners' "face" with his older brothers, and expressed the fear that under the present Warner system he'll wear out his public's "welcome."

And between rounds at the trial, Warner studio officials freely admitted that Mr. Cagney had been a "headache" to the studio from the day he arrived at Burbank, in 1932, or thereabouts, starting with "Penny Arcade." Jimmy Cagney, it was remembered, had trouble remembering his lines—until the studio gave him a raise. Then he could remember. For $700 a week he had no difficulty in learning the same lines he couldn't learn for $450.

James Cagney received a temporary injunction restraining Warners from interfering with his attempts to obtain an acting contract elsewhere. Jack Warner, in charge of production at Burbank, was cited in the complaint as having made the oral agreement. Trial started on March 4, before Judge Charles I. Bogue.

The producer's card index system of featured players was described by Mr. Sherman as a "blacklisting" scheme.

That Cagney, the fighting type of box office star, carried the role literally into his relations with the Warners was indicated when the lawyer testified concerning a special meeting of the arbitration committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, called to settle a situation similar to the present one, in September, 1932. Mr. Cagney at that time, however, was seeking a new contract with a sliding wage scale beginning at $3,500 a week.

The meeting was brought about after the Academy had been asked by Mr. Cagney to release his card because he had ended his services with Warners and was free-lancing.

Mr. Cagney, however, did turn an ear when his attorney, Mr. Sherman, told about a meeting in which Jack Warner assertedly expressed the opinion that Cagney's demands for more money were not justified.

"He (Warner) said he didn't think Cagney is as important as he thinks he is," Mr. Sherman testified, "and that Cagney was getting paid enough."

In order to insure his being a "good boy," James Cagney agreed to an indemnity arrangement with Warners in 1932, whereby $1,250 per week of his weekly salary was to be impounded. "That was satisfactory to me," the star testified.

Importance to an actor of the billing he receives on the marquee of a theatre was cited by Cagney in his testimony. The actor complained that Warners violated a clause in his contract under which he was to be given first billing over other actors. In his last two pictures, the plaintiff asserted, Joan Blondell and Pat O'Brien had received that honor, respectively.

Jack Warner, testifying later, claimed that he had not mentioned to Cagney an annual limit of four pictures but admitted saying that making five would be a vitual impossibility in the 40-week period covered by the contract.

Fredric March, Lester Cowan and Oliver H. P. Garrett took the stand and stated that Warner at the Academy arbitration committee meeting held in 1932 had declared that he did not think that his distribution staff could sell more than four Cagney pictures a year.

William Cagney, brother and business manager of the plaintiff, told of the star's refusal to accept a new contract which, he claimed, was offered him in September, 1935.

STEAMFITTER VERSUS STAR

While Hollywood's stars and studios were squaring off in contractual battles and for an assortment of other reasons, Ben Lyon and a steamfitter were locked in a fistic encounter in a Detroit motion picture theatre, where Actor Lyon, appearing with Bebe Daniels, his wife, took a blow on the jaw, a blackened eye and split lip from the husky boilermaker.

Seems that Actor Lyon resented Steamfitter Thomas James's comments on the Lyon-Daniels act at Detroit's Fox theatre, and when Ben attempted to reprimand the boilermaker he was assaulted. So was the boilermaker, both ending in Judge Maher's court, where the worker was fined $15 for battering Mr. Lyon.

There Are the Raft, Dietrich and West Cases at Paramount and O'Brien and Dvorak Matters at Warner Brothers

HOW STAR VS. STUDIO STANDS

I. Schnitzer and Herbert Freston all testified before Judge Bogue that no mention of a specific number of pictures was made at the Academy meeting in 1932 which preceded the drawing of the present contract between Warners and Cagney.

Freston further testified that Cagney said that his only difference with the studio was the "question of dough."

Marlene Dietrich
vs.

Mary Magdalene von Losch, known on a Paramount contract and in marquee billing as Marlene Dietrich, and more affectionately christened "Legs" by Walter (tabloid peepist) Winchell, walked out on Paramount—and that's that.

No official reason for the pout is at hand, but Hollywood observers see: (1) Miss Dietrich's dissatisfaction with the studio's managerial switch which took Ernst Lubitsch from the production of her next picture, "I Loved a Soldier"; and (2) The star's conclusion that her appearance as a chambermaid in the production, as the story calls, would injure her reputation as a glittering and glamorous personality.

Regardless, the news wires from Hollywood last weekend told, under headlines of "Dietrich Row Is Ended," how Paramount finally agreed that "I Loved a Soldier" is "not suitable for Marlene."

Furthermore, the wires reported, "Miss Dietrich, still in Hollywood, is expected to leave in a few days for a European vacation, but has promised that she will return in September to make another picture for Paramount." Evidently Paramount has something to look forward to in September.

Associated Press reported that the Teutonic star, now 32, a product of the Max Reinhardt European school of drama, is headed for the London Films studio of Alexander Korda, where, it now appears, she is due in May. Because of Mr. Korda's distribution commitments in America, Miss Dietrich, then, will next be on the releasing schedule of United Artists here. Hollywood believes that Mr. Lubitsch, already in Europe vacationing, will eventually be found at the Korda studio to direct Miss Dietrich.

Paramount is understood to have spent several hundred-thousand dollars on preparation and actual production of "I Loved a Soldier" when Miss Dietrich, born in Berlin, walked out in "a huff," and that since the removal of Ernst Lubitsch from the production helm at Paramount the star has repeatedly disagreed with the management over how the story should be treated.

That Paramount is desirous of starting anew with its "Soldier" "headache" appears from reports that Margaret Sullivan, Merle Oberon and Bette Davis have been variously mentioned for the Dietrich role.

Meanwhile, Paramount is one down on the Dietrich matter, at least until she returns from Europe in September as she "promised."

Patrick O'Brien
vs.
Warners

Irishman Pat O'Brien took a look at what Warner Brothers handed him in the script for "Stage Struck," to serve as his next, tightened the belt strap encircling his rotundity and whistled a one-man strike of his own. No sooner done than Warners suspended him.

Hollywood Boulevard, looking about for reasons why the "Stage Struck" musical did not reach the shooting stage last Monday, found that Mr. O'Brien had expressed dissatisfaction with his part, and that the company issued an ultimatum, which was accepted, although Mr. O'Brien is supposed to have asked the studio management to grant him the usual six-week layoff instead of suspending him.

The score so far in this case shows Warners one up on Pat.

George Raft
vs.
Paramount

The fiery French-Italian ancestry of New York-born George Raft exerted itself when the former night club dancer and stage performer protested the assignment of Teddy Tetzlaff, cameraman, to photograph "Concertina," to which Mr. Raft had been delegated to co-feature with Carole Lombard. Associated Press and other farflung news agencies quoted the player, through a spokesman, as objecting to Cameraman Tetzlaff on the grounds that they "did not get along."

What actually happened, according to opinion ventured along Hollywood Boulevard, was that Sleekhaired George Raft was stricken with a bad attack of professional jealousy, which caused him to charge that Mr. Tetzlaff was Miss Lombard's "favorite cinematographer," and as such gave the beautiful blonde "camera breaks."

Mr. Raft then stalked off the set. Paramount's studio management took rapid action. The virile but temperamental star was suspended from "Concertina" and Fred MacMurray, young leading man, was ordered to succeed him in the part.

Despite the day's downpour of rain, International News Service reported Mr. Raft bundled himself off to the races, where he wrapped himself in somber silence.

Mr. Raft was then left to cool his heels for a fortnight, until the other day when Paramount's home office in New York officially announced: "George Raft will report to Paramount, March 23rd, to play the male lead in a picture tentatively titled 'The Duchess'."

The score in this case appears to be tied, Paramount standing pat on Teddy Tetzlaff as Miss Lombard's cameraman, and Raft getting another assignment, without Tetzlaff.

Ann Dvorak
vs.
Warners

Tied, too, was the case of pretty five feet-four New York-born Ann Dvorak against Warner Brothers. Miss Dvorak, known to her parents as Anna McKim, had sued the studio for breach of contract, demanding damages and a court interpretation of her contractual relationship with the corporation.

Judge Harry R. Archbald, in Los Angeles Superior Court, ruled that the suspension of Miss Dvorak by Warners last October 20th did not constitute breach of contract on Warners' part.

The court maintained that Warners submitted sufficient evidence proving Miss Dvorak was not in physical condition to resume acting, and, therefore, Warners did not breach the contract. Miss Dvorak, however, was awarded some $7,000 in salary for the period dating from the lifting of the suspension last January and the settlement of the case last week. She will therefore remain with the company for another two years.

Paramount vs. Mae West
Mae West vs. Paramount

The end of Mae West's career at Paramount at this time is not news either to Broadway or Hollywood Boulevard, but the technicalities of the abrogation are, Associated Press reporting last weekend that "Mae West and the Paramount studio in Hollywood are jointly accusing each other of voiding her contract."

And out of a welter of conflicting statements and whatnot only one fact seemed clear—that Mae West would make her next picture, and the one after that, for another company, presumably Emanuel Cohen's Major Pictures.

A Paramount studio statement in Hollywood was said by Associated Press to have charged Miss West with being guilty of "an anticipatory breach of contract," adding, "an executive who would not be quoted said 'the studio does not waive any of its rights to her services'."

Murray File, reputedly one of Mae West's representatives, was said to have explained to reporters in Hollywood that "Miss West notified Paramount six weeks ago her contract had been abrogated by the studio when it failed to have a picture ready for her last July."

Mr. File further explained that the new Mae West deal with Manny Cohen called for Mr. Cohen to pay the star some $300,000 each for two pictures, starting April 1st.

The score here is even, Paramount apparently not wanting to continue producing Mae West pictures, and Mae evidently desiring a change to Manny Cohen.

THEATRE ADVERTISES LACK OF GIVEAWAYS

Exhibitors and distributors were very much interested in the following want ad published by the Lindbergh theatre, operated by Abe and Rosa Baier in Kansas City, in the Sunday Kansas City Star under "Personals":

Notice — The Lindbergh theatre does not insult the intelligence of any man, woman or child in thinking that they have to be offered some souvenir, trinket or piece of china or crockery in order to get them to come to the theatre. We firmly believe that there are enough real people in this city who do go to the theatre to see and hear a good program. We keep our theatre in perfect repair, good heat when it's cold, nice cool air when it's hot, and always a good show. Our employees and ourselves are always at your service. The Management."

FILMS EMERGING FROM ATTACK IN 13 LEGISLATURES; U. S. TAX THREATENS

State Proposals Range from Liquor Bars for Theatres to Number of Water Closets Per Seating Capacity

The managements of some 15,000 motion picture theatres were directly and ominously reminded this week of the huge deficit hanging over the Government's financial structure when legislators in charge of determining new sources of tax revenue took over for study a plan—one of many—whereby theatre admission taxes would be increased and the lowering of exemptions enacted from the present 40-cent minimum to 10 cents, as during the World War and post-war periods.

Congressional leaders, however, regarded this phase of the various tax proposals as either politically unwise during this Presidential election year, or fiscally insufficient, and, perhaps, even legislatively impossible.

The required new revenue is now estimated at $792,000,000 a year for the next three years and $620,000,000 annually for nine years thereafter.

Increases on income and manufacturers' taxes are under consideration with the admission tax as an alternative plan to President Roosevelt's "distasteful" proposal to levy a high tax on undivided corporation profits as a substitute for existing corporate taxes.

Of interest to the exhibitor was the indication that the House ways and means committee on taxes was about to resolve itself into debate over the relative merits or demerits of sources of money suggested by the Administration, of which the new admission tax schedule is but one of seven alternatives submitted.

Lowering Brackets Protested

Treasury officials in Washington last week were represented as opposed to any extension of the admission tax to lower brackets as suggested last Thursday to the tax group of the House ways and means committee.

In a memorandum discussing the various proposals, the Treasury is understood to have opposed this and several other tax changes which had been suggested as being inadequate to meet the need for new revenue.

The sub-committee, however, is considering all the proposals which have been laid before it and is expected to draft preliminary legislation shortly on which to hold hearings.

In a memorandum discussion of possible sources of additional revenue, Collector of Internal Revenue Helvering told the tax group that any reduction in the present 40-cent exemption would fall most heavily on the poorer portion of the populace.

Would Raise $85,000,000

It was revealed that the suggestion for a reduction in exemption contemplated the dropping of the figure from 40 to 10 cents, which would provide an estimated yield of $80,000,000. This, with $15,000,000 or more now being collected, would make the theatre's contribution to the tax revenue something over $85,000,000 a year.

"If all tickets costing 11 cents or more were made subject to the present 10 per cent tax on admission," the memorandum said, "patrons of neighborhood film houses and the like would be made subject to the tax. There the increase in the Government's revenue would be obtained largely from the lower income groups."

REPORTING FROM LEGISLATIVE FRONTS

There is much ado along state and Congressional legislative fronts in which the motion picture is directly concerned. Besides the severe attacks in 13 state legislatures, from which the industry expects to emerge unscathed, and the new Congressional possibility of increasing admission taxes and lowering ticket tax exemptions, the week witnessed activities along other lines:

House of Representatives subcommittee hearings on the Duffy Bill to revise the 1909 Copyright Laws were continuing in Washington—see page

House of Representatives subcommittee hearings on the Pettingill anti-block booking bill opened in Washington on Monday—see page ???

Suit Against Odlum Dismissed by Court

Observing that questions of law involved in a $14,896,032 suit against Floyd B. Odlum and other directors of Securities Allied Corporation, for alleged waste and mismanagement, had never been passed upon by New York state courts, Justice Lauer in Manhattan late last week granted a motion to dismiss the action with the suggestion that an appeal be taken to the appellate division. The suit was brought by James J. Donovan on an assigned claim of Francis M. Crawley, owner of 2,000 shares of Securities Allied.

Mr. Odlum is the president of Atlas Corporation, which has extensive investments in the film industry. Mr. Donovan's attorney said an appeal from Justice Lauer's ruling would be taken immediately.

Atlas and Lehmans Buy Stock in Technicolor

A minority interest reported in the neighborhood of 18,000 shares has been purchased directly from Technicolor corporation by the Atlas Corporation and Lehman Brothers. No purchase price was made public. Technicolor has 687,706 shares of common outstanding. John Hay Whitney, president of Pioneer, holds a controlling interest.

Proposal to Lower Federal Admisssion Exemption to 10 Cents Met with Protest of Political Dangers

The motion picture commences to breathe more easily as the 13 state legislatures in session this season start to adjourn, with virtually complete victory in sight for the industry in its defense against a most severe attack both in Congress and the states, where some 48 bills of various burdensome nature were presented by legislators who for the most part desired to impose even heavier taxation on the already over-taxed exhibitor. MOTION PICTURE HERALD, on February 29th, page 13, reported in detail on bills introduced both in state legislatures and Congress this season.

The fight is not completely over, however, with the legislative proposals ranging this week all the way from a measure proposed in New York to alleviate the economic plight of theatres and theatregoers by installing bars in theatres, to a Massachusetts proposal for bigger and better water closets in theatres. The Massachusetts bill virtually would require the tearing down of dozens of theatres in order to install the additional plumbing required.

At Albany, Assemblyman Herbert Brownell, Jr., New York, has introduced a bill to empower the State Liquor Authority to issue liquor licenses to theatres in cities of 1,000,000 population or more. Under the bill a license would be obtained for one year for $1,000 or for nine months for $750. Mr. Brownell said that "experience abroad has clearly demonstrated the desirability of finding palatable refreshment in theatres, together with entertainment."

In Boston, bills introduced for consideration by the Massachusetts Legislature by Leslie R. Porter, and which are being opposed by theatre groups, would necessitate installation of elaborate sprinkling systems wherever there are smoking privileges, one water closet for women for every 150 seats, one water closet for men for every 300 seats and one urinal for each 200 seats or majority fraction, as well as heating and lighting changes.

Another measure introduced in the Senate in Albany by A. Spencer Feld, New York, forbids a theatre to sell a ticket to a patron unless an empty seat awaits the person. Concurrent with this is another bill that would require theatres to flash on the screen at the beginning of each performance a sign stating where fire exits are located, the content of the sign to be determined by the director of the censor board.

In Manhattan, the hearing on an appeal from the New York supreme court's order denying the Independent Theatre Owners Association's application for an injunction to prevent the city from levying the two per cent sales tax on film rentals, originally scheduled for last week in the appellate court, has been postponed to March 20.

Action in "Under Two Flags"

by GUS McCARTHY

Thrill action entertainment is the objective upon which Twentieth Century-Fox has pegged the elements of its story of the French Foreign Legion—conflict of love interest, starkness of drama, appeal of comedy, adventure, spectacle, heroism, treachery, suspense and sacrifice.

The novel on which it is based was written by Louise de la Ramee, more familiarly known as Ouida, and the stage adaptation was widely played. It has been filmed twice, once in 1916, by Fox with Theda Bara, Stuart Holmes, Herbert Hayes and Claire Whitney, again in 1922 by Universal with Priscilla Dean, James Kirkwood and Stuart Holmes. In this 1936 version, with basic plot retained and amplified, it is the Legion of 1900 instead of 1858.

Stripped of the wealth of embellishing detail, here is the dramatic story "Under Two Flags" tells. Ronald Colman, a young Englishman, to divert suspicion of crime from his guilty brother, flees his homeland and joins the Legion. In an Arab-surrounded Sahara post, an exotic young French girl, Claudette Colbert, whom the commanding officer, Victor McLaglen, considers his personal property, becomes strangely attracted to Colman.

In the series of HERALD features on pictures in production, on these pages appear advance stills and information on Twentieth Century - Fox's "Under Two Flags".

To the post comes a young English Noblewoman, Rosalind Russell. Colman falls in love with her and she returns his affections. Their association arouses Cigarette (Miss Colbert) to savage jealousy. McLaglen, hoping to rid himself of Colman, sends him out on a dangerous mission at the head of a troupe. Miss Colbert, who has been intriguing with the enemy, glories in this. The troop is decimated. McLaglen rides to the rescue of the comrade he hates. Upbraiding Miss Russell, Claudette also goes in search of Colman, and when he and McLaglen are trapped, she brings up a column of Legionaires. Wounded, she dies in Colman's arms.

To bring the story to full screen realism, Twentieth Century-Fox not only made available all its own resources, but went afield to obtain values that would engage further public attention. Besides the four stars mentioned, there are 40 speaking parts in the supporting cast. Included are the well known Gregory Ratoff, Nigel Bruce, C. Henry Gordon, Lumsden Hare, Herbert Mundin, Thomas Beck, Frank Reicher, Fritz Leiber, Francis McDonald, Onslow Stevens and George Regas. Also there is John Carradine, outstanding in "Prisoner of Shark Island."

Frank Lloyd, who made the "Sea

In the action story of the French Foreign Legion Ronald Colman is starred, with Victor McLaglen, Claudette Colbert and Rosalind Russell. At right: Miss Colbert.

Hawk," "Cavalcade" and "Mutiny on the Bounty," was chosen to direct.

The job of transcribing Ouida's work so that none of its original appeal and power should be lost called for highly specialized training. It was entrusted to W. P. Lipscomb, whose record includes "Cardinal Richelieu," "Clive of India," "Les Miserables" and "Tale of Two Cities."

The extent to which the producing company went to give "Under Two Flags" comprehensive production is seen in a few of the details. On the Westwood lot, an Algerian desert village covering approximately 10 acres, was built. The bazaars, native quarters, cafes and Legion post are faithfully reproduced. One of the difficulties was to get real Arabs and camels. Every available Arab was hired. Twenty-one camels will be seen. Costumes, weapons, decorations, trappings and gear for man and beast are exactly as they should be.

For the climactic battle sequences, the entire company and all its paraphernalia were moved into the California-Arizona desert. Barren and desolate, made up only of mountains and limitless stretches of sand, miles from any civilization, it is the site of two cities. One is the modern camp that houses the company, the other is the desert reproduction of the spot in which Cigarette sacrifices her life that love might live.

Realism, in every phase, is the keynote of "Under Two Flags," and the intelligence applied to making that quality predominant is reflected in story character, adaptability and personalities to the roles they play and quality of production. It is there for one purpose—to present a thrill action romantic drama that will intrigue the minds and attention of public and exhibitor.

Current of Song Moves Story in "Give Us This Night"

Korngold Shows How Screen Operetta Can Be Done, Says O'Sullivan

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

A story of romantic Sorrento and that dear old picturesque Naples, where the routine of real life is a grand opera scena, and budding Carusos roam at large proclaiming the arias of Verdi, Puccini, Bellini, Mascagni, et al., was written by M. Jacques Bachrach.

William Le Baron read the story and had scenarists Edwin Justus Mayer and Lynn Starling put it into screen form. After scanning the script, Le Baron made a discovery—and simultaneously a decision. Here was a colorful story of a Sorrento fisherman, Antonio, who just had to sing, and of Maria, a beautiful girl who aspired to be a great opera star. Why not team up Jan Kiepura, the Polish tenor, and Gladys Swarthout, the American songbird, in the production? The producer made another decision. He assigned Erich Wolfgang Korngold, of "Midsummer Night's Dream" fame, to compose the music, and Oscar Hammerstein II the lyrics. That decision was an inspiration, for Korngold had demonstrated in the "Dream" that he knew his screen as well as his music.

In "Give Us This Night," which is presented by Paramount as "the first full-length operetta written expressly for the screen," Korngold has appraised accurately and applied intelligently the essentials of authentic operetta expanded to the fuller scope of the audible screen. He has, above all, conformed to the demands for an uninterrupted flow of pictured action and tonal narrative which distinguishes true screen operetta from just a "musical."

This is apparent from the very opening grandioso chorus accompanying the main title and segue-ing into the first scenes showing the fishermen's boats returning to Sorrento with the day's catch, and Antonio singing lustily at his work in a boat, "When I Am Home in Sorrento."

I MEAN TO SAY 'I LOVE YOU'

The Wedding Day song is done by Maria (Gladys Swarthout).

SWEET MELODY OF NIGHT

With this song Antonio (Jan Kiepura) sings his way out of jail. Erich Wolfgang Korngold composed the music of "Give Us This Night" and Oscar Hammerstein II did the lyrics. All the music excerpts reproduced on this page are copyrighted by Paramount Productions, Inc.

In the sequences following, the musical current develops into a tumultuous tone-current that sweeps Antonio through a vortex of exciting and hilarious action, beginning at the local opera house and ending at the gates of the local hoosegow. The immediate reason for this Latin uprising is Signor Forcellini, an opera singer once a star, whose voice has gone sour but who still persists in murdering the brain-children arias of Verdi and other masters.

While committing mayhem on the famous aria of Di Quella Pira in "Il Trovatore," Forcellini is plastered by some very ripe eggs tossed by the hand of Antonio—and the opera is suspended for the evening amid much confusion.

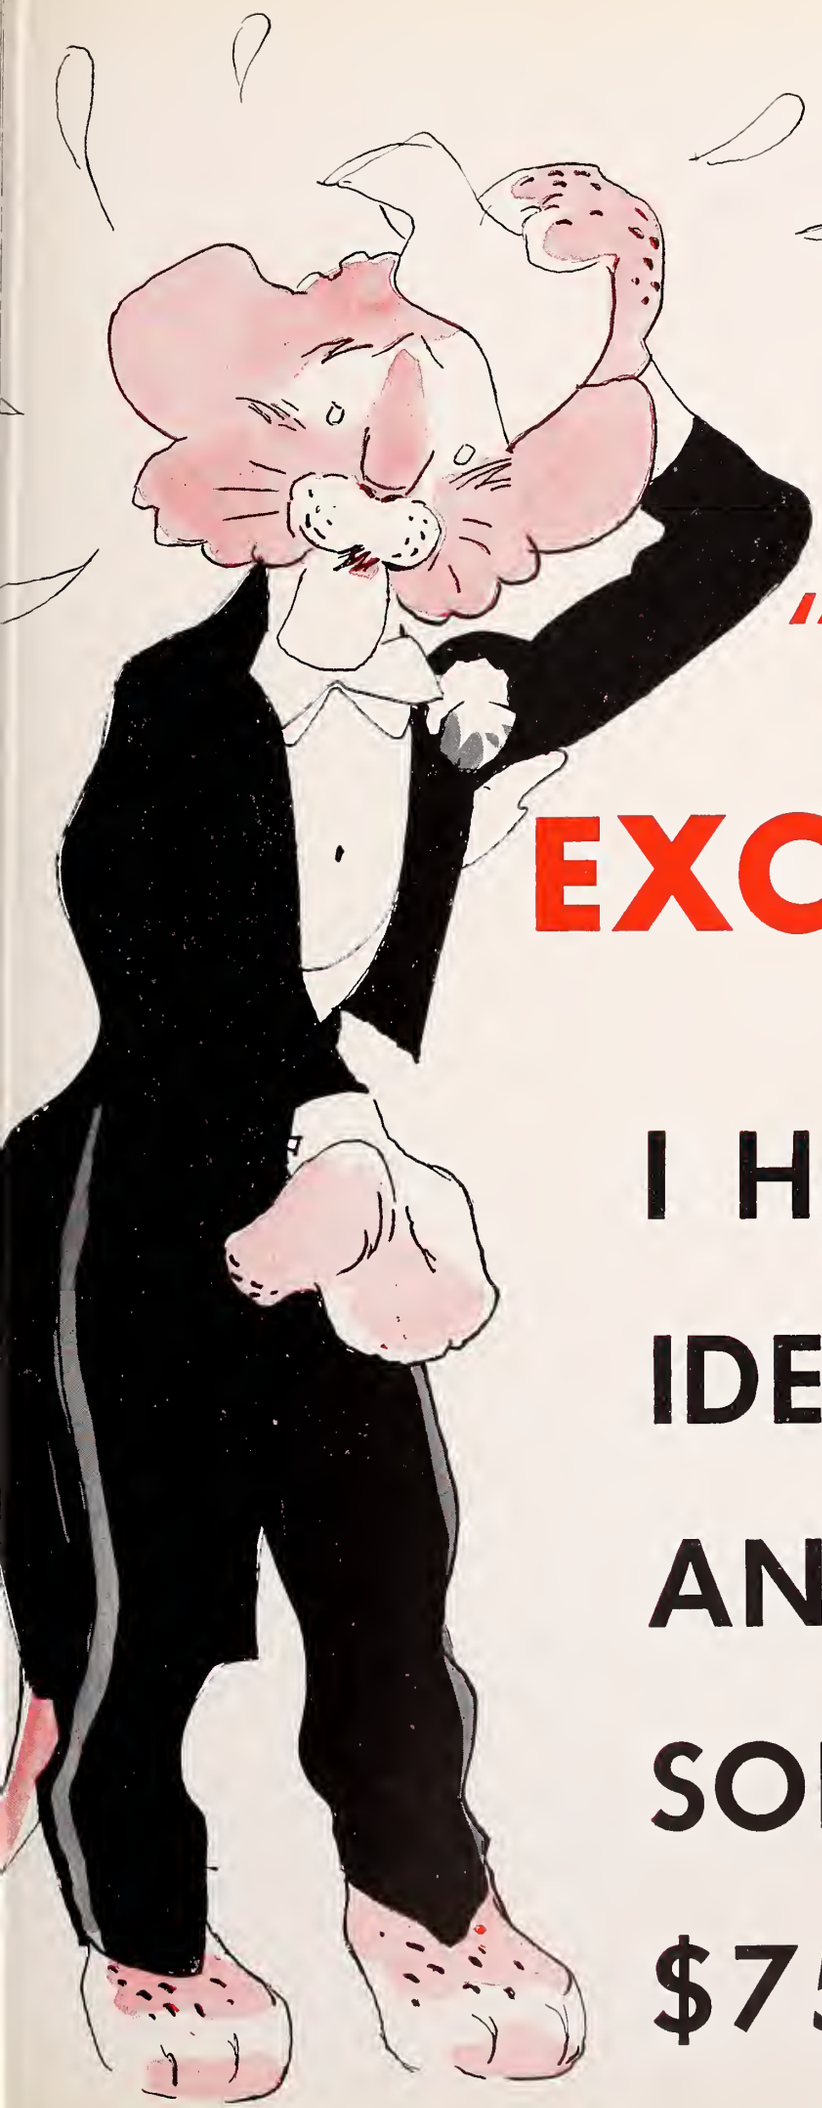
During this pandemonium, the music, while ceasing to be vocal, becomes extremely vociferous (in an instrumental way), until Antonio finally is apprehended by the outraged Carabinieri and yanked toward the jail. Although a fisherman by trade, Antonio is a grand opera singer at heart, and he thereupon bursts forth into song—nothing less than the Di Quella Pira, to prove to the Carabinieri and the populace how the great aria from "Il Trovatore" should be sung. The hoi polloi cheer and the vox populi joins in the rendition of the aria.

There is a lull in this tone-flood, just long enough to register Signor Forcellini rehearsing a new opera, "Romeo and Juliet" at the home of the composer, Benetti. Maria (Gladys Swarthout), young and lovely, and a protege of Bonetti, is the aspiring prima donna who is rehearsing "Juliet." Forcellini cracks on a high note and walks out in

Following the attempted arrest of Antonio, the musical current flows into calmer waters. Antonio, dogged by the Carabinieri, claims "the sanctuary of the church" just before services begin. There he is safe from the minions of the law, and there he remains during services and lifts up his voice in the singing of the Processional. Maria, too, is an attendant, and the two glorious voices lead in the inspiring hymn.

This church scene is a benediction in a malediction of clashing temperaments and untoward events, a musical benison that calms the sea of tonal strife. Its serene religioso throws into sharper relief the mundane appassionati of the love ballads and the erotica of the "Romeo and Juliet" music that is to follow. Here is a musical concept in the best traditions of the lyric stage.

For Antonio eventually lands into jail, and sings his way out with "Sweet Melody of Night," and into the role of "Romeo" when Bonetti obtains his release. In Naples and rehearsing, youth and music and proximity bring about the inevitable. When Antonio calls on Bonetti to tell the maestro of his love for Maria, the composer asks him to sing a love song he has written for Maria—his declaration of love for his protege—"I Mean to Say 'I Love You.'" Antonio dare not tell Bonetti then, but he sings the song, heart-broken. Maria, hearing him sing and believing Antonio has told Bonetti of their love, rushes in to Bonetti to receive his congratulations. Bonetti, dumbfounded, tells Maria nothing.



Antonio disappears from Naples. How he is found and induced to return when he learns that Forcellini is to do "Romeo," has to do with the story but not the music.

"Give Us This Night" is a distinguished piece of musical writing for the screen. Its lyrical numbers were obviously written to keep within the bounds of motion picture audiences; but all the music reflects the talents of a composer who adds unusual distinction to the new art of fusing music and pictures. Whether or not the production strikes a responsive chord in the American motion picture public, Korngold has shown how screen operetta can be done—and exceedingly well done.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Quick reference information on product started and completed and a panorama of the news of the week

Busy

With eastern and local executives huddling on next season's programs, Hollywood was a busy spot the past week. Ten pictures were started, eleven finished.

Three of the new pictures are credited to Columbia; one is directly sponsored by the company, the others are independent producers' features which Columbia will release. On its own the studio started "Blackmailer." With William Gargan, Florence Rice and H. B. Warner featured, the support includes Joan Perry, Nana Bryant, George McKay, Victor Kilian, Wryley Birch, Drue Leyton, Alexander Cross and Kenneth Thomson. Gordon Wiles is directing.

The second picture, "The Mine With the Iron Door," a Principal production of Harold Bell Wright's story, will present Richard Arlen, Stanley Fields, Cecilia Parker, H. B. Walthall and Spencer Charters. David Howard is directing. In the third, a Darmour production, "Avenging Waters,' will be seen Ken Maynard, Beth Martion, John Elliott, Zella Russell, Ward Bond, Wally Wales and Eddie Hearne. Spencer Bennett is directing.

Paramount Starts Two

Paramount started two pictures. In "Something to Live For," which E. A. Dupont directs, Herbert Marshall, Gertrude Michael, Marsha Hunt, James Burke and Mary Gordon are included in the cast. "The Case Against Mrs. Ames," a Walter Wanger production, will feature Madeleine Carroll, George Brent, Alan Baxter, Alan Mowbray, Esther Dale, Edward Brophy and William Collier, Sr. William Seiter is directing.

William Dieterle is directing. The second picture to go, "The Earthworm Tractor," will present Joe E. Brown with June Travis, Carol Huges, Guy Kibbee and Craig Reynolds. Raymond Enright is directing.

Republic started "Comin' Round the Mountain." The casts lists Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnett, Ken Cooper, Tracy Lane, Ray Mason and Ray Brown. Mack Wright is directing.

At Twentieth Century-Fox "The First Baby" went in the work. Shirley Dean and Johnny Downs are featured with Jane Darwell, Gene Lockhart, Marjorie Gateson, Taylor Holmes, Dixie Dunbar and Sara Haden among the support. Lew Seiler is directing.

The final starting picture, a Universal, is titled "Unconscious." It will present Edward Everett Horton, Glenda Farrell, Robert Middlemass, Pierre Watkins and Frank Reicher. Arthur Grenville Collins is directing.

Warner Finishes Four

Warner completed four pictures. Most important of the group undoubtedly is "Hearts Divided," which stars Marion Davies with Dick Powell, features Edward Everett Horton, Arthur Treacher, Charlie Ruggles, Henry Stephenson and Claude Rains. The support includes Walter Kingsford, Etienne Girardot, Clara Blandick, Freddie Archibald, John Larkin, George Irving, Phillip Hurlic, Hattie McDaniels, Beulah Bondi, Hobart Cavanaugh, Halliwell Hobbes and Sam McDaniels. The second picture, "I Married a Doctor," has a large cast which features Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson and includes Margaret Irving, Guy Kibbee, Louise Fazenda, Ray Mayer, Siegfried Rumann, Ross Alexander, Alma Lloyd, Grace Stafford and Willard Robertson. Huntley, Jr., Arthur Treacher and Earl Foxe. Alfred Green directed. The final picture in the group, "The Law in Her Hands," will present Margaret Lindsay, Glenda Farrell, Warren Hull, Lyle Talbot, Matty Fain, Eddie Acuff, Al Shean, Addison Richards, Eddie Schubert and Dick Purcell. William Clemons directed.

Three Finished by Metro

Three pictures were completed by MGM. "Petticoat Fever" will present Myrna Loy, Robert Montgomery, Reginald Owen, Otto Yamaoka, Winifred Shotter, Forrester Harvey, Irving Bacon and George Hassell. George Fitzmaurice directed. The cast for the second picture, "Moonlight Murder," includes Chester Morris, Madge Evans, Leo Carillo, J. Carrol Naish, Bruce Cabot, Robert McWade, Frank McHugh, Benita Hume, Duncan Rinaldo, Montague Shaw and Claudia Coleman. Edwin L. Marin directed. Josef Von Sternberg directed.

Paramount's contribution to the completed work is "Reunion." The cast lists Herbert Marshall, Gertrude Michael, Lionel Atwill, Rod LaRocque, Guy Bates Post, Tempe Pigott, Charles McNaughton, Phyllis Coghlan and Hooper Atchley. Robert Florey directed.

"Captain Calamity," a Regal Production in color, was finished. It will present Marian Nixon, George Huston, Margaret Irving, Crane Wilbur, Vince Barnett, George Lewis, Harold Howard, Movita, Barry Norton and Roy D'Arcy. John Reinhardt directed.

Paramount Stops Tests On Keller-Dorian Color

After a year of experiments, Paramount has closed the laboratory on its Hollywood studio lot where tests for the Keller-Dorian color process were conducted by Dr. John C. Kapstaff, who has left for Rochester to continue color research.

The chief difficulty in adapting the Keller-Dorian process to screen use commercially lies in inability to strike off prints from the master negative, it is understood. A color filter is used on the camera, and a similar filter is used on the projection machine in this process, which requires more projection light than black and white film.

"Liebelei" Held Over

Arthur Schnitzler's "Liebelei," famous Viennese romance, has been held over for a third week at the 55th Street Playhouse in New York. Magda Schneider, Paul Hoerbiger, Gustav Gruendgens, Olga Tschechowa, Luise Ullrich, and Willi Eichberger comprise the cast. The picture, banned in Germany, was directed by Max Ophuels.

Warner Retains Paul Graetz

Warners have signed Paul Graetz, European character actor, to a long term contract. Mr. Graetz, who recently completed "Mr. Cohen Takes a Walk," at the company's English studios, is now en route to Hollywood following a short visit in New York.

SAMUEL R. BURNS DEAD; PROJECTOR EXECUTIVE

President of International Projector Headed Nicholas Power Co. Before Merger

Samuel R. Burns, president of the International Projector Corporation and vice-president of General Theatres Equipment Company, died last weekend in New York at the Post Graduate Hospital following a protracted illness. Mr. Burns, who had been connected with the industry since 1914, was 54 years old.

Born in New York City in 1882, Mr. Burns saw military service with the 107th Regiment on the Mexican border. Returning to civil life, he became an accountant for the Nicholas Power company and rose rapidly in that organization, becoming president following the death of Edward Earle. One lifetime associate, commenting on the success of Mr. Burns in the projector field, attributed it to "his widely respected capability, conscienciousness in business as well as personal affairs, which won him countless friends, among competitors as among associates, throughout this country and much of Europe."

Power 5 Versus Kinetoscope

The Nicholas Power company had its inception at the turn of the century, when store rooms over the land were being turned overnight into motion picture theatres. It found the Edison Kinetoscope, a lighter mechanism mounted in a wood housing, its principal competitor. The Powers 5, as it was known, gave battle to the Edison apparatus, arguing all-metal construction as a major advantage. The Kinetoscope clicked away, resting confidently on the name and prestige of the inventor, whose name it bore, but Nicholas Power was busy with a new model, the then sensationally bigger and better Powers 6B, offering the powerful argument of a heavier, faster intermittent mechanism, a shutter mounted in front of the lens instead of behind it as in the case of the No. 5 and the Kinetoscope, plus a lamphouse then considered of tremendous proportions and an all-steel base as well as steel construction throughout.

Merged in 1925

With the offering of this model, at a price in excess of the previous figure but at a time when nickels and dimes came easy to the nation's mushrooming box offices, the Power company moved swiftly into command of the projector situation. Various competitive offerings came into the field, left it again, but it was not until the Precision Machine company brought out the Simplex in 1913 that substantial rivalry developed. It was to this situation that Mr. Burns, returning from military service, brought his organizing and sales ability.

Simplex made steady progress. By now the science of projection had established fixed standards. Simplex met them about as well as Power. Both were manufactured in New York. As this competition raged there came into the fray, from Chicago, yet another dependable, practicable machine, the Acme, introduced in 1916 and presented as the ultimate development of projection mechanism.

Through the nine years that followed the Nicholas Power company, substantially through the insight of Mr. Burns, held its forward position. But the era of combinations for economy in manufacture was at hand and the Power company, with Mr. Burns as president, was merged with the Precision and Acme companies in December, 1925, to form the present International Projector corporation, of which he became executive vice-president and, in 1932, president.

With the formation of the General Theatres Equipment company he was made vice president of that organization and vice-president and secretary of Fox Film corporation, serving also as secretary of the more than 200 affiliated companies. He was executive vice-president of the Richardson Manufacturing company and Enos, Richardson and company.

Mr. Burns was a Fellow of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and a member of the F. and A. M. Temple 110, Jersey City, where he made his home. Representatives of these organizations and Local 306 of the IATSE, together with many companies in the field of his activity, attended funeral services held on Sunday at the First Presbyterian Church in Jersey City. Burial was in Cedar Grove Cemetery, Flushing, Long Island.

Gain of $1 a Share Predicted for Loew's

Loew's, Inc., is expected to better last year's net of $4.49 a share by approximately $1, bringing the net for the current fiscal year, ending August 31, to about $5.50 a share on the basis of present conditions, according to an estimate by the Wall Street Journal.

The company entered the current fiscal year, starting Sept. 1, 1935, with the most expensive film inventory in its history, $29,482,479 against $24,001,631 in 1934 and $22,000,000 in 1929. Domestic gross income is said to be running better than 20 per cent ahead of a year ago and foreign income is picking up sharply.

Deny Fox's Appeal, Order His Arrest

The U. S. circuit court of appeals last week denied an appeal by William Fox from an order by Federal Judge William Bondy fining him $253,032 for contempt of court and $10,000 attorney's fees, further directing that he be taken in custody by a United States marshal and held until the fine is paid. Mr. Fox was adjudged in contempt of court when he failed to comply with a subpoena obtained by the Capital company, owning the Fox theatre, San Francisco, which sought to question him regarding his asserted inability to satisfy a $235,000 judgment it held against him.

SAMUEL R. BURNS

Columbia May Produce Abroad

Columbia is discussing plans to produce in England, it was revealed this week with the arrival in New York of Joseph Friedman, in charge of sales for the company in England and the continent. Although Mr. Friedman would not discuss the Columbia plans for making pictures in London, Joseph Seidelman, head of the company's foreign activities, said that this was the purpose of Mr. Friedman's trip.

Accompanying Mr. Friedman were Alex G. Pincus, president, and Charles A. Buerk, a director of Colodis, S. A., the parent company for Osso, which distributes Columbia product in France, Belgium and North Africa. Mr. Friedman, Mr. Seidelman and Mr. Pincus will leave next week for Hollywood to confer with Harry and Jack Cohn. It was said that at the coast meeting details pertaining to the number of pictures, the studio to be leased and the stars to appear in the pictures will be decided upon.

Commenting on business conditions in his territories, the Columbia foreign executive said they are very good and that all of the 4,500 theatres are open and doing well. All releases are distributed in England and on the continent, he said. Mr. Pincus, likewise, was optimistic about general business in France, Belgium and North Africa, adding that no theatres are closed.

CONTROVERSY ON MAE WEST FILM GATHERS VOLUME AND VELOCITY

Legion of Decency Statement Cites Need of Continued Vigilance by Those Wanting Wholesome Pictures

Hullabaloo and ballyhoo pertaining to Mae West and "Klondike Annie" this week gathered volume and velocity as the picture went on exhibition in more cities, was stopped from doing so in others, and while editors, clergymen, organization spokesmen and plain people aired opinions as to its merits, demerits and probable effect upon adult and young.

Developments:

Hearst newspapers over the country continued editorial denunciation of the production and refused advertising copy referring to it.

The picture opened at the Paramount theatre, New York, with an 18-hour daily schedule of exhibition.

County Attorney Max Towell prevented presentation of the film at the Stuart theatre in Lincoln, Neb.

The Massachusetts Board of Censors passed the picture.

Paramount voided its Mae West contract.

Mae West made a contract with Emanuel Cohen for a picture to be placed in production April 1.

The Reverend Father Joseph A. Daly, Ph.D., executive secretary of the Legion of Decency, issued a statement, not naming "Klondike Annie", stressing need of continued vigilance "on the part of all persons interested in the maintenance of a wholesome screen".

Bishop Hugh Ryan of the Omaha Catholic diocese told parishioners not to attend the showing of the film at the Omaha theatre.

The East Coast Preview Committee evaluated the picture as "replete with insinuations, a typical Mae West picture with the usual amount of risque wisecracks and obvious sex appeal".

In pursuance of the policy generally adopted by Hearst newspapers, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer continued editorial excoriation of the picture and refused advertising copy mentioning it, but published the advertising for "Every Saturday Night," its companion picture on a double bill at the Orpheum theatre. In line, the New York Daily Mirror published Paramount theatre advertising on Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians, the orchestra programmed with "Klondike Annie," but carried no mention of the picture.

Citizens' Criticisms Published

In San Francisco, where the production moved from its first run at the Warfield theatre to the St. Francis, editorial attack was continued in the form of printed statements by prominent citizens criticising the film. In Chicago the Hearst editorial writers devoted first attention to emphatic endorsement of the Legion of Decency and cited the film as evidence that "the Hays organization cannot be depended upon to suppress the kind of film of which "Klondike Annie" is an odoriferous example."

Program schedule of the Paramount theatre, New York, was altered to take care of an anticipated deluge of patrons. Normally the theatre opens at 10:30 a.m. and starts its last evening show at midnight. For the engagement of "Klondike Annie," opening has been moved up to 8:30 a.m. and a final screening scheduled to start at 2:00 a.m.

County Attorney Max Towle's action in stopping exhibition of the picture in Lincoln, Neb., as advertised by Jerry Zigmond, manager of the Stuart and other Joe Cooper theatres, was announced in a letter to Mr. Zigmond stating his intention of seeking an injunction in restraint of such exhibition.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Safety, which administers the state censorship law, passed "Klondike Annie" without a deletion or change. It is recalled that the same body censored "Rose Marie".

Conflicting explanations of the precise reasons for termination of the Mae West-Paramount contract relationship include an unnamed company executive's assertion that the star was guilty of "an anticipatory breach of contract" and the player's charge that the company breached her contract when it failed to have a picture ready for her in July of 1935. Agreement is mutual, however, on the point that she will not make her next picture for Paramount. Meanwhile, April 1st is named as the probable date on which Miss West will start production on a picture for Emanuel Cohen, independent producer formerly of Paramount, with whom she has made a personal contract.

Legion Issues Statement

The following statement was released by the Reverend Father Joseph A. Daly, Ph.D., executive secretary of the Legion of Decency, at the organization headquarters in New York on Tuesday:

"The appearance currently in motion picture theatres of a subject of a character to which the Legion of Decency repeatedly has raised emphatic exception focuses attention upon the necessity for continuing vigilance on the part of all persons interested in the maintenance of a wholesome screen.

"The subject in question, being of low moral character, widely advertised and presenting a performer who both upon the screen and the stage has in several instances been associated with plays which have elicited widespread disapproval, creates an apprehension that unless there is renewed vigilance, together with a determination on the part of the public to discourage the production of such films, the excellent progress in the improvement of the moral character of the films in the past several months may be lost.

Urges Avoidance at Studio

"This film and all such films are held to be in some measure an invasion of public and private morality, creating as they do an unwholesome impression upon theatre patrons and particularly the youth. This film has been classified by the National Legion of Decency as being 'objectionable in part' because while under the Legion's system of classification it is not held to be vicious in its entirety, yet it is regarded as a subject which contains numerous objectionable incidents and consequently should be avoided by the Catholic public.

"The National Legion of Decency urges the producers of motion pictures to avoid the production of subjects of this character and to direct their attention exclusively to those wholesome types of pictures for which the American public has repeatedly demonstrated overwhelming preference."

Criticism of the picture by Bishop Hugh Ryan of the Omaha diocese, who [illegible] Catholics against attending its exhibition, was contained in a letter written to the Legion of Decency. E. R. Cummings, manager of the Omaha theatre, where the production was being shown, declined to offer comment on Bishop Ryan's action.

Graded "Adult" by Previewers

In its issue dated March 1, "Selected Motion Pictures," reprinted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association as a means of giving wider circulation to the judgments of the West and East Coast Preview Committees, briefly sketches the story of the picture and adds, "Quite shameless is her characterization of a Christian worker, which will give rise to well merited objections. Replete with insinuations, the picture is a typical Mae West vehicle, with the usual amount of risque wisecracks and obvious sex appeal. A pretentious production with outstanding work by Victor McLaglen. The National Society of New England Women feels that this film is not without value to a certain class of adult audiences." The production is graded as: Adults—a matter of taste.

Under the caption, "Pushing Mae West Around," the Kansas City Journal-Post dealt editorially with the actress' work as follows:

"Mae West has been fired by one movie producer and hired by another. Though her pictures draw big crowds, there are many cinema patrons who would not have felt bereaved if Mae had not got that second contract."

Emphatic approval of progress made by the Legion of Decency came from Mrs. James F. Looram, chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, who directs the work in previewing pictures for the organization.

BETTER FILM COUNCIL SEEKS NOISE ABATEMENT

The Better Motion Picture Council, recently organized at Middletown, Ohio, has extended its activities to include the abatement of noise in theatres. A committee has ben appointed to confer with house managers toward devising ways and means of eliminating noise during the showing of pictures. The committee is especially anxious to rid the houses of off-screen noises made by children when attending performances designed especially for juvenile patronage.

Dramtic Romance

To be relabeled in order to eliminate the impression that it in any way might be considered a musical picture, probably the first point of interest to exhibitors in this picture is that it again teams Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray. Co-featured in "Hands Across the Table," their presence here is being counted upon to give the picture a running head start in capturing patron interest.

While this story has considerable comedy quality, essentially it is melodrama tinged with romantic drama. The principal locale of the action—and that is the tune to which the story moves—is a liner bound from Europe to New York. A dance band leader is rousted out of his choice cabin suite to accommodate a firebrand American chorus girl masquerading as a princess who is Hollywood movie-contract-bound. The boat is loaded with internationally famous detectives on their way for a convention. The initial conflict that precipitates romance between the band leader and pseudo princess gets a startling interruption when the shipload of detectives are called upon to solve three murders. The pair drawn in, the resulting entertainment is a blending of romance, comedy, melodrama and adventure, with a sideline of music.

Being directed by William K. Howard, the story is based on an original by Phillip McDonald with screen play by Walter DeLeon, Don Hartman and Francis Martin, assisted by Frank Butler.

The present name value of Miss Lombard and MacMurray is a matter of record, and the supporting cast is of much better than ordinary caliber. Included among the principal featured players are Alison Skipworth, Lumsden Hare, Seigfried Rumann, Porter Hall, Mischa Auer, William Frawley, George Barbier, Bradley Page and Douglas Dumbrille. Minor players are David Clyde, Edward Keane and Tom Herbert.

Comedy Drama Mystery

In this story William Powell will appear as a resourceful detective solver of baffling crimes, a type of role in which he has scored some of his outstanding successes. The plot is an amalgamation of drama, romance, mystery, comedy, intrigue, murder and thrill action. It also is endowed with a novelty from a mystery murder standpoint that sets it radically apart from formula. Likewise the comedy contrast takes an unusual trend, inasmuch as his ex-wife, who has a penchant for writing detective yarns and dabbling in crime solution, moves in ostensibly to help out, but for the most part gets in the way to complicate matters.

The story is an original by James Edward Grant, with screen play by Anthony Veiller and Stephen Roberts, maker of "The Lady Consents" and Powell's latest Radio picture, "Star of Midnight."

The supporting cast for the most part is composed of wellknown screen names. Jean Arthur, seen in many Columbia pictures, appears as Powell's ex-wife, whom he remarries in the finale in a brand new style of wedding ceremony. Prominent in the delineation of the story are Johnny Arthur, Eric Blore, Robert Armstrong, James and Lucille Gleason, Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Lila Lee, Frankie Darro and Frank M. Thomas, wellknown stage actor who here makes his screen debut.

Modernly timed with plenty of actual thrill action, counterbalancing the appeal of straight story content, a jockey, riding the favorite, mysteriously dies during a race and a gang of gamblers clean up. Powell brought into the case, complications arise whereby not only he but his friends become suspected of complicity. But working in characteristic fashion, he applies a scientific technique to corner the culprits and by showing a motion picture of a thrilling race in which another jockey is menaced, he demonstrates that even the most ingenious killers leave themselves wide open to capture.

The Law in Her Hands

(Warner)

Dramatic Romance

As the title graphically denotes, this is the story of a woman lawyer who actually has the law in her hands. Essentially a drama, but given a love interest and comedy contrast, it tells of a woman who, deliberately intent upon exercising the modern woman's prerogative of being the equal of any man and with a natural inclination to do a little romantic adventuring, becomes the mouthpiece for a racketeer czar. In love with the young prosecuting attorney with whom she chooses to cross foils, she finds herself the center of a sensational murder trial. Winning the apparent acquittal of her clients, she proves her smartness by revealing them as doubles for the arch conspirators, and to the amazement of court, prosecution and alibi witnesses producing her employer, the racketeer, and forcing him to admit that he is the actual culprit.

The story is an original by George Bricker and Luci Ward, from which Bricker did the screen play. Direction is by William Clemens, recently credited with the comedy drama "Man Hunt."

Margaret Lindsay is featured as the woman lawyer and Glenda Farrell is her barrister chum upon whose advice she sets herself up as a gangster's attorney. Warren Hull will be seen in the role of the young prosecuting attorney who, though he is in love with Miss Lindsay, finds that he has to battle her tooth and nail. The part of the racketeer boss is assumed by Lyle Talbot, with Matty Fain as his principal henchman. This group carrying the principal action of the story, supporting players included Al Shean, Eddie Acuff, Addison Richards, Eddie Shubert, Billy Wayne and Dick Purcell.

The story is modernly geared. In addition to the professional and personal conflict between the opposing lawyers, it provides vivid glimpses into some of the new forms of racketeering that are being practiced, and shows how an innocently posed publicity photograph may become a damaging piece of court evidence.

The Witness Chair

(RKO-Radio)

Drama

The track that this story takes is courtroom drama, a type of entertainment that upon several occasions, when properly done, has proved its entertainment worth and exploitation import. At gun point, a man signs a confession admitting embezzlement. He struggles for the gun, held by his secretary, and is killed. The action moves into a courtroom, where his partner is on trial for murder. A succession of witnesses weaves a confusing tangle of fact leading up to and surrounding the murder. The evidence is trapping the accused, although certain facts indicated that the hands of the slain man were unclean. A quick turn is taken when it is shown that the accused man's daughter was carrying on a clandestine affair with his partner. As that knowledge is what she is striving to keep from the man on trial whom she loves, the secretary confesses the slaying. Exonerated, the accused is assured by the court that the secretary will be acquitted at her trial, in which the killing will be proved accidental.

The story is an original by Rita Weiman, with screen play by Rian James and Gertrude Purcell. Direction is by George Nicholls, Jr., recently credited with "Chatterbox" and "Chasing Yesterday."

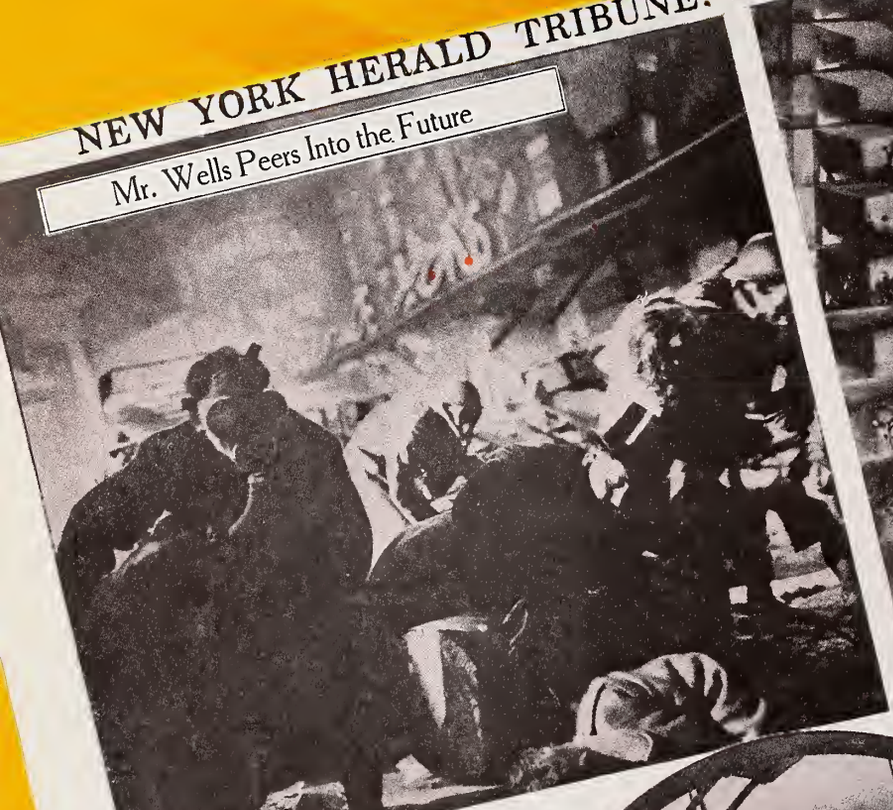
Ann Harding, who in the partly similar stage play, "The Trial of Mary Dugan," demonstrated her adaptability to this type of role, is the secretary. Douglas Dumbrille is the slain man and Walter Abel, currently with Harding in "The Lady Consents," is the accused man. Moroni Olsen is the police lieutenant who brings the case to trial. Paul Harvey is the prosecutor, Murray Kinnell attorney for the defense, and Ed Le Saint the judge. Margaret Hamilton, Maxine Jennings, William Benedict, Charles Arnt, Frank Jenks and Barlowe Borland are witnesses, and Frances Sage, a newcomer, will be seen as the daughter of the accused whose future Miss Harding saves.

Moonlight Murder

(MGM)

Mystery Drama

Title keying character, this story introduces two new angles into the "who did and how" type of picture. The killer's motive makes use of a new and novel idea, the "mercy killing" idea that recently has been given much newspaper space with conflicting arguments and debates in many actual cases. The killer's method is also unique. Though the matter of many being suspected is formula, the locale and occasion of the major crime are quite unusual.



An opera singer dies as he concludes an aria in the famous Hollywood Bowl, home of "Symphonies under the Stars." At first the death is believed natural. Then a young detective intervenes, and reveals that the man's romantic philanderings had given many persons cause to kill him. Through the story runs a maniac character, the foil who mechanically carries every one's suspicions off the true track. Such another death issues and the detective, with the aid of a young woman technical assistant, discovers that the deaths of both were brought about by a similar circumstance, revelation of the real killer and explanation of his motive is reserved for the final sequence.

The picture is being produced by Lucien Hubbard and Ned Marin and directed by Edwin L. Marin.

The cast presents Chester Morris, currently in "Three Godfathers," as the detective. Madge Evans is the girl about whom the romantic love interest content revolves. Leo Carillo is the opera singer who is slain. J. Carroll Naish will be seen as the maniac. Duncan Renaldo, resuming his screen career and remembered for "Trader Horn," Benita Hume, Katherine Alexander, H. B. Warner and Grant Mitchell are the principal persons who might have reason to wish Carillo's death. Frank McHugh as Morris' assistant supplies the comedy contrast. Other players who will be seen are Leonard Creely, Robert McWade and Pedro de Cordoba.

Border Flight

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

Adventure in the air and death on the ground, the melodramatic quality of which is contrasted by romantic love interest, comedy, action melodrama and suspense, is the key to which this story is pitched. Not advanced as a big picture, it is considered a type of swiftly moving entertainment with quick appeal.

The story brings to attention of audiences the activities of the Coast Guard, in its peacetime war to break up a vicious smuggling ring. That being the basis for the melodrama, action thrill and adventure, the romantic contrast concerns one of the guard's ace pilots who risks his life to save his girl and prove his love.

The story is an original by Ewing Scott with screen play by Stuart Anthony. The director, Otho Lovering, specializes on thrill action pictures.

Though the cast is small, it presents two promising young juveniles: John Howard, seen in several Paramount pictures, and Frances Farmer, who currently is making an impressive screen debut in "Too Many Parents."

Teamed with the youngsters is a trio of veterans, Grant Withers, Samuel S. Hinds and Roscoe Karns. Hinds and Karns are featured in "Woman Trap," which likewise majors in thrill action quantity. A sixth player who has an important part in the story is another youngster, Robert Cummings.

Production features supplementing the motivating story call for a series of exciting aerial and ground chases, the purpose of which is to pack as much action as is logically possible into the finished product. Aimed to appeal primarily to the action adventure lovers, the idea of backgrounding the story against Coast Guard activities is being counted upon as an exploitation angle.

Hearts Divided

(Warner)

Musical Comedy - Drama

Boasting an exceptional name value cast and being given lavish production, this picture's sponsoring companies look upon it as one of the most ambitious efforts of the current season. Semi-historical in character, it's a story of love and romance, timed to the period when the Louisiana Purchase was under way, and the locales are Baltimore, Washington and Paris. To America comes the brother of Emperor Napoleon to negotiate the sale. Incognito, he falls in love with an American girl. His identity revealed to his associates, he is summoned back to France by Napoleon, who orders him to make a political marriage. Adamant to the plea of the American girl who accompanied her lover, a resumption of kaleidoscopic conditions that were Napoleon's life permits his brother to return to America and marriage with the girl of his heart.

With Marion Davies and Dick Powell, who were featured in "Page Miss Glory," again teamed, the story presents three ace comedians, Edward Everett Horton, Arthur Treacher and Charlie Ruggles, as ambitious rivals for Miss Davies' hand. Henry Stephenson will be seen as her father, Clara Blandick as a sympathetic aunt; Claude Rains as Napoleon, and George Irving as President Thomas Jefferson. Other well known players in important roles include Walter Kingsford, Etienne Girardot, Beulah Bondi, Hobart Cavanaugh, Frank Reicher and Halliwell Hobbes. Others who will be seen are John Larkin, Hattie McDaniels, Phillip Hurlic and Sam McDaniels.

Based on a story by Rida Johnson Young, the screen play is by Laird Doyle and Casey Robinson, who was credited with the screen play of "Captain Blood." Music and lyrics, which in addition to featuring Powell in several solos also present the Hall Johnson Choir, are by Harry Warren and Al Dubin. Direction is by Frank Borzage, who numbers among his recent credits "Flirtation Walk," "Shipmates Forever" and the current "Desire."

Spanish Audiences Preview 8 Films

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

Audiences of distinction and discrimination filled the Cine Astoria in Barcelona on four successive mornings to witness the previews of eight of Hispano Foxfilms' features of the current season, including "The Right to Romance," which introduced Nino Martini to the Peninsula; "Thanks a Million," with Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak and Paul Whiteman and his Orchestra; "Metropolitan," starring Lawrence Tibbett, and "The Littlest Rebel," a Shirley Temple release. Only the press and the exhibitors and professionals of the industry were admitted.

There were two cardinal advantages developed by these Fox pre-showings that theatre managers the world over might well heed. The first, the quiet, good taste manifested in the arrangements which is an essential corollary to ultra-modern publicity operation, and the second, the element of superlative artistic contrast which was observed in the selection of the companion offerings of each program. It would be difficult to imagine a finer counterfoil for a picture of the character of "Brindemos Por El Amor" (the Spanish title for "The Right to Romance") than "Guerra sin Cuartel" ("Show Them No Mercy"), starring Rochelle Hudson, Bruce Cabot and César Romero; nor for the rollicking, breezy, flippant "Un Millón de Gracias" ("Thanks a Million") than the first Fox Spanish-language offering in colors, "De la Sarten al Fuego"; nor for "Velada de Opera" ("Metropolitan") than "Desbanqué Monte Carlo," with Ronald Colman and Joan Bennett; nor for "Rebelde" than "Deber y Disciplina," with Claire Trevor and Ralph Bellamy. All but the Martini debut offering and the color novelty were presented in the original English versions. Not the least of the attractions of the Fox preview cycle were the exquisitely printed programs—a masterpiece of typographical art—in gold, white and black.

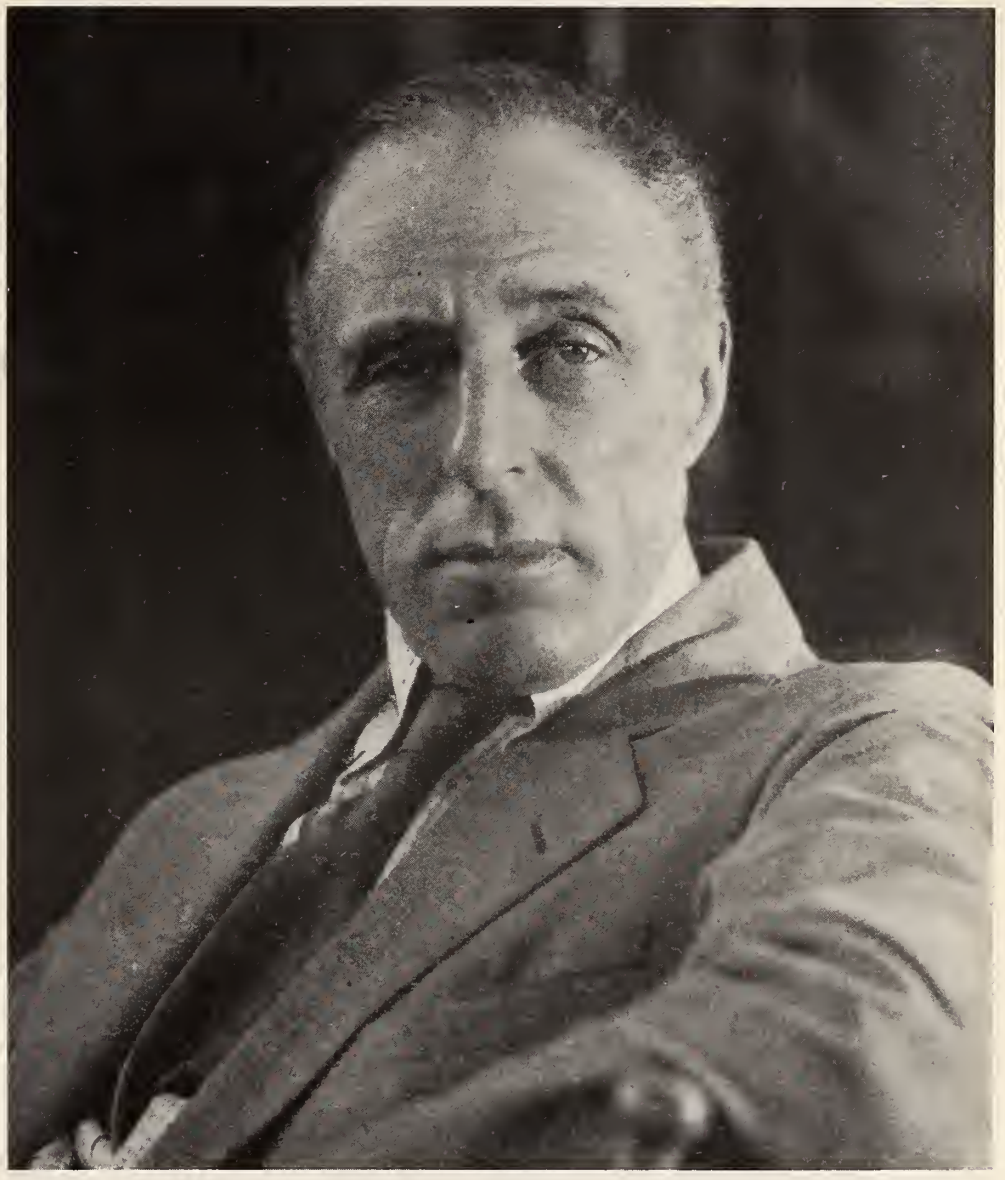
ACADEMY HONORS DAVID WARK GRIFFITH



"THE motion picture world's appreciation of David Wark Griffith, recorded by Terry Ramsaye, editor of Motion Picture Herald," was a part of the ceremony of presentation of a token of special honor to the famous producer at the annual award banquet of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood. The tribute to Mr. Griffith follows:

David Wark Griffith came to the motion picture a young man but already experienced in the drama of the stage through that fertile, vigorous period around the turn of the century. In 1907 he, with timid venturesomeness, went to the Edison studios with a story to sell and in consequence was cast as an actor in a long forgotten primitive drama entitled "The Eagle's Nest." Presently he became a member of the newly formed stock company of the American Biograph Company and as the nickelodeons spread over the land, increasing the demand for product, he was offered opportunity to become a director. He approached the assignment with reluctance, uncertainty and timidity. He would have preferred the apparent security of remaining an actor. But having accepted responsibility as a director, he proceeded with amazing courage in bold departures from what passed for the technique of the time.

Mr. Griffith ignored the tawdry, feeble but bigoted precedent of the day, and began making pictures as they had never been made before.

It is probably accurate to say that among picture makers he was the first to creatively look upon the screen as a fully independent medium, with capacities peculiar and special to itself, first to realize that the motion picture was not to be held to the functions of a stencil machine of record, first to see that it was in truth an instrument for a new, fresh approach to the art of narration in service of human emotions.

When Mr. Griffith shocked the management and jeopardized the job he needed so much by venturing to use only half of an actor on full pay in a close-up, when he dared to invade the sequence of picture tenses by the interpolation of "cutbacks" and took the camera inside the consciousness of a character, he was in the world of his work as profoundly an adventurer as any Leif-the-Lucky sailing into the unknown or any Lindbergh taking off to meet the sunrise. In this day of million dollar production budgets and the magnificent experiments of Hollywood, it is difficult to see in accurate perspective the significance of the labours of this young man who was substantially creating an art form. At Biograph Mr. Griffith took the clumsy literalism of the screen of the period and gave it imagination. He took an art which barely knew its alphabet and taught it syntax. He assembled all of the trick capacities of the camera and made them tools of narration.

" . . . he proceeded with amazing courage"

And, most importantly of all, Mr. Griffith sought to endow the then lowly picture with glamour, depth of emotional appeal, and beauty. He ventured to take the motion picture with intense seriousness, to see it inherently more important than it had been—and that is just a way of saying that he had discovered a vast, emotion hungry, audience which was not being adequately served by the older and orthodox arts.

In consequence Mr. Griffith founded the new art and what it is pleasant to recall as "the Golden Age of Biograph." Down that classic spiral staircase and out the highstooped door of the historic old brownstone at 11 East Fourteenth Street in New York that art flowed out to empower and vitalize the screen of the world, with pictures, and with men and women whose genius had been kindled by Griffith under the green glow of the Cooper-Hewitt tubes of that famous studio.

It is already the decision of tradition to center the fame of Mr. Griffith on "The Birth of a Nation," presented twenty-one years ago. Yet glorious attainment as it

FIREWORKS ONLY DUDS AS ACADEMY PRESENTS EIGHTH ANNUAL AWARDS

Bette Davis, Victor McLaglen and "Mutiny on the Bounty" Win the Highest Honors—Write-in Votes Add Zest

by GUS McCARTHY

Hollywood Correspondent

Not in the eight years that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has been making awards for outstanding achievements has the affair been marked with such an electric tension as characterized the 1936 event.

Prefaced by officers of the Screen Actors and Screen Writers Guild wiring requests to their membership to boycott the dinner, the stage was set for the guests and attendants to expect quite a bit of fireworks. Outwardly, the fireworks never were fired. In their place, a spirit of harmony and good feeling prevailed.

Getting down to business, after proper respect had been paid to hail and wassail, Frank Capra, Academy's president, proceeded to announce the initial minor awards winners. When Dave Gould had been certificated for best dance direction, Douglas Shearer for sound direction, and Harry Warren had accepted the parchment which he and Al Dubin had won for their lyrics and music, Mr. Capra bowed out temporarily with Max Steiner's award for musical direction.

Pete Smith Presides

Taking the rostrum, nimble-witted Pete Smith gave short subject producers Walt Disney, Jack Chertok and Jeffrey Bernerd, representative of Gaumont British, quick blackout glimpses of the golden statuette which "Three Orphan Kittens," "How to Sleep" and "Wings Over Mt. Everest" had won for them. Following Mr. Smith's sparkling moments, Rouben Mamoulian, inclined to be quite serious, invited Clem Beauchamp and Paul Wing up to the speaker's table to hear themselves applauded for their assistant direction of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer;" Ralph Dawson for his film editing of "A Midsummer Night's Dream"; Hall Mohr for his photography of the same picture, and Richard Day for his art direction of "The Dark Angel."

Again on the stand, Mr. Capra demonstrated that suspense has a place in a gathering as important as it has in a picture, as he proceeded to acclaim David Wark Griffith and present him with a special statuette for his services to the industry. With remarks that hushed the levity, Mr. Griffith told of the great obstacles that had to be overcome ere progress could be made in the pioneer art and technique of motion picture entertainment. He described the grand and proud heritage that the modern generation of film folk had in its hands.

As an interlude, Harry Cohn, whose Columbia picture, "It Happened One Night," had monopolized last year's awards, was called upon to announce the best picture of the year and introduce Irving Thalberg, maker of "Mutiny on the Bounty," as the winner.

But the powder train leading to the expected fireworks was growing short. The Guild had exerted great pressure to have nominees for the three big events stay away. They had made it particularly tough for the one who everybody acknowledged in advance was entitled to the statuette for the best actor performance. But it was blah when Mr. Griffith read the name of Victor McLaglen and the picture, "The Informer," whereupon the actor came bustling up to the table just as dramatically as he ever did in any picture.

The stage had been set when John Ford had failed to appear to claim his direction reward for "The Informer." The fireworks were duds when it later was announced that Mr. Ford was out of town. Though Dudley Nichols, winner of the screen play award for "The Informer," was not present to accept his trophy, his absence had been anticipated inasmuch as he, since his resignation from the Academy several years ago, has been aggressive in Screen Writers Guild activities. The climax was reached when Bette Davis accepted her trophy for work in "Dangerous."

Surprises were many, mainly engineered by Warner Brothers. As a write-in candidate, Paul Muni just missed winning the best actor award away from McLaglen. John Ford won the directors' trophy by the narrowest of margins over Michael Curtiz, director of "Captain Blood," another write-in candidate. Similarly, enough voters used pens and pencils to give Hal Mohr the first prize for cinematography.

Nichols Explains Stand

Though Mr. Ford, who has been prominent in Guild affairs, announced that he would accept his award inasmuch as he had not been a member of the Academy for several years and thus not a party to any disputes, Dudley Nichols publicly made known that he would not accept his best adaptation and screen play award. In a communication to the Academy wrote:

"To accept it would be to turn my back on nearly a thousand members of the Writers' Guild, to desert those fellow-writers who ventured everything in the long-drawn-out fight for a genuine writers' organization, to go back on convictions honestly arrived at, and to invalidate three years' work in the Guild, which I should like to look back upon with self-respect. My only regret now is that I did not withdraw my name from nomination and thus avoid this more embarrassing situation. . . .

"Three years ago I resigned from the Academy, and, with others, devoted myself to organizing the Guild because I had become convinced that the Academy was at root political, that it could not be made to function for the purposes to which it had been dedicated, and that in any major disagreement between employed talent and the studios it would operate against the best interests of talent.

"In that period my convictions have not been changed. . . ."

Replying to Mr. Nichols' communication, Mr. Capra said:

"Membership has no connection with the Academy awards and never has had during the eight years they have been conferred. The awards constitute a dignified recognition by a representative group of writers, actors, production executives, technicians and directors, of the worthiest creative work done in motion pictures. The statuette is a symbol of this recognition. The balloting does not in any way take into account the personal, political or economic views of the nominees nor the graciousness with which they may be expected to receive the recognition. It was and of course remains the opinion of the membership of the Academy that the screen play of "The Informer," written by Mr. Nichols, was the outstanding achievement in that field during the year and was an artistic accomplishment of which American motion pictures may be extremely proud."

was, "The Birth of a Nation" was in fact rather an able box office application of principles explored and demonstrated in his pictures that had gone before, and most conspicuously in his last and imposing Biograph effort, "Judith of Bethulia," his first feature length drama. "The Birth of a Nation" was not the making of a master, but was rather the product of a mastery already attained. It was because "The Birth of a Nation" was done with such a sure hand and such a matured concept of the art that it was destined to a career far beyond that of any other motion picture before or since.

And let us not forget that the power of the idea so expressed in the making of "The Birth of a Nation" went out with those cans of film and forced the pioneering of a new school of thought in motion picture showmanship, working tremendously toward the creation of a larger audience, and an immeasurably higher status for the art.

There are two great high tide marks of motion picture evolution. In 1903-5 Edwin S. Porter's "The Great Train Robbery," pioneering the photoplay, emancipated the motion picture from the limitations of a spot on the vaudeville bill and took it into a theatre, a very humble theatre, of its own. And a decade later Mr. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" broke through the limitations of the nickelodeon and at a single stroke gave the screen's best a parity with the tradition reverenced art of the stage, accelerating the movement by which the motion picture was to become the world's dominant amusement medium.

We must honor Mr. Griffith too for making mistakes quite as magnificent as his successes, mistakes that historically should stand to his credit along with his more positive triumphs. Conspicuous in this category we can remember "Intolerance," a tremendous flight of creative endeavor destined to crash up against the all too low ceiling of popular understanding, a motion picture defeated by its success. Mr. Griffith flattered box office humanity when he sought to present the merits of so abstract a concept as the principle of "tolerance" to a world that even today continuously demonstrates that it has not yet heard about it.

Two other conspicuous attainments of the art of Griffith demand record on this occasion, his "Way Down East" and "Broken Blossoms," demonstrating that his intensely sympathetic appreciation of the hearts of humanity could be made more significant under the magic of the camera than the sweep of spectacles made of pomp and pageantry.

The whole emotion hungry world is in debt to Mr. Griffith and it is both appropriate and obligatory for those here as the inheritors, as today's custodians, of the power and the glory that he saw for the screen, to render recognition.

Pickford-Lasky Plans Own New York Office

Pickford-Lasky Productions will open a New York office shortly, so said Mary Pickford upon her arrival in Manhattan last weekend. Miss Pickford has several persons in mind and will appoint an eastern representative before she returns to Hollywood by plane next week.

As acting president of United Artists, Miss Pickford will attend a meeting of the board this Friday, at which time routine matters will be discussed, she said.

Commenting on the appointment of George J. Schaefer as vice-president and general manager, Miss Pickford said "he is a very fine man and he is ideally situated."

Accompanying Miss Pickford upon her arrival in New York were Lynn and Mrs. Farnol, Miriam Hawkins, Nat Wolff and William Kuser. The latter two are working with Miss Pickford on her radio broadcasts.

Supply Board to Meet

Directors of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association, Inc., will meet Friday at the headquarters in New York. Discussions will pivot about the coming annual convention in June in Chicago.

Lavietes Heads New Connecticut MPTO

Harry Lavietes of the Pequot, New Haven, has been elected president of the newly organized Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut. Forty theatres are represented.

Other officers are: William Brennan, first vice-president; Joseph Reed, second vice-president; A. Fishman, treasurer; Joseph A. Davis, executive secretary; Jack Post, recording secretary. Directors include the officers and Dr. J. B. Fishman, Charles Levine, Harry Gale, Morris Bailey, Ralph Pascho, Joseph Shulman, Dave Maglena, George Comden, Jack Schwartz.

Consolidated Net Increases

Consolidated Film Industries reported a net profit for 1935 of $1,077,450, after depreciation, interest, Federal income taxes and other deductions. The report compares with a net of $917,160 for 1934.

MPPDA Meeting Set

The annual meeting of the board of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America will be held March 30th. Reports from Will H. Hays and all department heads will be presented.

Will Dramatize Naked Truth at Annual Dinner

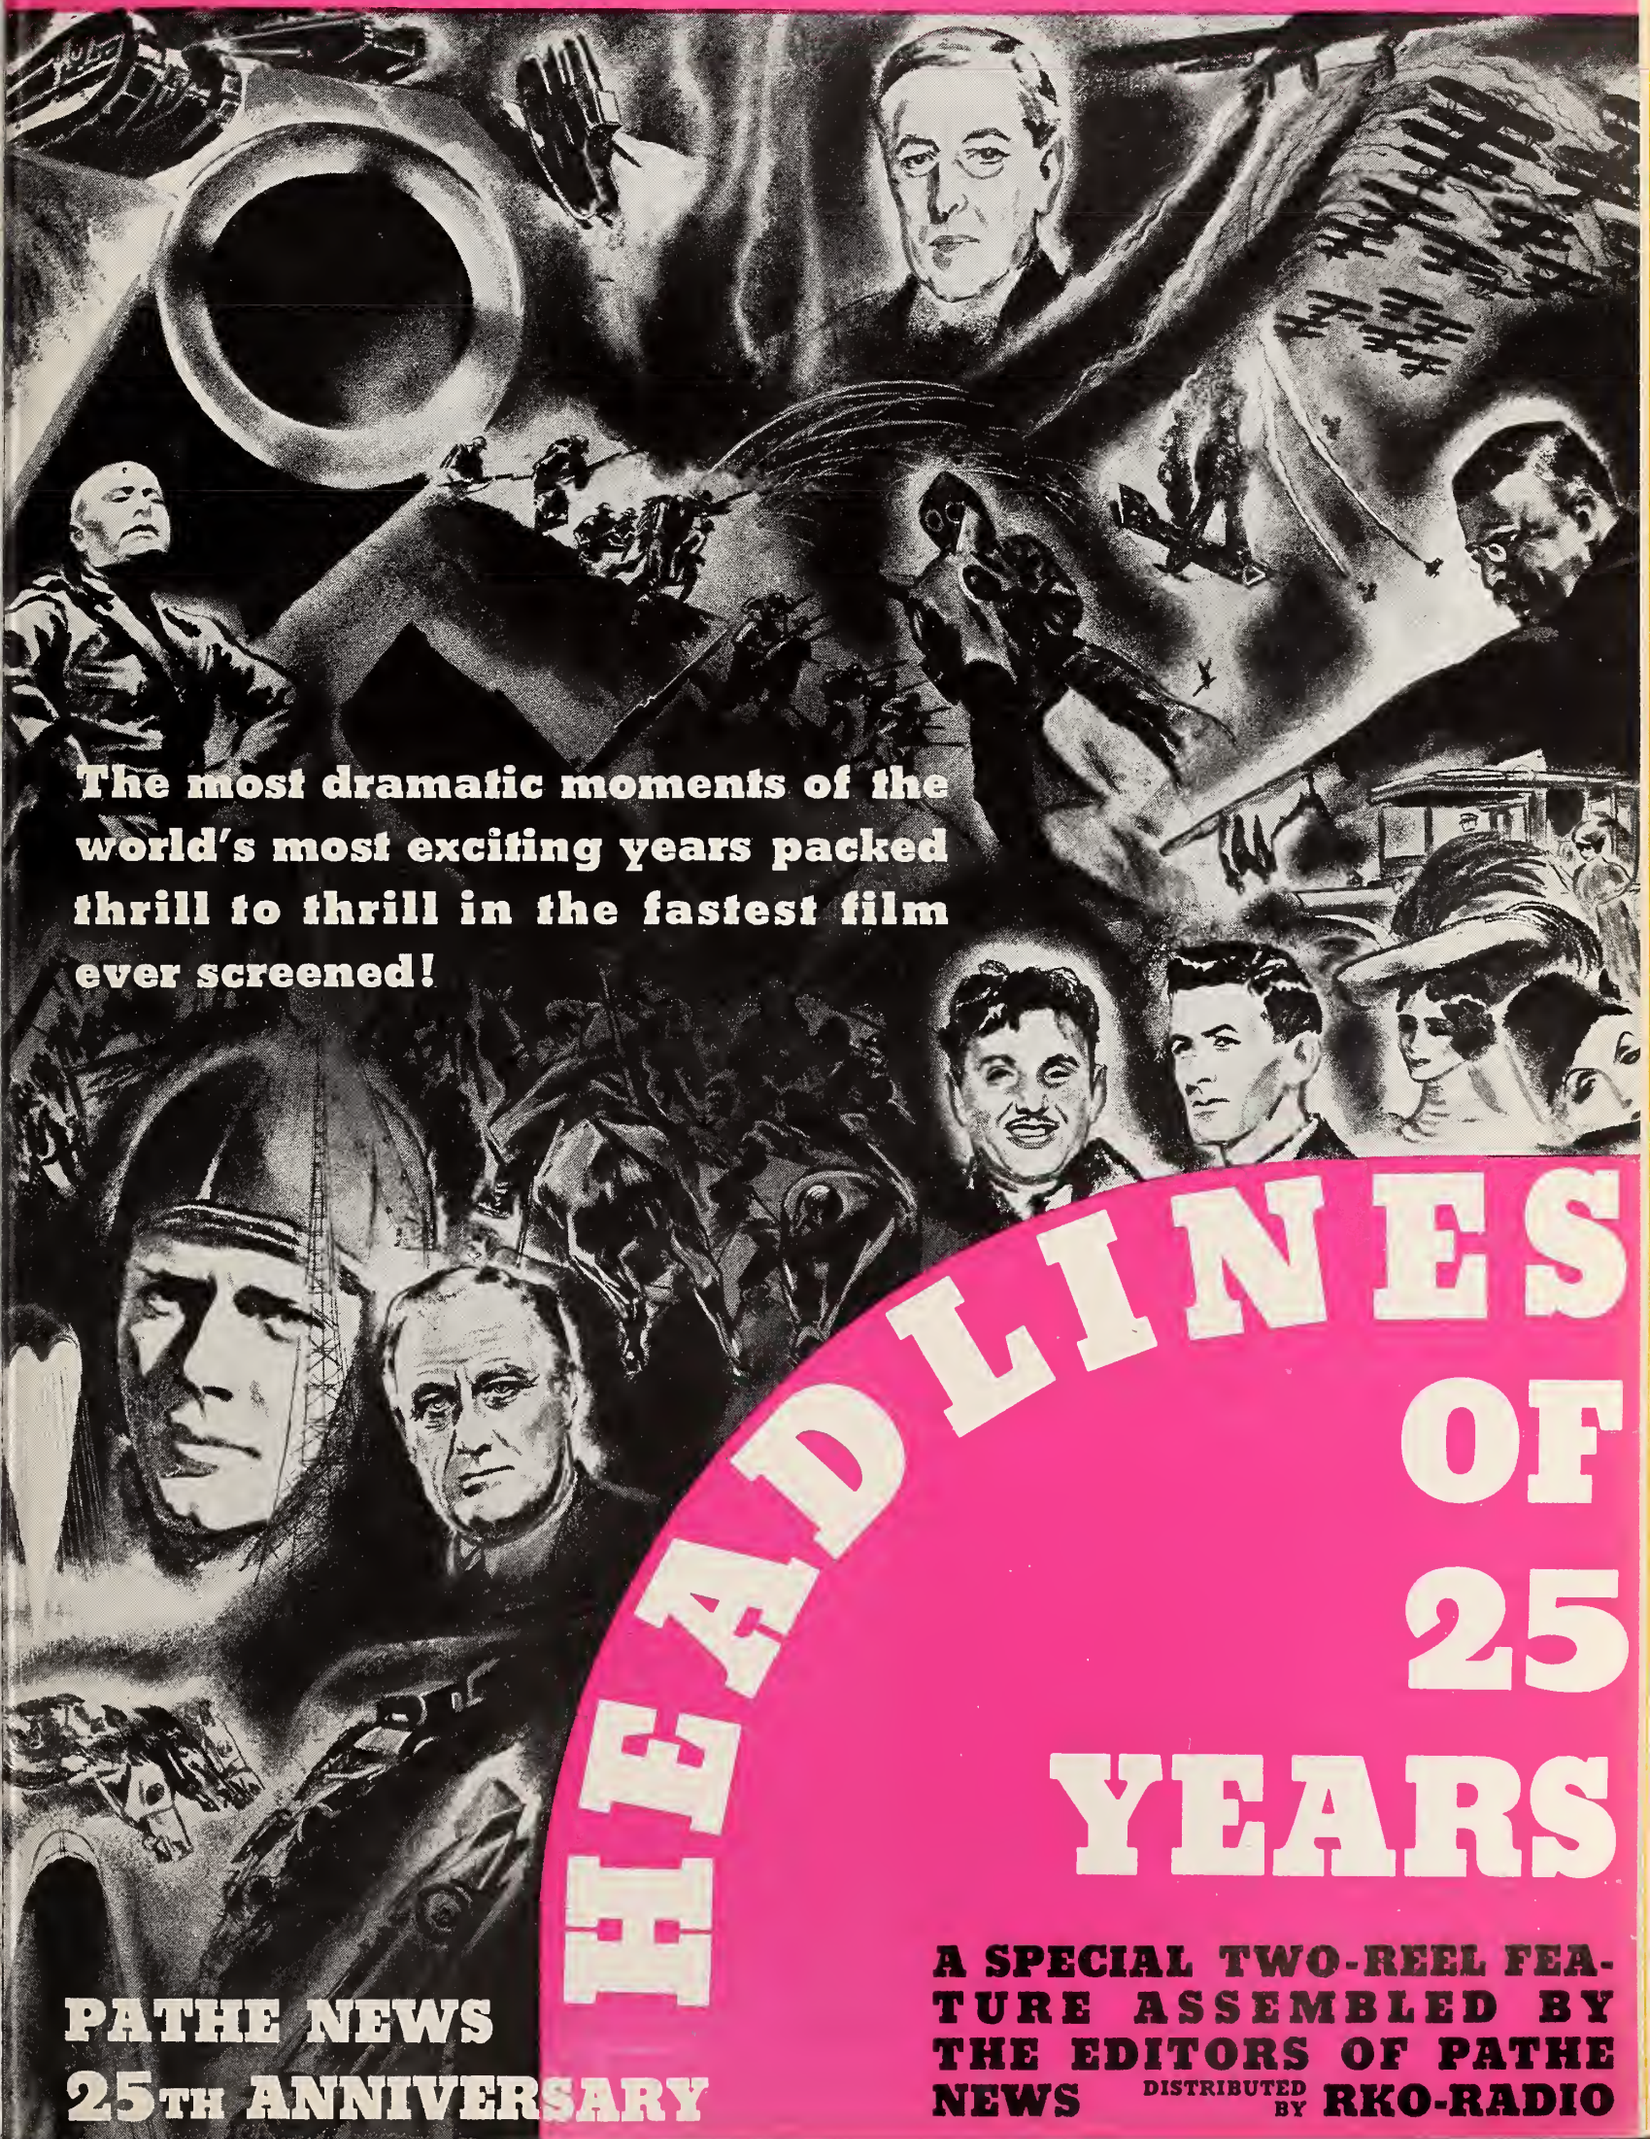
Professionally written, directed, acted and staged dramatization of motion picture personalities and affairs will climax the Naked Truth Dinner, annual feature event of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, to be given at the Hotel Astor, New York, Saturday night.

Produced under supervision of Ralph Rolan, vice-president of "The March of Time," and Gordon White, director of advertising for Educational, the play was written by Charlie Williams and Marcy Klauber, writers of Educational comedies, in collaboration with Charles Curran, account executive of Donahue and Coe. It has been in rehearsal in a Broadway theatre with Hugh Cameron, Walter Penner, Fred Hillebrand, Arthur Kay, Alice Rinehart and others in the cast.

About 1,200 home office executives, studio personalities, members of the advertising branch of the industry, trade paper folk, with a limited representation of the public, will attend the banquet.

Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey was principal speaker at the regular meeting last Thursday, which was conducted in association with the Cheese Club. Governor Hoffman made some page-one remarks about the case of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, declaring his object in intervening in the case was to bring about a full solution of the crime, and the meeting was broadcast over radio station WMCA. Gordon White, who presided, introduced Harry Hershfield, president of the Cheese Club, who described the Governor's talk as his "first public announcement on the case since the recent furore over the condemned man's reprieve."

Among other guests were Albert Goldman, postmaster of New York, Boris Morros, George Gershwin, Louis Nizer, Donald Flama, president of WMCA, S. I. Hauing, playwright, Arthur Tracy, Gus Edwards, Leon Belasco, Gabriel Heator, Billy Ferguson and Alice Rinehart, author of several radio programs.



SMPE Coast Section Will Meet March 19

A meeting of the Atlantic Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held March 19, 8:30 p. m., in the auditorium of the Bell Telephone Laboratories at West and Bethune streets, New York. A feature of the meeting will be the reading of a paper by Victor Subrizi entitled "Flutter in Sound Records," which will be accompanied with a demonstration.

WARNER TAX THREAT LESSENS; CANADIAN MUSIC USERS UPSET

Company Does Not Intend at Present to Assess Exhibitors for Music in Films; Final Decision in Two Weeks

With Harry M. Warner announcing that Warner Brothers will establish a third nationwide radio chain, while a total of 97 infringement suits seeking almost $3,000,000 has been filed against unlicensed radio stations, and with hotels and night clubs also attacked in the drive to compel them to obtain performing licenses, it appeared strongly this week that exhibitors are to escape a double music tax.

Herman Starr, Warner vice-president in charge of music, said on Tuesday that the situation with respect to new agreements to replace the three-months contracts expiring March 31 would be clarified in two weeks. He said that a decision on an exhibitor levy would be announced at that time.

Meanwhile it was learned that Warner Bros. does not now intend to assess the exhibitors, in line with the company's recently expressed policy, explained by Mr. Starr, that it believes "all performing rights fees should be paid at the source". This would mean that Warner favors elimination of the music tax for all theatres, with the entire music royalties levied against films coming from the producers.

Warner has been studying the situation with a view to putting this policy into effect. Motion picture producers for years have felt the music industry should adopt this plan and then apply a tax only in recording the music in film. However, E. P. Kilroe of Twentieth Century-Fox, chairman of the producers' copyright committee, while declaring that the plan would be ideal if it can be made to work, said this week that the situation is so complicated as between recording and performing rights that it does not seem possible of realization soon. He believed that special legislation would be needed to clarify the complexities, and even then not all possible situations could be covered.

Sees Complications

Mr. Kilroe's reaction to Warner's intended policy was that it could not be brought about without much clarification of the various rights involved since a number of the authors and composers affiliated with the Warner music publishing companies have vested their small performing rights in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The authors and composers should not object to elimination of the exhibitor levy by Warners, said Mr. Kilroe, because they are still obtaining their revenue from ASCAP, although it was admitted that their royalty rating might be impaired.

Meanwhile, it is significant that while Warner's campaign of litigation against unlicensed music users continues in full force, not a single suit has been instituted against an exhibitor. The motion picture industry also has noted that, in direct contrast to ASCAP, the character of actions filed has been such as to involve only the large music users and no attempt has been made to dragoon the "little fellow."

Leaving Hollywood for New York, Harry M. Warner, president of the company, said that the decision to form a new radio network grew out of Warner's quarrel with ASCAP. He explained the contemplated chain would provide an outlet now lacking for Warner talent, adding that it would be some time before definite announcement could be made, "but we are going to establish a new chain."

As the Santa Fe Chief stopped in Kansas City, Mr. Warner told reporters that a third system is needed because the two existing chains "haven't a sufficient number of really good stations to fully supply the demand for the best type of entertainment". He felt that the added competition would result in a general improvement in radio programs.

"Entertainment is our business," observed Mr. Warner. "It is only natural that we should enter broadcasting."

New York radio circles read the newspaper dispatches with considerable interest and immediately speculated whether Mr. Warner's announcement meant that he intended to confine the broadcasting of Warner music to the new air outlet. Some time ago there were negotiations with Columbia Broadcasting System for the sale of an interest in the Warner music subsidiaries, but the deal was wrecked on differences over price.

Broadcast Agreement Seen

Meanwhile the two large networks, CBS and National Broadcasting Company, remain unlicensed by Warner, while preparing to resist the infringement actions filed by Warner in the federal district court in New York, which, it appears, cannot come to trial for at least eight months because of the crowded condition of the calendar. The situation may radically change in the meantime, and it is considered probable that an agreement might be reached with the broadcasters.

With 239 radio stations licensed by Warner, the company announced Wednesday that 21 new infringement suits "have just been filed" in various cities. Thirty-five new actions against broadcasters were filed late last week by correspondent attorneys of Wattenberg and Wattenberg, legal firm representing the plaintiffs.

Hotels, Night Clubs Sued

The copyright war spread from radio to New York City's leading hotels and night clubs when Warners filed 10 suits against such music users as the Hollywood and Paradise restaurants and the Plaza, St. Moritz, Weylin, St. Regis and New Yorker hotels. Minimum damages of $250 for each performance of a song is asked in these actions, with total damages ranging from $500 to $1,000. While $250 is the extent of damages sought in some of the radio actions, the great majority seek $5,000.

Further infringement actions are being prepared. Warner has attempted to come to some agreement with the American Hotel Association and obviate the necessity of court action, but the hotel representatives insist that they should not have to pay a tax in addition to that collected by ASCAP.

What is expected to be a permanent licensing policy is being formulated by Warner Bros. for institution April 1, and negotiations are underway with the National Association of Broadcasters, which seeks a per piece method of royalty payment. Warners are inclined to put this long-sought system into effect, it is understood.

Despite many difficulties and a muddled situation, the Warner music publishing subsidiaries

President of Canadian Performing Rights Society Answers 'Racket' Charges Made in Parliament; Two Copyright Bills

Protesting that it had been "defamed and attacked in a manner which is without precedent," H. T. Jamieson, president of the Canadian Performing Rights Society, counterpart to the American Society of Motion Picture Composers, Authors and Publishers, has made vigorous objections to descriptions such as "outrageous racket" applied to the Society in national Parliament.

Mr. Jamieson replied to charges made in debate in the House of Commons by W. K. Esling of Kootenay West, British Columbia, on Mr. Esling's bill intended to benefit Canadian exhibitors and other music users, and to accusations by C. H. Cahan, member from Montreal.

Another bill is expected to be introduced soon by Fernand Rinfret, secretary of state, dealing with the copyright and performing rights situation.

Both bills are designed to restrict or amend the Society's operations and some relief is expected for theatres from the proposed fee of 20 cents a seat per year which the Society has been required to hold in abeyance pending outcome of the legislation.

Mr. Jamieson said that the Society during the 10 years of its existence "has never addressed itself to the public, but now, in view of gross misstatements concerning it, is forced publicly to make formal and emphatic protest against persecution and damage to which it has been subjected by statements made in the House of Commons."

Denies Rule by Threat

Mr. Jamieson took vigorous exception to remarks by Mr. Esling and Mr. Cahan, especially to Mr. Esling's description of the Society as "nothing less than an outrageous racket," as well as his statement that "the present company rules entirely by threats, and the fear which they instil in the hearts of the small theatre owners compels them to pay."

As to fixed prices and tariffs, Mr. Jamieson declared: "The Society takes pride in the fact it always has had fixed tariffs, arrived at following many negotiations with the music users in each class of the entertainment business. It has administered its tariffs fairly and without discrimination, all parties being treated alike. Where parties have been unable to pay, the Society has never pressed for payment."

He pointed out that over a period of "four to five years" the Society has taken "only a comparatively few actions," and in some cases these were test cases to settle legal points, brought only against the strongest parties in each group, such as Famous Players (theatre circuit), Canadian Radio Commission, Quebec Hotels Association and similar large groups. In all these actions, the courts have upheld the Society, he added.

Mr. Jamieson emphasized that the Society represents the properties of non-Canadians and therefore is at a disadvantage "because of political influences brought to bear by the commercial music users."

He pleaded for public support in the Society's "struggle to oppose the demands of the commercial music users," made without giving adequate consideration to the international reciprocal aspect of the Society's copyright business and the "right of foreign owners to fair fees."

Music Users in Canada Puzzled

The statement added that "the Society claims that it should be permitted to charge tariffs equal in amount to those which have been established over a period of over 20 years in Great Britain by negotiations there between the British Society and the various industrial groups including the British Broadcasting Corporation, a body organized by the British Government."

Meanwhile word came from Canada that if withdrawal of the Warner repertory from ASCAP made the American performing rights situation chaotic, it served in Canada to add even more confusion to a situation already disturbsome enough. The 1935 investigation of the Canadian Performing Rights Society by Royal Commission recommended, among other changes, a reduction in the existing scale of rates levied on theatres. This, it was expected, would be effected at the beginning of the present year. So far, no new regulations have been promulgated.

Half Owner of Canadian Society

With ASCAP half owner of the Canadian Performing Rights Society, the Warner withdrawal from ASCAP was accepted as automatically withdrawing this repertory in Canada as well. With the entier situation thoroughly up in the air already, the Warner step raised the general temperature a few degrees more.

Now two more complications have arisen to tangle up the matter. With theatres and other users of copyright music waiting for the Government to bring down legislation which would, among other things, regulate the fees, a private member of the Opposition suddenly introduced a bill on February 13th to amend the Copyright Act. Introduced by Mr. Esling, the proposed legislation would fix a minimum of five cents a seat per year for theatres and also force the Canadian Performing Rights Society to provide for licensees, including theatres, a certified list of all compositions on which copyright is claimed. As the Society reported to the Royal Commission a repertoire of well over two million numbers, this at least would provide every Canadian manager with an extensive library. The Esling bill would cut in half again the reduction to 10 cents a seat per year recommended by the Royal Commission report. It is unlikely that the bill will go through but it does add another touch of bewilderment to the whole situation.

The second complication arises from the fact that the Federal Act under which radio in Canada came under government control expires this month. Extensive revamping of radio legislation is forecast though the fundamental policy of government operation and government ownership of stations is not expected to be changed. The biggest radio customer, both of the Canadian Performing Rights Society and of Warner is, therefore, the Canadian government, which has not yet brought down the laws which will regulate the fees it is to pay. A feature of the present Canadian radio law is a tax of two dollars a year on every receiving set, which is considered by the average householder to be a first-rate nuisance. Acknowledging this, the Canadian government has intimated its intention of abolishing this tax. But this is the method by which the number of radios in operation in the country is established, and the method of determining what Canadian radio should pay for performing rights has been worked out on the basis of the number of listeners.

Warner Brothers has no direct representative in Canada dealing with performing rights. Vitagraph Limited, Warners' Canadian subsidiary, deals with film distribution only. As far as publication and distribution of sheet music is concerned, Warner interests are represented by Canadian Music Sales Corporation of which William Low is president. But the same firm also looks after the sheet music interests of most other producers,—MGM and Fox being exceptions—and is the major outlet for published popular music in the country.

So far, Ottawa reports, no separate Warner list of copyrights has been filed with Ottawa nor has a proposed scale of separate tariffs been registered. Tentative negotiations have been undertaken, it is reported, but any straightening out of the Warner tangle in Canada will have to wait till the general situation is cleared up.

Not knowing where they stood, music users, chiefly radio stations, tried to eliminate Warner works from their performances as far as they could. Forms were forwarded to Canadian radio stations from New York but operators professed not to know what their position was in the absence of any repertory list on file with the Canadian government. Inquiries reveal no checking of Canadian programs to reveal infringements as was done in the United States and no suits in Canada are reported for this cause.

The general Canadian attitude of the customer for performing rights is to sit back and wait for matters to clear, the theory being that no matter what he does at present, it is apt to be wrong.

KUYKENDALL HINTS WARNER COMPROMISE

Warner Brothers has indicated a willingness to negotiate a compromise with exhibitors over music rights, Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, informed the association's executive board in session in Miami last week.

"I feel sure that we can settle the matter and that Warners are anxious to come to terms," Mr. Kuykendall said, adding that "we should reach an agreement soon without much difficulty."

Mr. Kuykendall did not explain what the compromise might be, but it was indicated that while Warner may not impose a tax for its music in films, it would expect the exhibitor to pay for performing its compositions by an orchestra, organ or other non-film method.

New Music Tax Threat Lessens

in January showed a profit of $4,400, against a loss in January, 1935, of $8,000. The improvement came about largely through the retrenchment effected when Warners withdrew from ASCAP January 1, releasing a portion of the staffs, and by confining publishing activities to Warners' own songwriters, precluding advances which have run as high as $10,000 a month.

Though ASCAP claims that practically all Warner authors and composers are ASCAP-controlled, Warners announced that only a few of their songwriters have refused to renew their copyrights.

Members of the Music Publishers' Protective Association have voted to change its name to the National Association of Copyright Owners. The decision came about because the organization has revised its purpose since formation and also is planned to counteract the movement among authors and composers to establish themselves as actual owners of their copyrights. Part of the association's original object was to enforce a code of ethics, but it recently was dropped. While there has been an internal reorganization partially, the functions remain the same, as a trade organization of music publishers and the licensing agency for film and other recording of music.

Bureau Idea Revived

The music publishers have revived a move to establish a separate bureau for the licensing of recording rights, with the motion picture producers underwriting the expense, but the producers, having participated in such a plan twice before, have no such intentions now, according to the film companies' copyright committee.

In line with general policy embracing foreign countries, ASCAP is concluding reciprocal arrangements with music societies in Spain and Poland.

Sam Fox, New York music publisher, and head of the Twentieth Century-Fox music subsidiaries, plans to open a Hollywood office. Sam Fox Publishing Company and Movietone Music Corporation now will issue all songs of the parent company's pictures, and the Sam Fox firm also is publishing songs from Republic and Pickford-Lasky films.

Samuel Cummins has formed the Foreign and Domestic Music Corporation to revamp songs published abroad to which he holds the rights, for domestic sale.

Associated Music Publishers, Inc., New York, owner of an electrical transcription library for broadcasting, has appointed J. H. Barker, Jr., as Australia and New Zealand representative. Mr. Barker was managing director for Western Electric Company in Australia.

Fligelstone Heads British Exhibitors

T. H. Fligelstone, formerly vice-president, has been elected president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of Great Britain and Ireland. Charles P. Metcalfe was elected vice-president. A motion was sponsored by the London Home Counties branch to amend the rules and make it an object of the association to assure that "film rentals paid by members shall not exceed the maximum sums fixed from time to time by the council."

CULKIN ABANDONS PLAN TO RULE FILMS BY FEDERAL COMMISSION

Members of House Subcommittee Indicate Growing Doubt Whether Pettengill Bill Is Reform Measure Claimed

An opinion from the office of Attorney General Homer S. Cummings that legislation outlawing block booking and blind buying would be sustained in the courts and a declaration by Representative Francis D. Culkin of New York that he had abandoned his bill to create a federal commission to regulate the motion picture industry were outstanding developments in the block booking hearings which started Monday in Washington before the Pettengill subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A growing doubt in the minds of members of the subcommittee as to whether the Pettengill bill was the reform measure it was claimed or merely a device to obtain Congressional settlement of an internal industry controversy was evidenced at Tuesday's hearings in the increasingly intensive questioning of witnesses whether the elimination of block booking actually would drive out objectionable pictures.

While urging that the best cure for the "monopolistic control" of the industry would be his measure for a commission, Mr. Culkin announced that "for the present I am going to waive that," and added, "I do not think civilization has advanced far enough to put that bill on the books." Instead, the representative said he would seek passage of his other bill to prohibit compulsory block booking and amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act to apply to leases and licenses.

The testimony otherwise largely paralleled that given two weeks ago at the hearing on the Neely bill, a companion measure to the Pettengill proposal, before the Senate subcommittee. The bill under discussion was, officially, House Resolution 6472, introduced by Representative Samuel B. Pettengill of Indiana. Subject: to prohibit block and blind booking.

Independent exhibitors completed presentation of their case Wednesday with demand for restoration of conditions prevailing prior to advent of block booking. Nathan Yamins, Walter B. Littlefield, H. M. Richey, Jeanette Willensky, H. A. Cole, P. J. Wood and Sidney Samuelson presented testimony, with resumption of hearings on the bill scheduled for Monday.

Heading the attack by proponents of the legislation was Dr. Stephen B. Cabot, honorary vice-president of the Motion Picture Research Council, who repeated in its entirety his testimony before the Senate subcommittee, laying before the House group his charges that "the industry is insincere or unable to reform itself from within."

Injection of the Attorney General's department into the hearings created a sensation in the closing minutes of the first day's session as Chairman Pettengill read into the record an opinion prepared by Assistant Attorney General Harold M. Stephens, with a covering letter from Attorney General Cummings addressed to the chairman.

References to the St. Louis criminal and civil actions against large distributors had just been made when Mr. Pettengill read the memorandum, which said in part:

"During the course of extensive investigations growing out of complaints by exhibitors that the federal antitrust laws had been violated, it has been found that the practices of 'block booking,' 'blind selling' and 'blind booking' are widely used by the motion picture producers and distributors and place the exhibitors, especially the independents, at a disadvantage in dealing with the producer-distributor.

"It is believed legislation on block booking and blind selling would be upheld by the courts and legislation affecting other practices and relationships of the industry would also probably be upheld."

Then the statement recommended that the Pettengill bill provide means of enforcement by the United States district attorneys under the Attorney General, subjecting violations to fines and forefeitures.

At the conclusion of Monday's hearings, Mr. Pettengill informed the press he planned to grant the special request of Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, to have all records of complaints and prospective film suits in the hands of the Justice Department presented for inspection of the subcommittee.

In common with others who followed him, Mr. Cabot, chief of the "outside" interests favoring the legislation, sought to anticipate the arguments of the opposition on the basis of their Senate testimony, and forestalled the claim that block booking is wholesale selling by asserting that in wholesaling the buyer at least has a sample of the product.

He also referred to the "powerless position" in which the exhibitor now finds himself with respect to selection and declared that "if the exhibitor was free to respond to the need and wishes of his patrons he would not refuse to meet their desires" because he "would quickly lose patronage if he did."

The only new feature touched upon by the representative of the council was the "colossal" salary scale in Hollywood, which he said might have to be pruned "slightly" if the Pettengill bill was enacted. However, he declared, this "would help in the preservation of our youth."

LIFTS SCALE, FINDS BUSINESS INCREASED

By raising his admission scale at the Roanoke Theatre in Kansas City, Edwin S. Young claims to have increased his attendance 20 per cent since December 22, even though during that period the temperatures have ranged around zero.

Mr. Young lifted his top from 15 cents, where it has stood for two years, to 20 cents. This gives him 35 days better clearance, but he questions whether this was solely responsible for the larger box-office grosses. He contends he draws from a wider area under the new plan because people have a tendency to judge a picture's value by the theatre's scale of admission prices.

Attorney General's Office Says Legislation Outlawing Block Booking and Blind Buying Would Be Sustained

In an opening statement for the distributors, C. C. Pettijohn, general council for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, again reviewed the mechanical difficulties of the industry involved in the need of distributing 30,000 miles of film among 16,500 theatres each day, and pointed out that "samples" could not be submitted to prospective customers because "the motion picture industry is not a mass production industry and often the producer doesn't know what he has until his picture is completed."

Declaring that exhibitors would not be different under selective buying than they are now, Mr. Pettijohn asserted that cancelations under the block booking system are chiefly in the so-called "uplift" pictures and that under selective buying they would still buy the box office attractions in preference to better films which might not draw as well.

Mr. Pettijohn again asserted that if the distributors are to be deprived of the advantages of block selling the exhibitors should not be given the privilege of block buying, but that both sides should be treated alike.

Under any system of selective buying, Mr. Pettijohn explained, the exhibitor with the most money will get the cream of the product, and in any event, the small exhibitor whose block contracts now protect him against his richer competition will be left unprotected. No improvement in morals would necessarily follow adoption of the bill, he declared.

This statement was denied by Representative Culkin, who asserted that if responsibility were placed upon the exhibitor he would soon cease to show pictures of which his patrons disapproved.

Mr. Culkin devoted considerable time to discussing the recent St. Louis actions against Warners, Paramount and RKO which, he said, were chiefly devoted to "personalities" and declared that the filing of the new civil suit in New York against the same defendants demonstrates that the Government considers the industry "controlled by a monopoly."

He declared in favor of making motion pictures a public utility, "as they are in England and France." Pointing out that railroads, telephone companies and power companies already are considered public utilities, the Congressman declared it is "much more vital to the life of the nation that this far-reaching influence which, in the present hands has destroyed the influence of home, church and school, should be under Government protection."

However, he added, for the present he would waive that in favor of his other bill. In lieu of the latter, he continued, he favored the Pettengill bill, introduced partly at his suggestion. "I am more concerned about the passage of this legislation than I am for the credit of sponsoring it," he said.

However, he told the subcommittee, the bill needed amendment before it would be satisfactory.

Mr. Culkin launched a bitter attack at the producers, belittling the importance of their arguments against the legislation. "The producers complain of threatened censorship," he said, "yet they exercise a censorship brazen and illegal. They demand freedom of the screen, yet a few irresponsible and covetous men whose vulgarity predominates in film production hold the whole situation in the palms of their hands."

FILMS IMPROVED, WITNESSES AGREE

From this he went into an attack on pictures because of their alleged effect abroad in alienating respect for the United States. He ridiculed claims that the quality of pictures has been improved, reading a summary of the Legion of Decency list for last December in which, he said, out of 1,130 pictures, 528 were placed in Class A, 512 in Class B and 90 in Class C. "At least 50 per cent of the pictures are antisocial," he charged.

Referring to but not answering Mr. Pettijohn's charge before the Senate committee that the men who drew the bill knew nothing about the industry, Henry R. Atkins of the research council's legal staff, read the statement which had been submitted at the Senate hearing, explaining the measure section by section.

Mr. Atkinson was closely questioned by Representative Cooper of Ohio as to how the bill was going to eliminate the bad picture.

Mr. Atkinson suggested that communities could set up local censorship boards, whereupon Mr. Cooper asked how much cooperation the exhibitors would give if they thought the actions of such boards might subject them to suits for breach of contract.

Representative Peyser of New York also evinced interest in this phase and asked what happened now when a distributor sold a picture and it was banned by the censors. Mr. Atkinson expressed the opinion that the exhibitor still had to pay or play, but Mr. Pettijohn informed the committee that in such cases the picture cannot be shown and is withdrawn.

Calling attention to the unanimous statements of both opponents and proponents that the character of pictures has improved vastly, Representative Terry of Arkansas suggested that the question appeared to be more one of controversy between different groups in the industry. This was admitted by Mr. Atkinson who, however, complained that there was no assurance the present level would be maintained.

Representative Connery of Massachusetts, long an actor and theatre manager, declaring himself a friend of the industry, urged enactment of the Pettengill bill both "to do away with monopoly and on moral grounds." If the theatre owner can get what he wants he will get what his patrons demand, he declared. There would not necessarily be any increase in the cost of films, he said in response to a question by Congressman Pettengill.

Representative White of Idaho also spoke for the bill, declaring that exhibitors in his state who fought block booking are being forced out of business by "ruthless competition."

Opening the attack for the independents, Abram F. Myers also repeated his arguments before the Senate committee, declaring frankly that the matter was one of economics to his group and asserting that inasmuch as the exhibitor was totally dependent upon the producer for product it was not to be thought that he would want anything which would put the latter out of business.

Declaring the country has been flooded with "amazing propaganda" by opponents of the bill, Mr. Myers asserted exhibitors will continue to buy in blocks and want merely the privilege of selecting the pictures which shall comprise the blocks and the right to take as large or small a block as they see fit.

Mr. Myers repeated his charge that block booking is a "cloak" for unfair and oppressive practices."

He also charged, in discussing admissions with Representative Terry, that the producers claimed the bill would kill the 10-cent theatre but that in Dallas they were attempting to put in their contracts a provision that a minimum admission of 25 cents should be charged.

Mr. Myers was asked by Chairman Pettengill to give his views as to how the differential between blocks and part-blocks should be arrived at and said it could be done by applying the percentage of differential in the cost of the various pictures.

While there is in New York an excellent distributing system, he told the committee, the producers have no such a system and a few men in Hollywood dictate the pictures to be seen by the rest of the country, although the money to make those pictures comes from the East.

Under the present system of block booking, he asserted, in 50 per cent of the contracts the exhibitors is forced to take all or none of a block and in addition must take a lot of short subjects and often a newsreel in order to get the features.

He was questioned at length by Chairman Pettengill as to whether the more intense competition caused by the seeking of the exhibitors' business by all of the "Big Eight" would not tend to keep prices down, and said that this might be the case, although he pointed out that all producers are now competing for business.

Sees Cost Rise Possibility

However, he said, "we concede the producer must operate at a profit, and if the bill increases selling costs, that will add to the cost of the picture and the exhibitor will have to pay. Otherwise, the producer will be driven out of business and the exhibitor will have nothing to show on his screen."

The independent exhibitors, as a class, are attempting to follow the dictates of the Legion of Decency, he said, and in his territory, with few exceptions, are not showing pictures banned by the organization. On the other hand, he charged, the affiliated houses, almost without exception, are showing those films.

Mr. Pettijohn interrupted Mr. Yamins' presentation, but the chairman ruled "there would be plenty of time for rebuttal later." Questions were put to the witness by Representatives Pettengill and Peyser, and Representative Sadowski of Detroit inquired if the fight did not resolve itself to: "Who is going to take the loss on the bad pictures?"

The apparent disinclination of members of Congress to become involved in controversies over trade practices was seen as the hearings went into their second day, and the committee appeared more and more uncertain though proponents of the legislation earnestly assured them that it would raise the moral tone of the screen and opponents as confidently asserting it would not.

An indefatigable leader in the questioning of witnesses, Representative Cooper finally declared that if no moral question was involved "millions of people" had been deceived.

Chairman Pettengill also appeared perturbed, complaining that it seemed the only question "is whether it is necessary to implement local public opinion by some legislation or whether it can be done in some other way.

Repeating, practically word for word, their testimony before the Senate subcommittee, a number of representatives of women's organizations, with one exception, argued against enactment of the legislation.

Theatre Not "Day Nursery"

Meeting the charge that mothers were unable to secure the showing of pictures fit for their children, Mrs. Alonzo Richardson of the Atlanta, Ga., Board of Review, declared that "too many mothers look upon the theatre as a day nursery."

Many organizations who have sent in resolutions approving the Pettengill bill have voted them without knowing what it was all about, the committee was told by Mrs. Samuel A. Ellsworth of Worcester, Mass. She outlined the work of the Worcester Board of Review, much to the pleasure of Representative Holmes, who appointed the first board when he was mayor.

While the Pettengill bill might have served a purpose when it was introduced a year ago, conditions today are vastly different and there is no need for it, it was contended by Mrs. Edward Barsham of Wilmington, Del.

Block booking is a trade practice which should be solved by the industry and is really of little or no interest to the organizations which are seeking to improve the moral quality of films, said Mrs. Francis J. Flagg, Newton, Mass. In many cities, it was declared by Mrs. Pilcy Chestney of Macon, Ga., exhibitors are working hand-in-glove with local organizations in eliminating bad pictures and it is not difficult to have a film pulled if the protest is sufficiently strong.

Says Ban Would Aid Morals

Prefacing her testimony with an attack upon the standing and testimony of those who preceded her, Miss Katherine Lyford of Boston, representing the Massachusetts Civic League, repeated the statement she had made before the Senate group in which pictures were credited with being a school of crime. "Millions of women" demand adoption of the bill, she said, answering Representative Cooper's usual question as to its moral possibilities by saying that it would "be the first step" toward the elimination of the undesirable picture.

From the point of view of the exhibitor, the measure is one of economics, it was declared by Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass., president of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

YOUTHS STAGE RIOT AT AMATEUR SHOW

Irked by the amateur entertainment offered at the Brooklyn Fox Theatre a group of unruly youngsters in the balcony expressed their disapproval with a shower of assorted vegetables and a salvo of catcalls on Monday night.

Eight of the youths were arrested after the management, unable to cope with the situation, called in the police. During the noisy demonstration the show went on with only a short interruption.

HEARING EXTENSION DOOMS VOTE ON COPYRIGHT BILL THIS SEASON

Representatives of ASCAP Become Target for Attack As House Committee Hears Opponents of Society's Stand

Possibilities of enactment of new copyright legislation at the present session of Congress this week faded to a minimum by a decision of the House patents committee to continue its hearings for an additional four or five weeks.

The decision came Monday, when representatives of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, who for the past two weeks have assailed motion picture and other users of their material, in turn became the target of attack as the committee began to hear ASCAP's opponents on copyright legislation. Exhibitors, regardless of faction, radio broadcasters and other music users had hoped for passage of the Duffy bill which would provide relief from burdensome music taxes.

Determination of the committee not to agree to Chairman William I. Sirovich's plan to terminate the hearings next week, with two weeks monopolized by ASCAP and its affiliates and the remaining two weeks divided among all the varied users of music, led to an agreement that all interests should be given as much time as possible.

"Must" Bills First

If the hearings are not completed until almost the end of April, it was pointed out by committee members, it will be impossible to get any action on a bill this session, in view of the policy of Congressional leaders to schedule nothing not on the Administration's "must" program. Besides the Duffy measure, there are pending the Daly and Sirovich bills which would give the authors and composers increased protection.

Senator F. Ryan Duffy of Wisconsin, author of the bill passed by the Senate last session, was the first witness as hearings resumed. Apparently nettled over the reversal by the committee of the usual practice of hearing proponents first, which would have permitted his appearance two weeks ago, the Senator vigorously defended his measure.

Charges by Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, that the bill had been framed by "the power trust" and rushed through the Senate when but 13 members were on the floor, were denied by the Wisconsin Senator.

"The five men who drafted this bill were absolutely impartial," he asserted. "They had no ax to grind. There is nothing to the silly charge that the power trust had anything to do with this bill, which has received very emphatic approval from many sources—except, of course, some groups which have a selfish interest in some phases of the existing law."

Much of the Senator's statement was devoted to a discussion of the $250 minimum damage clause, which he asserted has been "flagrantly abused." Deriding ASCAP's claim that it never has oppressed the small restaurant man, saloon keeper or the like, Senator Duffy flashed a number of letters on the organization's own letterheads threatening suits for heavy infringement damages.

Underlying the proposed elimination of the minimum damage clause, he revealed, was the consideration that no other country imposes such a penalty and the belief that intimidation of users of music could best be averted by leaving to the courts the determination of the damage suffered by copyright owners through infringements.

"From the loud lamentations by representatives of ASCAP," he told the committee, "one would think my bill gives the composers no redress. It contains adequate provisions for infringements, but removes a blackjack which enables the society to levy an unconscionable tax upon users of music.

Every right the copyright owner now has is conserved in the Senate bill, Senator Duffy contended, explaining it would permit the author to dispose of the various rights to his work as he sees fit and he emphasized that these rights are vested in the author by the bill rather than in the publisher.

The provision incorporating in the right to produce a picture the right to exhibit, he said, is intended as a safeguard to exhibitors and to prevent an author after granting motion picture rights to prevent the exhibition of the picture.

From the manner in which the hearings so far have been monopolized by ASCAP, he commented ironically, it might "give the impression they are the only ones concerned," but, he warned the committee, the Constitution, while making provision to safeguard the rights of creators, also covers the rights of the public under the general welfare clause.

"I think it is incorrect in considering copyright to consider only the persons who get the copyright," he said. "I do not think the courts would hold you must not consider the great mass of people who are the consuming public. It is up to Congress to see that the consuming public has some protection."

The bill as it now stands, he said, provides ample protection against piracy, among the weapons being the injunction clauses, the provisions for actual damages and recovery of infringers' profits, and punitive damages. There is no limitation to the recovery for infringement, he pointed out, and a copyright owner could sue for any amount he wanted—"would have the right to sue for as much as $1,000,000."

Advocating retention of the provision in the bill providing for adherence to the Berne convention, Senator Duffy became involved in controversy with members of the committee, including Chairman Sirovich, who declared we should not enter the international copyright union because of the discrimination against American authors and composers practiced by a number of European nations which are parties to that convention.

Opponents of the Duffy bill last Thursday concluded their testimony with the appearance of George M. Cohan, who declared he had "no particular statement to make," but had come to Washington because he resented being called a "racketeer."

Mills Attacks Exhibitors

E. C. Mills, general manager of ASCAP, completed his testimony with a plea for retention of the $250 minimum infringement penalty and an attack on exhibitors, broadcasters and others who are seeking its elimination.

He told the committee that copyright laws were passed for the public and not for the creators, and in turn the public "should provide compensation for the creators."

He assailed copyright provisions which, he said, specified the same remuneration to authors of ragtime as of more important works, and urged against adherence to the Berne convention.

"It is impossible for United States citizens to protect their rights in Italy and Germany, for example," said Mr. Mills. He added there was no difficulty in France or England.

Mr. Mills told the committee that $80,000,000 worth of radio time was sold on the air last year, that $50,000,000 was paid by radio listeners to power and light companies for energy used in their sets, and that $500,000,000 was spent for radios.

"Yet the 45,000 composers and authors who are members of ASCAP received only $2,680,406.46 out of what must have been a billion dollars' worth of business," he said.

CAN'T STOP THEATRE APPLAUSE, RULES COURT

Theatre managers disturbed by marathon applauders in their houses should go easy in curbing them, and not use a broom handle by any means. That's the substance of a ruling by Judge Thomas V. Holland of the North Side municipal court in Kansas City.

The manager of the Aladdin, G. L. Johnson, told the judge that Lewis Lesnick, a young patron, disturbed other patrons when he clapped loudly and rattled ice cubes in a container while no one else was applauding. He said Lesnick refused to stop, and Johnson said he had to strike him with a blackjack when Lesnick approached him later in a threatening manner. Lesnick contended he merely was applauding newsreel pictures of President Roosevelt and the American flag.

After offering the opinion that theatre patrons had the right to clap their hands when they were enjoying a performance, the court dismissed the case.

A Message to Garcia

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Melodrama

An action adventure feature, there's a considerable amount of melodramatic theatricalism incorporated in this film. The actual event upon which it is based—Lieut. Andrew S. Rowan's delivery of President McKinley's message to General Garcia, Cuban leader in the struggle of that country to rid itself of Spanish dominance—while an inspiring saga of courage, heroism and devotion to duty is hardly, in itself, substance for feature length entertainment. Thus in order to give the episode the necessary entertainment color and quality, it was necessary to incorporate much romance, drama and comedy into the screen play as embellishments to the basic thrill actuality.

When Rowan is handed McKinley's message, his only instruction is—"Deliver it to General Garcia." Setting out from Washington, Rowan is trailed by spy Dr. Krug, a sort of Nordic character, which automatically eliminates any possibility of offending Spanish sensibilities. Rowan's landing in Cuba made hazardous by Krug's activities, he falls into the company of Sergeant Dory, an expatriate American who has no compunctions about doing business with either the Cubans or Spaniards. As Dory knows where Garcia is, Rowan hires him as guide. Entering the Cuban jungles, the pair witness a military execution and meet a girl, Senorita Raphaelita, who turns out to be the slain man's daughter. A super-patriot, she joins up with Rowan and Dory and makes it evident that she considers Dory too treacherous to trust.

As the trio go through the jungles and swamps, their lives menaced by Spaniards, insects and alligators, the Senorita is wounded. Pleading with Rowan to go on alone, Rowan takes one trail, and Dory another, to confuse Krug's trailing henchman. They meet again at a blockhouse which Dory believes is Garcia's headquarters. Rowan enters, to fall into Krug's hands. As he is being tortured into revealing the whereabouts of the message, Dory, knowing that it may be fatal to him for his previous treachery, seeks out Garcia. Meanwhile, the Senorita is captured and brought to the blockhouse. As both are being made the victims of Krug's fiendishness, Dory convinces Garcia that for once he's telling the truth. When the Cuban patriots are rounded up for an assault on the blockhouse, a thrill packed episode, Dory is the first to break in. Finding the all but dead Rowan and the Senorita, he is shot by Krug in attempting their rescue, but manages to kill Krug. Before he dies, Dory asks Rowan if he will make it known that as bad as he was, a deserter, a renegade and everything else that the messenger will make it known to his countrymen that he did one good deed for his country. The message delivered to Garcia, Rowan claims the hand of the Senorita who accompanied him on his dangerous mission.

Semi-historical in character, but for entertainment purposes more a thrill, romantic melodrama, the picture affords many opportunities for exceptional interest creating showmanship. Draw names of the principals and chief supporting players being above average, the legend that surrounds Rowan's heroic accomplishment easily can be made the basis for timely and topical exploitation that should arouse interest of both adults and youngsters.

Previewed at Fox Ritz Theatre, first-run neighborhood house. While the slow tempo to which the picture's earlier sequences are paced seemed to cause a bit of restlessenss, the exciting action finale apparently made up for the initial slowness.

Too Many Parents

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

"Too Many Parents" is the kind of picture which exhibitors are apt to make the mistake of considering too lightly in advance, only to be surprised when audiences find out what it's all about. It's a kid picture, far from the formula, that's worthy of a spot on any program. Holding plenty of interest for youngsters, adolescents and grownups, it's a human interest packed picturization of youthful drama, comedy and near tragedy that winds up with triumphant happiness. It possesses unique power to plumb the deepest emotions. It provides ample opportunity to laugh and get excited. Yet in its finely developed smash sequences there is room for nothing but tears. A "natural" for showhouses playing to family trade, it at the same time offers potent contrast to any other attraction, no matter how big or pretentious.

With Billy Lee, Clarence Talbot and Morton Downing, whose parents have no time for them and don't want to be bothered, Phil, son of widower Mark Stewart, is bundled off to military school. As the various phases of private school life, sport and discipline are portrayed, as well as the characters and the kids as they develop, the greatest happiness of the youngsters comes in letters from home. Phil's father is too busy to write him. To preserve his pride, Phil resorts to the subterfuge of writing letters to himself and boasting what a grand father his dad is. But the ruse is discovered. Shamed both by the fear of what his comrades will think about him as well as the punishment inflicted, Phil is almost at the point of destroying himself when in comes his father, whose conscience has been dynamically awakened to his responsibility.

George Ernest gives an unusual performance in the principal role and the other youngsters display talents worthy of the abilities of more mature actors. It would be advisable to exert every possible effort to get a big house for initial performances, to take full advantage of word-of-mouth advertising.

Previewed in the Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles, neighborhood first-run house, subsequent to "The Milky Way." The picture quickly swept the audience into its mood and held their attention continually.

Everybody's Old Man

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Comedy Drama

This production is a readaptation of "The Working Man," made several years ago with George Arliss in the leading role. The basic plot has been unchanged; only the atmospheric backgrounds have been altered, but it is still engrossing, human interest entertainment. With Irvin S. Cobb, whom it is quite evident, 20th Century-Fox is grooming to take the place of the late Will Rogers, and the supporting cast completely new, there is every reason to anticipate that this picture will receive the same popular reception as the other. As he appears in the picture Cobb is more himself in character than he is as an actor. It's Cobb, expertly aided by Johnny Down, Norman Foster and Rochelle Hudson, who makes the show go.

The picture, always quite human, is an imaginative picturization of life. When Franklin's old canned food manufacturing rival Sampson dies, the veteran warrior loses all zest for business. Turning management over his plant to his highly efficient whippersnapper nephew, Ronald, he goes to Europe. There he meets a couple of kids, Sampson's children, Cynthia and Tommy, offspring of the girl he loved long ago. Their interests being only gin and jinks, Franklin is heartbroken.

old fogy whom the parade has passed by he contrives to have himself appointed guardian of the children. Amazing the kids by changing from a soft-hearted old codger into a man of iron, he makes Tommy go to work, fires the chiseling manager Gillespie and sends Cynthia off to get a job in Ronald's plant. As the sequences in which Ronald and Cynthia fall in love are the show's high spots, Franklin goes to work to blast the ground out from under Ronald's feet. Doing a good job of it, Ronald is convinced that a spy is at work in his plant. Horror stricken, Cynthia, who believes that Ronald has discovered her identity, flees.

The battle is too much for Ronald; he approaches Tommy with a merger proposition. He gets a shock when in Tommy's home he finds Cynthia and learns she's his young rival's sister. But the final torture is reserved for the anticlimax when he's led into the fierce old trustee's den. The surprise of learning the identity of Cynthia is nothing to the wallop he gets when his uncle emerges from behind a newspaper to tell him just how much an old fogy he is in the world of business. There's a merger all right, two of them in fact, one blending the companies, the other Cynthia and Ronald.

This is an attraction which permits the selling of both the story and the players. Possessing an appeal to both old and young with plenty of romance, drama, comedy, personal characterization, suspense and surprise, it seems to have the quality for any kind of patronage. Highly amusing, it also provides much easily adaptable exploitation in name value and story content.

Previewed in the Westwood Village theatre, class neighborhood and college campus theatre. Received by the audience with continual smiles and chuckles plus occasional healthy laughs.

Don't Gamble with Love

(Columbia)

Melodrama

This is a simple little production that starts off slowly, fails to increase its pace and winds up practically in the same spot from which it started. However, it does have strength of cast names, the best line for showmanship.

Bruce Cabot and Ann Sothern, and particularly Cabot because of his performances in such efforts as the current "Show Them No Mercy," are two of the film's assets.

The theme, gambling, is treated in a slightly different manner, for this kind of gambler is made respectable, not in the general conception of those who live by their wits, skill and chance.

Bruce Cabot is forced by his wife, Miss Sothern, to sell his gambling club, a rendezvous for the social elite maintained honestly and profitably. Miss Sothern believes that their son should be reared in better surroundings.

With the money obtained from the sale of the club Cabot joins an investment firm and soon is made an executive. Shortly afterwards, however, the members of the firm disappear, leaving behind a trail of swindled investors and a dent in Cabot's bankroll.

Bitter and resentful, and to regain his losses, he returns to his gambling house as his wife leaves him. The new resort is instantly patronized by Cabot's old customers, but the club has changed and all the games are now crooked.

The gambling ring, however, does not take to Cabot's new venture and warns him not to open another club. Cabot disregards the warning and makes plans to expand.

The new club is opened and Miss Sothern, who has been prospering as a dress designer, goes to the opening, hoping for a reconciliation. There she learns, much to her dismay, that her husband is running a crooked resort and at the same time she discovers that the gambling ring has come to kill Cabot for expanding against their orders. She exposes the crooked games and Cabot is ruined. In the excitement, one of the losers takes a shot at Cabot but hits the wife instead. This accident brings the two together again and they plan their future, which is to be entirely devoid of gambling.

By keen showmanship, exhibitors should be able to prepare suitable exploitation campaigns to promote this picture, stressing those elements most obvious.—Baehler, New York.

Sound engineer, George Cooper. Film editor, James Sweeney. Running time, 58 minutes. P.C.A. certificate. No. 1902. Release date, Feb. 15, 1936. General audience classification.

Laughing Irish Eyes

(Republic)

Here's a show that is not only entertaining but also one that readily lends itself to unique and effective interest-creating exploitation. For entertainment purposes it blends the sock of prize ring thrill action with the appeal of music tinged with love interest. For showmanship purposes it affords an unusual topical title, an adequate cast of known name players, an atmosphere that is familiar but is presented in a manner that creates quite a bit of novelty, a lilting song accompaniment and surprise climax.

Running a fight club in a New York Irish neighborhood, promoter Kelly finds he needs something besides synthetic Irish fighters to please his patronage. Taking his daughter Peggy with him to Ireland, he goes searching for a hundred per cent fighting son of the old sod. While he's awaiting the appearance of touted Tiger O'Keefe, Peg meets and falls in love with singing blacksmith Danno O'Keefe. The two go to a county fair and Danno wins the singing championship of Ireland. Later, in a street brawl, he knocks out the Tiger and is palmed off to Kelly as the fighter he is looking for.

The trio return to America. Danno, wading through a series of set-ups, is ballyhooed in typical American style and Peg gets him a radio tryout. Going along fine in both endeavors, Danno is booked for a match with the leading contender. But when sports commentator Eddie Bell, who is romantically attached to Peg, learns that she is in love with Danno, he exposes the Kelly importation as a built-up fakir. Disillusioned, Danno is returning home, only to have Peg stop him, explain the whole situation and what it means to her and her father to have him run out on them. As packed Madison Square Garden eagerly awaits the singing socker, he returns and in typical suspense-laden fashion disposes of Kid Campo in a high action fight. A champ, he retires to become a radio singer and carry on his romance with Peggy.

Well acted, with romance, drama, comedy, action and excitement effectively blended, Regan's singing of a number of Irish ballads, together with his several renditions of the theme song, give the picture class and character.

Previewed at the Fairfax theatre, Los Angeles, subsequent-run neighborhood house. The audience watched picture intently, occasionally breaking out into applause in appreciation of Regan's singing and the thrill action.

Liebelei

(General Foreign Sales)

Viennese Drama

Spoken in German and fitted out with English subtitles, Arthur Schnitzler's tragic romance ranks well above the average importation of its kind in dramatic power and general makeup. To an audience of evidently Teutonic origin in attendance at the 55th Street Playhouse, New York, the picture appeared to be immensely amusing in its early stages, gripping in its closing sequence. The story, a bit Continental and slightly if at all modified for American presentation, is clearly stated in action and English caption. Musical background is made up of items from Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms, and the picture opens and closes in the Vienna State Opera House, as of 1910, but the setting is incidental and the picture should not be billed as a musical production.

Magda Schneider is appealing as the feminine lead, with Luise Ullrich almost equally effective in a but slightly secondary role. Wolfgang Liebeneiner, as the tragically destined hero, and Willi Eichberger as his companion in adventure, are satisfactory, but principal recognition for histrionic ability on the male side is due Gustaf Gruendgens as the betrayed husband. Olga Tschechowa, as his wife, was not a happy choice for her assignment.

The story opens with Lieutenant Fritz Lobheimer clandestinely visiting Baroness Eggersdorf and narrowly escaping discovery by her husband, after which he joins his fellow officer, Lieutenant Theo Kaiser, and with him meets Christine, a musician's daughter, and Mitzi, her frivolous friend. The two couples reach a type of understanding common to the place and period, and Fritz falls seriously in love with Christine. Having given the Baroness the key to his apartment, Fritz at length tells her their affair is ended and asks its return. Meanwhile a relative has told the Baron of his wife's infidelity and he has found the key. He comes to the apartment, verifies the story by trying the key, and challenges Fritz to a duel. Theo is named as second, but resigns from the army

Farmer in the Dell

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy

This is an all-audience picture, alive with appeal to general patronage, with Fred Stone, Jean Parker and the fact that the story from which the picture was adapted ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post as its chief selling angles. Showmen have ample material with which to work, for the material presented is of the homespun, down to earth type that has been proved entertainment value.

Not a pretentious picture by any means, it nevertheless runs along at a rapid pace and tells its tale of a simple, wise Iowa farmer who suddenly finds himself a motion picture star, and of the result of his popularity and newfound wealth have on his wife, daughter and friends.

Director Ben Holmes made the most use of the material presented him by author Stong, who will be remembered for his novel "State Fair" and the Will Rogers picturization. Although some situations appear to border on the farcical at times, Holmes manages to bring things to a plausible and entertaining climax.

Others in the cast include Esther Dale, Moroni Olsen, Frank Albertson, Maxine Jennings, Ray Mayer, Lucille Ball and Rafael Corio.

The picture opens with the entire Boyer family, composed of Fred Stone, Miss Parker as the daughter and Miss Dale as the mother, selling their Iowa farm to move to California. Miss Dale finally settles her family in Hollywood, with aspirations of making a film star out of her daughter, and through a milkman she wangles a studio pass.

Stone, entirely against the idea of any of his family appearing in pictures, nevertheless takes Miss Parker to the studio just to satisfy his wife. Stone, however, makes a few suggestions while visiting a set and much to his surprise is hired for a part. The daughter, much to her own satisfaction, is ignored.

From then on Stone's rise to stardom is quick, the mother of the family finally being let in on the fact that it is her husband instead of her daughter who is the real celebrity in the family. Immediately she "goes Hollywood."

Returning home from location Stone finds he has a new home, palatial and entirely contrary to his liking. He goes into a complete revolt when his wife plans to marry Miss Parker off to a fake nobleman. In a hilarious sequence Stone regains control of his home, curbs the social aspirations of his wife and settles the romantic difficulties of his daughter.

Interwoven are several intimate glimpses behind the scenes of a Hollywood studio, another point that can be strongly relied upon in an exploitation campaign. Showmen might do well to see this before playing it and thus pick out those points best suited for their situations.—BAEHLER, New York.

Produced and distributed by Radio. From the novel of the same name by Phil Stong. Screen play by Sam Mintz and John Grey. Photographed by Nick Musuraca. Edited by George Hively. Directed by Ben Holmes. Associate producer, Robert Sisk. Running time, 67 minutes. P. A. C. Certificate No. 1991. General audience classification.

The Wedding March

(Franco-American Sales)

Italian Drama

Tullio Carminati, whose work in "One Night of Love" made him a box office factor in America, speaks, in Italian, one of the principal roles of this importation. English subtitles interpret the dialogue clearly. The production is competently constructed and especially well photographed. Although a musician's strivings for recognition supply the principal motivation, it is not a musical production and Sig. Carminati doesn't sing, but is cast, in fact, as a wealthy business man. Mario Bonard's direction is admirable throughout.

Carminati's name is the outstanding exploitation factor save in situations where the all-Italian dialogue can be depended upon to bring out adequate support of the box office. Although cast as an ultimately kindly villain, nothing in the character he plays is of a nature to offset whatever popularity he may have acquired through American appearances.

In the story Kiki Palma, as a daughter of an Italian nobleman, falls in love with a poor musician, played by Cesare Batterini, and elopes with him to Paris, where they are married. Their money exhausted, she visits an old school chum, now married to a business man (played by Carminati), who gives her husband employment. When he steals from the company enough money to buy a piano, his employer withholds prosecution and allows him to retain his job, meanwhile arranging for the wife to spend some time at his country place as house guest. Here he seeks to take advantage of her indebtedness to him, makes ardent love to her, to which advances she finds herself responding favorably. She dashes back without notice to host or hostess and, arriving home, prepares poison for herself as a way out. Her husband arrives, followed by her admirer, who, realizing the depth of their attachment, withdraws.

Public Nuisance No. 1

(Cecil - GFD, England)

Musical Farce

Neither musical nor farce but a quite entertaining blend of both, this first feature of Cecil Films, the Herman Fellner unit releasing through General Film Distributors in the United Kingdom, offers American exhibitors a usable piece of light entertainment. Without much in the way of settings it has some good comedy situations, several snappy song numbers, and it is a point that its best material is in the last reels.

Frances Day and Arthur Riscoe, the leads, sing their stuff well, Miss Day looks good and Riscoe is an efficient clown, but the exploitation line seems to be provided by the story, which relates the adventures of the ne'er-do-well nephew of a rich hotel proprietor, sent to Nice as a waiter and, attempting to put a rival hotel out of business, discovering that his uncle has bought it. He clears the original place of its guests in turn only to discover that the uncle has decided not to sell after all.

The ruses by which the hotels are cleared—in the one case by the creation of a whisper that the food is bad, and in the other by the introduction of live fish into the water supply—are put over very well. Paralleling the comedy stuff is the waiter-hero's pursuit of a pretty shop girl for whom, without her knowledge, he has obtained a fortnight's holiday in the hotel.

"Me and My Dog" and "Between You and Me and the Carpet" are lively song numbers. Claude Dampier is a good comedy second to Riscoe and Peter Haddon puts over a caricature of a film producer which ought to be as well appreciated in America as in London.

Previewed at the Plaza, London, it got good laughs once the story was into its stride after a rather dragged opening.

The March of Time

(RKO-Radio)

News Feature

Superior in choice of subject and photographic quality to many or most previous editions, Number 3 of the March of Time for 1936 is engrossingly interesting screen material. The burden of narration is more evenly divided between view and voice than in earlier numbers and the somewhat choppy tenor of highlight shots is less disturbing. As to technique and content it rates high in its series.

The edition opens with informative scenes showing location of and life upon Devil's Island and its adjacent penal colonies, with less emphasis on the rigorous punishment meted out than on the recently developed system of escape and the probable consequence, abandonment of the islands for prison purposes.

The middle and major item is a timely treatment of the Japanese situation with direct reference to the recent assassinations, one of which is re-enacted, and with official quotation of the government attitude toward insurrection in the army. This is the strongest subject matter from the box office point of view.

The third and last item deals with the Gloucester fishing grounds and the fishermen's attitude toward a suggested congressional measure lifting the duty on Canadian importations, showing how opposition was brought to focus and the measure killed.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Pathe Topics No. 4

(RKO-Radio)

Variety Subject

Three widely varied topics are lumped together and clearly if not brilliantly presented. Application of chemistry in agriculture in a manner intended to overcome seasonable shortages of certain products provides an informative beginning. A shot of the Good Story Club in session, with Gene Lockhart telling an old funny story with no sidesplitting result, is a bit of a letdown. The subject finishes mildly with camera shots at the scene of the Winter Olympics, which are not in progress at the time.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Flash Gordon

Thirteen-Episode Serial

As produced by Universal with Larry (Buster) Crabbe in the name role, Alex Raymond's King Features Syndicate cartoon strip possesses all the ingredients that have won the adventure story a wide newspaper following, plus melodramatic power and a seeming plausibility unobtainable on the printed page. To children who have followed the character in daily or weekly struggle with fantastic foes and forces, and to adults similarly addicted, the screen version offers superb materialization of their favorite hero, heroine and vallians.

Staging of the three episodes screened for the press is excellent, the frankly fantastic settings, costumes, mechanical equipment and wild animal life receiving fine, imaginative treatment. Interplanetary transportation and communication, rocket ships, ray guns, all the fanciful mechanisms of the author-artist's conception are offered in matter-of-fact manner, made to seem almost credible. Action is swift and crisis follows crisis in rapid succession. Dialogue is held at minimum. All these factors contribute to unusual screen value.

Jean Rogers has the feminine lead, Charles Middleton is chief among many heavies, and Briscilla Lawson, Frank Shannon, James Pierce and Duke York, Jr., have prominent roles. Henry MacRae produced and Frederick Stephani directed.—Running time of first three episodes, 21, 20 and 21 minutes.

Headlines of 25 Years
(RKO-Radio)
Smash News Review

This newsreel review of a quarter century of world news warrants feature billing in anybody's theatre. Material emanating from thirty-seven countries and covering the headline news of the period faithfully and dramatically is presented in well organized sequences. So intrinsically engrossing are the pictures themselves that an extraordinary job of verbal narration, keeping time, place and circumstance constantly clear, is remembered as such only after the subject has ended. Presented as in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Pathe News, it covers that institution with glory.

Incidents depicted are too numerous and varied for individual mention. Beginning with the end of the late Theodore Roosevelt's term as president, the coverage includes headlined events in many fields of human interest, war, science, invention, conquest and culture. Personalities are shown at high points in their careers. The wide sweep of world affairs is brought to sharp mental focus in a chronologically ordered succession of directly related events presented in swift succession and correlated by adroit editing and crisp narration. It is a masterly production in every sense.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Star Reporter
Average Musical

Functioning as star reporter and seated at a microphone, Ted Husing introduces with tactful background notes four musical acts which entertain in sequence. Edgar Paul's orchestra is first, Betty Jane Cooper and her dancing partners second, Donald Novis sings a number for the third item, and Ina Ray Hutton leads her girl band in a hot finish. While it establishes no new standards of brilliance, the subject may be depended upon to balance effectively a straight dramatic or non-musical feature length production.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Will Power
(RKO-Radio)
Excellent Comedy

This is tops, or near it, for the Edgar Kennedy series. There is story meat enough to keep action at constant pitch and there is point enough to satisfy the most critical. Arranging for a faked telegram to notify him of a break in the market leaving him destitute, the star feigns a heart attack and, while evidently convalescing, concentrates mentally on the thought that his brother-in-law will get a job, the objective of the hoax. At the finish he learns that, with aid of his wife and mother-in-law, the family idler has done so, in fact has got Kennedy's job, after which, on learning the facts his wife consoles him with the thought that his now employed brother-in-law may do something for him. Dot Farley, Florence Lake and Jack Rice enact the familiar family roles admirably. Lee Marcus is producer. Arthur Ripley directed from a screen play by himself and John Grey.—Running time, 15½ minutes.

Program Filler

Percy N. Mills, football coach, Helen Richey, photographer, and Grisha Goluboff boy violinist, are shown at their vocations and avocations. Alois Havrilla, radio announcer, extolls their supremacies and has his own extolled, in turn, by Alwyn Bach, for whom he performs a like service. It seems both boys have won medals for diction. The others appear to be tops in their respective fields also. Somehow, though, the subject doesn't shake itself free at any point from a curiously unstimulating monotony of adequacy. It may be counted on to brighten a dull program and not to dull a brilliant one.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Going Places, No. 18
(Universal)
Informative Novelty

"Cartoonland Mysteries" traces each step in the production of a cartoon comedy, from scenario to screened result, shown in detail and explained by Lowell Thomas. Oswald Rabbit in "The Softball Game" is the subject shown in production. Composition begins with the writing of the script, moves forward through operations of the staff of twelve animators and thirty painters, the writing of the musical score, and combining of sound track with photographic record, skipping the answer to no question likely to be asked by inquisitive followers of this or any other cartoon character. If it be conceded that public revelation of mechanical processes employed in this field of production is proper screen material, the subject is a valuable item of program content.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

Going Places, No. 19
(Universal)
Fair Travelogue

Gold fields of New Guinea, attainable only by plane flight over mountain barrier and barbarous jungle, are visited by the cameraman and described by Lowell Thomas. "Guinea Gold" is the title of the subject. According to Mr. Thomas, natives of the area practice cannibalism on a wholesale scale and development of the area became practicable only after aviation was standardized as a means of transporting man and machinery into the interior and gold bullion out. The narrator's story is somewhat more dramatic than the picture itself, possibly because of camera difficulties. In any case, the subject is less stimulating than is par for the "Going Places" series.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Here Comes the Zoo
English Novelty

Claude Gardner, introduced as a popular British commentator, announces alphabetically the sundry denizens of the London Zoo. Mr. Gardner's type of humor is sufficiently off the beaten track to add a measure of zest to otherwise commonplace shots of animals from alligator to zebra in the better theatres, although there may be ground for questioning its effectiveness in the less educated sectors where English humor is not preferred to Eddie Cantor's. The subject is especially suited for inclusion in a program built around a carriage trade feature.—Running time, 10 minutes.

A Wed-Time Story
(RKO-Radio)
Dialect Comedy

With his German dialect functioning at peak form, Lew Fields extracts maximum comedy yield from an Al Boasberg script hinged upon a legal misunderstanding and a newspaper contest. Bodil Rosing and Frank Lyman are in principal support. Lee Marcus produced it. Leslie Goodwin directed. Winning $5,000 in a competition by writing how to be happy though married, Herman Schmidt (Lew Fields) is told by his lawyer son that his wedding a quarter century before was not legal because he had not been resident in the community for a sufficient period. Much confusion results before it is made clear that the statute quoted was not in effect at that time. The comedy is above average in story and performance.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Brotherly Love
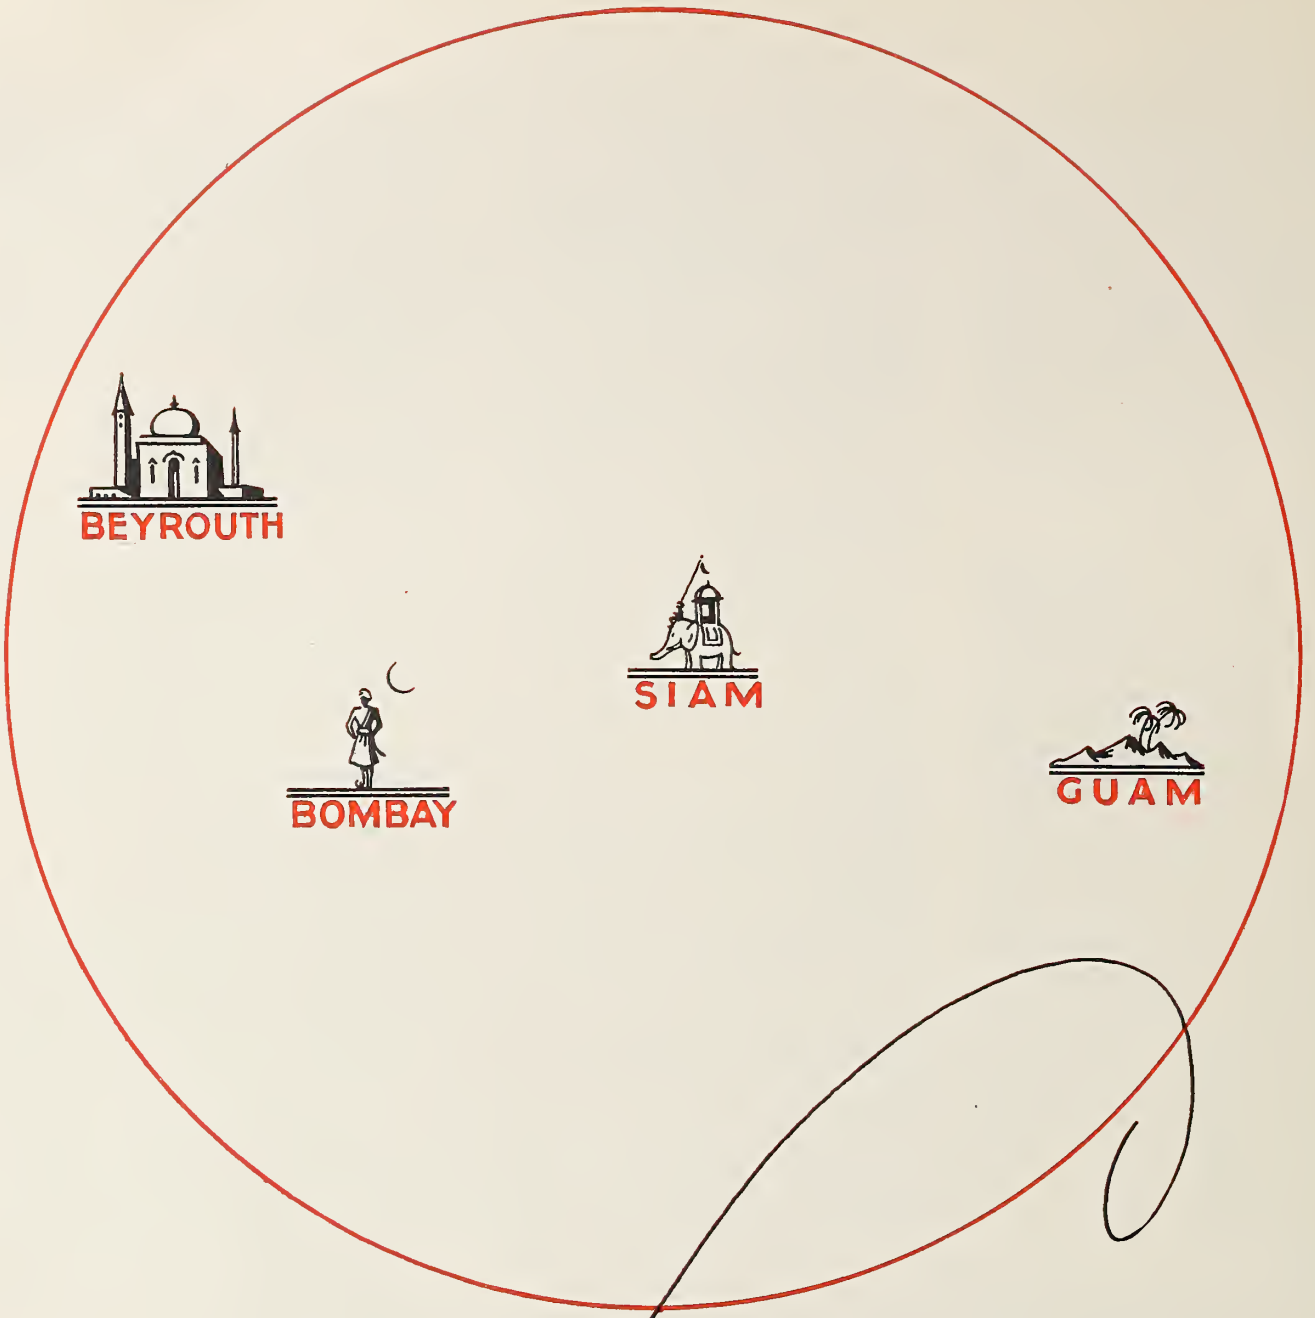
Excellent Cartoon



Popeye has stepped well above average in this cartoon representing him as a successful teacher of brotherly love by precept, by advice and, finally, by force of brawn and spinach. Olive Oyl is leader of a women's organization preaching the principle and Popeye enforces its practice by the boys in the gas house district. The narrative is direct and the action admirably paced. It's one of the best of the series.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Ben Harris 25 Years In Exchange Field

Mr. Harris had been identified with General Films and when Ben Amsterdam and "Pop" Korson acquired Masterpiece from Sol Lesser eighteen years ago he had been with that company three months. He has been with it ever since.

We would like to get this serial in the near future and we would be pleased to hear from you concerning the booking of this production.

At present we are obtaining our serials or chapter plays from the Universal Film Exchange, and have recently played "Pirate Treasure," "Gordon of Ghost City" and are now showing "Tailspin Tommy." In the same advertisement you also mentioned "CUSTER'S LAST RIDE," a 10-reel feature. Is this a sequel, a preliminary feature showing the highlights of the serial, or is it a different picture altogether?

The pictures will be out about four months, as there is only one commercial freight ship that comes to Guam four times a year.

Awaiting your reply in this matter, we are,

MPTOA REELECTS KUYKENDALL; SEEKS MORE CANCELING LEEWAY

Entire Executive Personnel Returned to Office at Miami Board Session; President Attacks "Disgruntled Minority"

The national board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, assembled in annual session at Miami's Hotel Biltmore, last Thursday and Friday, returned the entire executive personnel to office and then undertook a study of the many problems facing exhibitors. Most important developments emanating from behind the locked doors of the board were a determination to campaign further for expansion of the exhibitor's cancellation privilege beyond the present 10 per cent, and an attack upon the "disgruntled small minority" of theatre owners for their activities in sponsoring legislation adverse to exhibitors.

The reelected officers:

Ed L. Kuykendall, president.
M. A. Lightman, Memphis, vice-president.
Col. W. S. Butterfield, Michigan, vice-president.
Julian Brylawski, Washington, vice-president.
Ben Berinstein, Los Angeles, vice-president.
M. E. Comerford, Scranton, vice-president.
Ed Levy, New Haven, general counsel.
Morris Loewenstein, Oklahoma City, secretary.
Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis, board chairman.

A greater cancellation privilege next season was urged by the MPTOA directors and gained some support in distributor quarters in New York. As a result, the likelihood of an increase being made by either some or all large distributors was viewed unofficially as highly probable.

20% Cancellation Asked

The organization has taken the lead the last few years in demanding a 20 per cent cancellation privilege and strongly reiterated its stand in Miami.

Striking out at "a disgruntled small minority" of exhibitors whom he blames for attempts to pass destructive legislation, President Kuykendall opened the two-day session.

"Practically all of the irritating legislation we must fight comes from this very small group of operators, most of whom are unscrupulous and without ethics," he said. He was speaking particularly of the block booking bills now before Congress.

"The association is on record against present booking methods," he added, "but we believe the objectionable features of wholesale buying can be eliminated without prohibiting it as a whole."

The abolition of block booking would greatly increase picture costs, Mr. Kuykendall declared, pointing out that his organization is seeking, for this reason, the right to reject 20 per cent of films in block booking. "The association is quite agreeable to hearing the complaints of minorities, but the whole industry is being impeded by Bolsheviks who never will be pleased," he said. "It is very damaging and should not be tolerated any longer. Professional reformers are ever ready to hear these complaints and work them for their own ends."

Following the president's address the group reelected the entire personnel of officers and then proceeded with an informal discussion of ways to combat the block booking measures and support the Duffy Copyright Bill, now pending in Congress.

At the closing day's forenoon session it was declared that although exhibitors had kept faith with distributors, the distributors had failed in their obligations toward the theatre men as far as sales policies on the whole were concerned. Continuation of present distribution tactics on unfair policies will result in outside regulation of an industry which should be capable of regulating itself, the theatre men said.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and its music assessments and various other tax matters also were discussed at the morning session. A central bureau was proposed, to be established at the Broadway headquarters of the organization, for the dissemination of tax information and to assist state units in fighting adverse legislation.

The directors favored state restrictions on ASCAP, similar to the law in the state of Washington.

Other Problems Discussed

The afternoon session consisted of informal conferences and action on exhibitor problems, namely: Arbitration of trade disputes to avoid expensive and unnecessary litigation; Overbuying to deprive competition of product and thereby hindering competition; Unreasonable and unwarranted clearance; Unfair and unrestricted cut-rate competition between theatres, including (a) low adult admissions, (b) two or three features for one admission, (c) lotteries, prizes, giveaways and pseudo contests, (d) premiums, two-for-ones, merchants' tickets; An unconditional 20 per cent rejection privilege of two pictures out of every 10 in all contracts without payment therefor; Unfair non-theatrical showings of professional entertainment pictures; Free shows sponsored by commercial advertisers; Forcing unwanted shorts with features; The score charge "racket"; Arbitrary designation of playdates regardless of suitability; A simplified, understandable and fair standard exhibition contract, and arbitrary reallocation of prices after a picture has been booked and played.

The board also passed a resolution regretting the absence of M. E. Comerford from the meeting and hoping for his rapid recovery.

Urge Cut in Film For South America

The American distribution companies' practice of releasing their entire output indiscriminately in South American countries is seen by Benito del Villar, managing director of Paramount Films, S. A., who also is a leading Chilean exhibitor, as inviting the competition of other foreign producers in that market.

Speaking primarily of his own territory, Chile, but holding it to be characteristic of all South American countries, Mr. del Villar, who is in New York for a month's visit, said that foreign product, especially German, British and French, has been receiving increasing playing time in South American theatres during the past two years. He attributes this to the European producer-distributors' care in selecting perhaps 20 per cent of a production schedule as suited for the South American market.

By contrast, he said, the American distributor unloads everything he has on hand without regard for its suitability to the market. The result is, Mr. del Villar said, that South American theatres no longer are an exclusively Hollywood market, but that they could be made so again by proper regard in the selection of production material.

South Americans, he said, demand pictures with good music, a minimum of dialogue or sub-titles, plenty of action and international story values. If pictures sent to South America by Hollywood were made only from this recipe the American producer would have no competition there, Mr. del Villar said. It is his opinion that superimposed titles in any picture for South American release should not number more than 200. He observed, however, that Hollywood frequently sends them pictures with as many as 1,800 sub-titles.

Mr. del Villar operates the 1,700-seat Real in Santiago, said to be one of the most modern theatres in South America, and recently opened the newly built Santiago, a 2,000-seater, in the same city. He also has in construction at Valparaiso a new theatre to replace his Real there.

Using 16mm Film to Make Screen Tests

Urging the use of 16-millimeter film in the making of tests, Edward Small, vice-president of Reliance, said he had found that a distinct economy couples with a wider range of operation to material advantage.

"The average sound test now costs $1,000," Mr. Small said. "A silent test runs in the neighborhood of $450. The professional cameraman and a great number of amateurs, using a 16-millimeter camera and simple lighting equipment, can make an excellent silent test for only $3.50."

AYLESWORTH DOUBTS OBSTACLE OF TELEVISION TO BOX OFFICE

Denies Television Was Underlying Factor in Disney Deal; Emphasizes Sarnoff Prediction of Restriction to Home Use

by AL FINESTONE

The motion picture industry has nothing to fear from television as a competitive factor because those who are attending its commercial birth do not now foresee any wide development outside the home, said Merlin H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board of RKO Radio Pictures and vice-chairman of National Broadcasting Company, this week.

Pointing out that David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America and chairman of its radio subsidiary, recently had made clear that television is on its way but for some time to come will remain in the hands of the experimental engineers, Mr. Aylesworth confined his observations to developments impinging on the motion picture.

Denies It's Factor in Disney Deal

The radio-film executive denied reports from Hollywood that a television hookup was an underlying reason for the deal he signed last week with Walt Disney for distribution through RKO of the cartoon producer's output.

"Disney, as others, is looking forward to future television and is wondering what is going to happen," Mr. Aylesworth explained. "That is the extent of his interest right now. Being primarily an artist, he is considering the possibilities of a new medium for his art. He is not alone among film producers who have shown interest. Irving Thalberg likes to talk about television for hours."

Report has it, however, that Mr. Disney is interested from a commercial standpoint and preferred an association with RKO because of its television sponsorship. It was he who approached RKO on the deal while Twentieth Century - Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer also were seeking to obtain his product, says Hollywood.

Following consummation of the contract with Mr. Aylesworth, Mr. Disney issued a statement in Hollywood which said: "In looking to the future, and that includes television, we believe our association with RKO offers greater opportunities for the broader and more expansive fields of development."

Mr. Disney is due soon in New York to view a television demonstration at the RCA studios.

Mr. Aylesworth indicated that short subject producers already are making plans for television films, and some even are analyzing the possibilities of commercial sponsorship on a basis that radio programs have now.

"Short subjects will be the limit of films in visual broadcasting, and animated color cartoons will be particularly adaptable because of their appeal to the family," Mr. Aylesworth declared. "I can't see that long films will be used, except some old pictures during the period of experimentation."

The cost of televising long features for television is generally considered prohibitive in view of limited exhibition possibilities.

"I don't believe that exhibitors need have any fears that television will cause a revolution in theatre business," Mr. Aylesworth went on. "It is planned for the home, and I think it will be strictly limited to the home. And except for its presentation in theatres as a novelty, there will be no displacement of present projection.

"Nor can I see that television will affect radio broadcasting adversely. The new development will be coordinated with radio and talking pictures, even as radio has been coordinated with motion pictures to the advantage of both."

He pointed out that the new NBC studio in Hollywood has been cooperating with the motion picture industry, adding that "it has helped both pictures and broadcasting and has been of immeasurable aid to theatres and the studios in exploitation."

"The speculative fears among radio and film men is akin to the apprehension felt by the industry when sound was on the way," Mr. Aylesworth continued. "They wondered what would happen. The same feeling is apparent now among producers with respect to color. If color is coming, let it come. The future will take care of itself."

Newspapers were afraid of radio and fought it for years as a competitive force, he said, "but now all papers print radio programs, the United Press sells its news to radio stations and 150 stations are newspaper-owned."

Observing that theatre men still regard radio as competition, "though erroneously," Mr. Aylesworth said it was true there were some fine programs that kept people at their firesides, but that theatre attendance has not been affected as a result.

"They still go to picture shows, on an average of twice a week, and giving the phantom voices of the air a visual image will not alter the situation much," he predicted.

He added that in a year there will be receiving sets in the homes.

Field Tests in Month or Two

Mr. Sarnoff, as president of RCA, informed stockholders that, proceeding on schedule, RCA's first field tests of television will begin in a month or two.

Mr. Sarnoff emphasized that this experimental test does not mean a regular television service is at hand, but that it represents an essential pioneering stage to estimate and define its possibilities under actual working conditions. For the first time it was disclosed officially that the television transmitter will be on the Empire State Building, in New York.

"It is evident that the present system of sound broadcasting remains the fundamental service of radio communication to the home. While television promises to supplement the present service of broadcasting by adding sight to sound, it will not supplant nor diminish the importance and usefulness of broadcasting by sound."

Word came from Washington that the Radio Corporation is constructing facilities for facsimile, or "still-picture" transmission from New York to Philadelphia by radio, and that RCA might next extend the facilities between New York and Baltimore and Washington.

And from Berlin came word that the Nazi Government has taken under consideration the erection of a television network connecting Germany's large cities, following the success of experiments which linked Berlin and the fair at Leipzig two weeks ago. The Berlin-Leipzig hookup is to be made permanent on April 1st.

Aylesworth on The Disney Deal

While RKO probably will substitute the Disney color cartoons for the Van Beuren "Rainbow Parade" series, other Van Beuren product most likely will be retained, M. H. Aylesworth, RKO board chairman, indicated this week.

The three-year distribution contract signed with Walt Disney Productions in Hollywood last week calls for delivery of from 18 to 28 animated cartoons and one animated feature a year, Mr. Aylesworth said. As is customary with Disney, there will be no definite release schedule.

Meanwhile, the Van Beuren product, including the 13 color cartoons and some 33 other short subjects, is being sold to exhibitors for 1936-37, Mr. Aylesworth said. Disney still has 15 cartoons to deliver to United Artists on its expiring contract, and it will be in January, 1937, before the "Mickey Mouse" and "Silly Symphony" series will be available to RKO accounts, he explained.

While the distribution contract with Van Beuren Corporation expires in August, there have been no discussions as to the future, but RKO's 50 per cent interest in Van Beuren in no way would be affected, Mr. Aylesworth said.

He expressed gratification over acquisition of the Disney product. "Snow White," the first feature-length cartoon from Disney, is just getting started after a year of preparation. A release date is unpredictable, he said. It will be "a sensation and revolutionary as an art form," he added.

Mr. Aylesworth said that RKO had not approached Disney but that negotiations started a month ago when overtures were made by Roy O. Disney, general manager of the company.

While "looking to the future," Walt Disney Productions made no arrangements on television in the RKO releasing contract, Roy Disney said in Hollywood.

"We are interested only in having our product shown in theatres," he said. "Any plans for television must necessarily be in the future, and we will consider the matter when and if it arises. Dispute on that subject was one of the reasons that we broke with United Artists. Meanwhile we are concerned entirely with theatre exhibition."

Predicts Stereoscopic Pictures Within Year

Prediction that sterescopic photography will come into use for motion pictures within a year has been made by Professor Clarence Kennedy of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., who has made more than 500 three-dimensional still photographs for college use, employing a polarizing apparatus invented by Edwin H. Land of Boston.

CHANCE GAMES ACTION UP IN EIGHT STATES

Missouri Courts Cluttered with Infringement; Change Likely in Massachusetts Lottery Law

Out of the developments of the week on the status of the socalled chance games in the courts and at the theatres came these highlights:

In Connecticut, action against chance games was considered at a meeting of New Haven city officials;

Kansas, free of the practice until now, was about to take up Bank Night;

Missouri's courts were further cluttered with infringement suits instituted by the copyright owners of Bank Night;

Massachusetts legislators were considering an amendment to state lottery laws which would make Bank Night legal;

New Hampshire municipalities acted independently against chance games;

Ohio authorities temporarily halted "wholesale arrests";

In Wisconsin, a form of chance game was sustained as "non-gambling".

Of even greater significance, however, was Bank Night's second court victory in New York, where the city lost a lottery complaint. Regardless, Loew's ordered discontinuance of chance games in its theatres in the city.

Harry Harris and Bank Night interests won a victory, the second in the last four months, when Judges Walling, Rayfield and Nolan in special sessions, Manhattan, this week dismissed a lottery complaint filed by Assistant District Attorney Dodge against the Gotham theatre.

The first complaint was against the Washington theatre and was thrown out last November by three other judges sitting in the same court. The Gotham action was instituted last December in magistrate's court, which referred it to special sessions.

City Requests Discontinuance

Beginning this week, all Loew theatres in the Bronx discontinued Screeno and Bank Night. About a dozen houses were affected. The move, according to Loew executives, was made at the request of city authorities, who asked the circuit to cooperate until several cases pending in special sessions court, Bronx division, are completed, determining the legality of the giveaways.

Complaints by Assistant District Attorney Foley against the Grand and Elsmere are scheduled for hearing in the courts on March 17, and on April 6 a similar action against the Paradise will be heard before three judges in the same borough.

Theatres dropping Screeno are the Boston Road, Victory, Paradise, Grand, Elsmere, Spooner and Burnside. Eliminating Bank night are the Boulevard, National and Fairmount.

Reinstatement of the games is contingent on the decisions, a Loew official said.

Consolidated Amusements recently did away with various types of games in all its Bronx theatres and this circuit's attitude is the same as Loew's.

In New Haven, complaints received from social organizations in the city have prompted City Attorney M. Edward Klebanoff to call a conference for next week with Chief of Police Phillip T. Smith on chance games now in operation at theatres and clubrooms. The legality and various systems under the state lottery law will be considered.

Wichita, Kansas, free of giveaway difficulties all through the depression, will join the procession within the next few weeks when Fox Midwest introduces Bank Night at the Miller, Palace and Orpheum, first-runs there. The circuit also is planning to add the game in several other houses it controls.

Meanwhile, Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., controller of Bank Night, has filed suit in Kansas City against Dusty Rhodes' Gillham and Rube Finklestein's Belmont. The corporation is seeking to recover $300 from each of the exhibitors, who allegedly refused to pay rentals on the promotion because the corporation allowed Fox Midwest to use a pool Bank Night plan in its 13 Kansas City houses.

Boston Hearing Underway

In Boston, this week, the hearing before the legal affairs committee on the bill to amend the Massachusetts lottery law got under way with Attorney George S. Ryan speaking in favor of the change, which would legalize Bank Night.

In Franklin, N. H., Bank Night was resumed in the Franklin theatre following the recent opinion handed down by the New Hampshire supreme court but again was stopped by City Marshal Albert H. Manuel.

Action against Bank Night in Cleveland has been temporarily halted by the illness both of Police Prosecutor Perry A. Frey and of William E. Minshall, counsel for Affiliated Enterprises.

Poster Association To Meet in Chicago

The National Poster Service Association, Inc., will hold its annual convention in Chicago late in April, it was decided at a meeting of the board of directors last week. Definite date and hotel will be named later. Attending the meeting of the board were Louis Weinzimmer, Progressive Poster Service; E. Behrens, Behrens Supply; Harry Schultz, Exhibitors Poster Service of New York; Simon Libros, National-Kline Poster, Philadelphia, president of the organization, and George Aarons, also of Philadelphia.

Vergesslich Joins Warner

Joseph Vergesslich has rejoined the Warner sales force in Atlanta following a two-year absense from the company after acting as manager of the New York branch. Mr. Vergesslich resigned that post after Roy H. Haines was appointed sales head of the metropolitan area.

Newspaper Best For Theatre Ads, Declares Manager

The newspapers are the film theatres' best advertising medium, E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre at Chapel Hill, N. C., said in an address before University of North Carolina journalism students this week.

"The theatres have always cooperated 100 per cent with the newspapers and will continue to do so," Mr. Smith said.

In commenting on the size of the film industry, Mr. Smith told the students that theatres alone employ 234,000 people while 36,000 are employed regularly in the production and distribution of pictures.

In discussing censorship of pictures, Mr. Smith told the gathering that no group of persons collectively, nor any person individually, should be allowed to select pictures for any community. "Taste does not pass from the community to the individual but from the individual to the community," he concluded.

39 Houses Planned In South America

Approximately 39 theatres are planned for construction during the present year in three South American countries, according to Walter Gould, United Artists foreign department executive, who is in New York from South America. He estimated that seven houses are scheduled for Chile, 20 for Brazil and 12 for Argentine.

In Buenos Aires, a 2,200-seater is planned by the Lococo interests, Mr. Gould said. Production plans in Argentine, he said, made for the current season indicate an increased output. Mr. Gould has been in South America since July.

New Version of Sentinels' Picture Is Being Shown

A revised version of "The Amateur Fire Brigade," anti-New Deal film sponsored by the Sentinels of the Republic, is being shown in cities where opposition has arisen to the original film, which lampooned President Roosevelt. In its present form, the picture confines its satire to the New Deal.

Alexander Lincoln, Boston attorney who heads the Sentinels, has been asked to resign from the Massachusetts board of tax appeals by Governor James M. Curley.

Showman's Jubilee Plans Are Advanced

Plans have been launched in Philadelphia for a second annual Showman's Variety Jubilee and Miss America contest to be held at Atlantic City, N. J., during Labor Day Week. Ed Corcoran has been named general manager, with Lenore Slaughter as parade director. The committee will include Earl Sweigart, James Clark and one more to be selected from the Philadelphia tent. Mayor White and three other Atlantic City men will also be on the committee.

INDICATED CHANGE IN BOARD STAND ON QUOTA ACT MAY AID AMERICANS

President of Board of Trade Tells Commons That Inquiry Into Working of Act Is Being Considered

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Asked in the House of Commons this week whether he intended soon to set up a committee to inquire into the working of the Cinematograph Films Act, 1927, Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, replied that the matter was "under consideration."

This reply, short as it was, seems to indicate a change of attitude in the official attitude towards Flms Act revision which may be of the greatest importance to American companies operating in the United Kingdom.

Heretofore the Board of Trade's official view has been that, before considering legislation amending the Act, it required all sections of the industry to establish agreement. Non-controversial legislation, in the form of an amending Act, might then, it was suggested, be introduced.

The present position is that the Board's own Advisory Committee under the Act has made a report, of unknown content; that the Film Producers' Group of the Federation of British Industries is preparing a report of its own and that the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has taken steps to collate the opinions of theatre men.

Divergence of Ideas

At the outset, the ideas of the Film Group and those of the CEA showed a divergence suggesting that the "agreed trade policy" requested by the Board of Trade was very unlikely to be arrived at. British production interests for the most part want the quota rules stiffened; their pet nostrum is the "minimum cost clause," making it obligatory to spend, say, $50,000 on each British quota film.

Exhibitors are chiefly anxious for a reduction in the existing quota of 20 per cent or for a revival of the provision whereby the distributors' quota was greater than the exhibitors', instead of the same. It does not follow either that the Film Group officially has adopted the policy of its own extremists or that the CEA might not be persuaded to support the minimum cost clause if it were coupled with a reduction, even temporary, in the exhibition quota. The important thing, at the moment, is that the trade has not reached its agreed policy.

If the Board of Trade committee is appointed, it will be a very big victory for those who think that the Act, both as it exists and as it would be if amended by a minimum cost clause, is open to such criticism, in principle and detail, as to make a judicial inquiry the only really effective preliminary to further legislation.

Would Study All Interests

If this inquiry in fact takes place it may be assumed that it will inquire into all the interests affected by the Act. Although producers and exhibitors are both frequently heard from, the distributors, who really bear the heaviest burdens imposed by the Act, have been very reticent; possibly they thought the odds against them, but more probably it seemed to them dangerous to put themselves in what might seem an attitude of hostility to British production.

These companies undoubtedly would prepare a case for a Government committee, and it would be a strong case. Moreover, it would have the support of some important British producers, who have not concealed their opinion that the quota is no longer necessary for the serious British companies but simply keeps in being units which would not survive competitive conditions.

One suggestion, favored by several major Americans here, is that in place of a footage quota there should be a cash quota; the importer would have to spend as much on British films as at present, but he would be free to invest the amount in one, two, or three good films instead of 10 to 15 cheap ones. If this proposal is officially put forward it will certainly be supported by important British interests and probably by exhibitors.

KRS May Be 100 Per Cent

There may be an unexpected result of the action, now abandoned, by the Gaumont-British Corporation against the Kinematograph Renters' Society and its individual members.

Gaumont-British barred from booking for the H&G theatres on the grounds that its interest was such as to constitute a "booking circuit," was suing on the grounds of conspiracy and restraint. In withdrawing the action, it has left the curious trade situation that the H&G theatres, owned by Gaumont-British Super Cinemas, can be booked, according to the KRS ruling, only through H&G Kinemas, Ltd., a company which is no longer in existence.

Postponement of any statement from the KRS since the Gaumont-British action was abandoned suggested that the Society was leaving it to GB to get out of this difficulty in the best way it could; the most obvious course being the dissolution of GB Super Cinemas, Ltd. Actually, behind the scenes, things may be happening which, instead of accentuating the differences between GB and the KRS, will effectively heal them.

A leading factor in the situation is the attitude of Twentieth Century - Fox, which withdrew from KRS in disapproval of its policy towards G-B. The resignation has not yet become effective and, there being no other point of difference, it may well be withdrawn if G-B compose their differences with the KRS. The Society undoubtedly is anxious to retain Twentieth Century - Fox in membership and it is now quite likely that a formula will be arrived at which, apart from serving this end, will bring G-B itself back to the fold.

If Gaumont-British does rejoin the KRS, that already very powerful body will represent 100 per cent of distributors in the U. K. It would be a curious result of a dispute which, if the Fox action had been followed by even one or two other large concerns, would inevitably have seen the Society lose its present effective control of the trade.

Rock Has Big Studio Plan

Another big Elstree studio plan has been announced by Rock Studios, Ltd., chairman of which is J. H. Iles, financier of big entertainment enterprises at the seaside resort of Margate. Joe Rock is producer and managing director.

It is planned to extend the present Rock studios into a five-stage plant at a cost stated to be $2,500,000. Thirty acres adjoining the present buildings will be taken in. Plans are for two big stages of 150 x 110 feet and 110 x 100 feet and three smaller ones, each 110 x 80 feet. They will be connected by sliding walls, the removal of which will give a floor of 270 x 110 feet.

Plans have been prepared by Robert Atkinson, architect of the ATP studios at Ealing, which have been very highly praised by American visitors. Dormitories with 60 beds for night staff, Turkish baths, tennis courts and a gymnasium are amenities scheduled. Western Electric sound system will be used. Two stages are expected to be completed in July.

Return of Gaumont - British to Renters' Society Would Give KRS 100 Per Cent Representation of Distributors

January's Admission Tax $300,000 Under December

Admission tax collections in January declined nearly $300,000 from the December level, but were approximately $130,000 above the receipts in the corresponding month last year, the Internal Bureau of Revenue in Washington has revealed.

January collections totaled $1,459,694, against $1,755,059 in December and $1,328,884 in January, 1934. Analysis of the figures shows that collections from admissions sold during 1935 totaled $16,039,720, an increase of $101,834 over the 1934 total of $15,937,886. This would indicate that business during 1935 was approximately at the same level as in 1934, as far as houses charging more than 40 cents are concerned, the $100,000 increase reflecting an increase of only $1,000,000 in ticket sales.

SOVIET ADOPTING U. S. IDEAS FOR EXPANSION

Russian Engineer Sails Favoring the American Theatre Design and Projection Methods Used

American technology and materials will play a large part in completion of the Soviet Union's "plan" for its motion picture industry, which by the end of 1937 calls for 40,000 additional projection installations and completion of the first section of the $61,000,000 "Russian Hollywood," with a commensurate increase in production.

A second technical commission of five Soviet film engineers arrived in New York Tuesday to make further surveys of equipment manufactured here with a view to recommending purchases for the studio. They will remain three months. Two other engineers have been here several weeks on a study of laboratory equipment and methods, and a third, Gregor Irsky, has returned to Moscow after a survey of theatres and reproducing equipment.

On the basis of Mr. Irsky's study it was indicated he would recommend that American theatre design and projection methods be adopted in the Soviet Union, which plans a total of 70,000 installations by the end of 1937 in a program aimed to bring sound films to the remotest parts of the far-flung country.

He was greatly impressed with Radio City Music Hall, and said he would recommend it as a model for the largest theatre in Russia to be built this year in Moscow, with 4,000 seats. It will have stage shows as well as films.

The theatre will be the first in the Soviet Union equipped with air conditioning, specifications have been forwarded from American manufacturers. Vladimir I. Verlinsky, president of Amkino Corporation in New York, the liaison organization here for the Soviet film industry, said that while the temperature is moderate in Moscow, a cooling system nevertheless would add to comfort.

A 1,500-seat house recently opened in the Russian capital provided for the first time a vaudeville stage in a film theatre. Operation is in the concert hall manner and only first class entertainment, such as ballets, is presented, said Mr. Verlinsky.

The huge expenditures entailed in the expansion will make possible increased purchases of film materials in the United States, he said. The surveys have convinced the Russian engineers that America is superior in motion picture technique, and unless price is a factor, purchases heretofore made from French and other European companies will henceforth be placed in the United States, Mr. Verlinsky said.

40 Sound Stages

He has received word from Moscow that the first section of the new film city, to be constructed on the shores of the Black Sea in southern Russia, will be equipped with 40 sound stages capable of turning out 200 feature films a year. There will be a permanent staff of 110 directors, each making two features yearly, 500 players under contract, 72 chief cameramen, 56 montage directors, 96 sound cameramen, 110 assistant directors and 40 set designers. Extensive color plans call for an initial equipment of 10 color cameras.

Several Hollywood laboratory technicians and equipment designers are in Russia and others are to be employed, including a camera technician and a set designer, under two-year contracts which provide transportation expenses and "a good salary," Mr. Verlinsky said.

Plans for the second section of the film city are being held in abeyance, but when completed it will be capable of handling an increase of production to 1,000 features a year. Some 300 features and 120 shorts comprised the 1935 output of the Soviet's 19 studios.

Besides thousands of theatres to be built under the "plan," there will be a widespread network of 16mm. installations in villages and collectives. The Russian industry believes that in the small cities, towns, villages and rural sections, where auditoriums have a 600 maximum capacity, 16mm. projection is more practicable than 35mm., and more economical, too, in saving raw stock, electric current and so on. The smaller dimensions also will solve many construction problems.

There are, all told, 30,000 theatres or projection installations now, and 10,000 installations, all sound, are to be made this year, he said. The objective is 70,000 installations by the first of 1938, not necessarily theatres, but "screens."

Buying Raw Stock

Amkino, which acts as the purchasing agent here for the Soviet industry, has purchased $30,000 worth of raw stock from the DuPont and Eastman Kodak companies, and additional orders are to follow. Progressive purchases of equipment are at the rate of about $10,000 a month, from Bell and Howell and other companies.

Manufacturing equipment also will be imported, in line with the Soviet's policy of stimulating its own industrial organization, and the long-range plan looks to the manufacture of all film equipment and supplies on the ground.

Heretofore the Russian industry has spent $200,000 annually on raw stock in France and Belgium. The Russian engineers have tested the American product at DuPont and Eastman laboratories under actual working conditions, and while they determined it was the "best," final approval is up to Moscow, said Mr. Verlinsky.

Russia uses 300,000 feet of raw stock annually—negative, lavender and positive. Some of it is made there, but it has been found inferior to that obtainable in countries which have developed their product over many years. However, Russia is planning to build up this infant industry with the assistance of American engineers, and some day hopes to be self-contained in this respect, according to the Amkino executive.

With the problem of stepping up production to meet the demands of the theatre construction program, the Russian industry will pay no attention to export possibilities, although Mr. Verlinsky believed Russian films could find a greater market here. He said a group of Hollywood directors, players and writers submitted a plan for production of English language pictures in Russia, but the suggestion met with no response because Moscow's first concern is the need of the domestic market.

CHESTER BAHN DEFENDS SINCLAIR NOVEL BAN

Chester B. Bahn, motion picture critic of the Syracuse Herald, commenting this week on the recent banning of the Sinclair Lewis novel, "It Can't Happen Here," as unsuitable film material, said in part:

"Reverse the situation. Suppose, for example, that a German, a French, a Russian or an Italian studio seized upon the Harding administration as cinematic material, and developed through it the theme that the republican form of government was as corrupt and ugly a thing as we claim Facism, Communism and Naziism to be. Would we permit that picture to be shown in the United States?

"We would not."

Protest to Mayer On Lewis Book Ban

A statement of policy on the extent to which the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation is "affected by foreign political questions and the attitude of foreign governments" was sought this week from Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, by the American Civil Liberties Union, and its affiliate, the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, in a letter following the banning of "It Can't Happen Here," the Sinclair Lewis novel. Signing the letter for the Union were Harry F. Ward, chairman, Roger N. Baldwin, director, and Arthur Garfield Hays, general counsel. Hatcher Hughes, chairman, signed for the National Council.

"It is clear," the communication said, "that if films are to fit requirements of European dictatorships, pictures offensive to democracy, freedom, and particularly the cause of labor, will have free rein. Such pictures are now produced. If your editorial policy is without political bias, the opposing views deserve equal treatment, regardless of European attitudes."

At the same time the Union also sent a letter, signed by Mr. Hays, to Secretary of State Cordell Hull "to inquire as to the policy of the State Department where protests are received from representatives of foreign governments regarding films in the United States."

The Union asked whether, as had been reported, there had been any protests by Germany and Italy on the proposed filming of the novel. "Needless to say," said the Union, "we are interested in the question wholly from the point of view of free expression."

Columbia Holds Selman

Columbia Pictures this week placed David Selman, director, under a long-term contract. Mr. Selman has been handling action dramas for the company, "The Revenge Rider," "Mysterious Avenger" and "Dangerous Intrigue" being among his latest efforts. Joseph Anthony, writer, was also re-signed by the company.

Columbia

ESCAPE FROM DEVIL'S ISLAND: Victor Jory—A suitable action show for your Friday-Saturday change. Not a show that will bring many comments either way, but you don't have to be afraid of it.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

FEATHER IN HER HAT, A: Pauline Lord—A hackneyed plot, slow action, haphazard direction and an English accent. Drew very few customers and pleased none. Played February 18.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont., Rural patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett—A so-so western that could have been made more entertaining by a better production. Story and star okay. Played February 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett—Good western. Charles Starrett just fits into this role and as a western star he is made. Played February 19-20.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

GIRL FRIEND, THE: Ann Sothern, Jack Haley—Pleasant but lightweight entertainment that is more at home on a double bill. Satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard—Another good western from Columbia that pleased. Maynard has a loyal following among our patrons and he rarely disappoints.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE WAY TICKET: Lloyd Nolan, Peggy Conklin, Walter Connolly—Columbia has a newcomer of strong possibilities in Peggy Conklin who will be much more effective when she abandons her mannerisms patterned after Miriam Hopkins. This picture entertained a good crowd.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE WAY TICKET: Lloyd Nolan, Peggy Conklin—A fine little program picture. Not a big special by any means but a picture you're not ashamed to have run.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Michael Bartlett—Played this on Friday and was afraid it would not please the action fans but they came, laughed and seemed to be well satisfied.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

TOO TOUGH TO KILL: Victor Jory, Sally O'Neill—This inexpensively produced program picture offers solid entertainment of a rough and tumble quality and it more than pleased our patrons. We dualed it with "Dancing Feet."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard—This kind of a western will go to make that type unpopular again. Certainly a weak entertainment. When Columbia and Universal switched Jones and Maynard we started getting inferior westerns from these stars. Columbia made excellent westerns with Jones and Universal turned out satisfactory stories with Maynard, but what do we get now? Stories that will kill these two boys.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

First National

BROADWAY HOSTESS: Winifred Shaw, Lyle Talbot—Not much to this one. Better pass it up. Played February 19.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—About the best adventure yarn we've run off in some time. It's played to the hilt and is all one can ask for in realism. Exceptionally fine picture that turned in small receipts. Played February 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—With all due respects to "Mutiny on the Bounty" as a great picture, I and the audience thought that this one tops it. That was the general reaction. Errol Flynn has a clear, concise diction as well as an upstanding personal appearance. He was great in this role. I can name another story that would make this type of a picture and that story is on the same line, "The Painted Lady," dealing also with privateering, "Painted Lady" being the clipper ship. This picture is action all the way, and speaking from a small town exhibitor point of view that is what our audiences like best.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Cloumbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—More entertainment in this picture than in "Mutiny on the Bounty" but did not do more than average business, which was hurt some by school activities on the last night of the showing. It is well produced and will entertain, especially the men. Running time, 115 minutes.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

GOOSE AND THE GANDER, THE: George Brent, Kay Francis—This picture pleased 100 per cent. Why not give us more pictures of this type. But, of course, we only have one Kay Francis. Don't be afraid to book this one.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH: Kay Francis, Sybil Jason—In spite of the subzero weather we pulled a good house on this one and had many complimentary remarks. Kay Francis is exceptional in this picture and holds the interest of the audience from beginning to end. The part of the young daughter is played very good and Shirley Temple could do no better. You will get more than you expect in this picture. Played February 21-22.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Played three days against strong opposition and zero weather. Grosses extra good and this is a swell musical. GB certainly can be proud of this production for it has plenty of clever dance sequences and some good catchy song hits. Jessie Matthews is the star of this picture. She masquerades first as a boy and then as a girl, and always a joy. That's what she really is, exhibitors. This girl can really dance and sing and she will please the patrons 100 per cent. A worthy successor to her last picture "Evergreen."—R. A. Mallon, Dickinson Theatre, Chillicothe, Mo. General patronage.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS: Robert Donat, Madeleine Carroll—Picture did better than average business. This is a good action picture, and will please average theatre-goers 100 per cent. Played three days.—R. A. Mallon, Dickinson Theatre, Chillicothe, Mo. General patronage.

Mascot

HARMONY LANE: Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable—Excellent! A picture any producer should be proud to claim. It is not all froth and wisecracks. It has substance. It stays by you and for days the old song, taking on new meaning, goes "round and round" in your mind. To some, William Frawley was the whole show. Many of the older fans thought it the best picture they had ever seen. But what a hard one to put over. We played it last November. Well advertised without results. Determined that such a good picture should not be passed up, when a local organization asked for a benefit show we sold them the idea and we are all happy. Running time, 84 minutes. Played February 24-25.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS! Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Very, very good. But not for a small town. Question: Who else could have played the parts in this picture? Answer: No one. Played February 26-27.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Country patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny, Robert Taylor—Too bad to be caught in subzero weather with this outstanding production. This girl Powell surely is some dancer. Running time, 103 minutes. Played February 15-16.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—We've played better ones than this and plenty which are a lot worse. Rather extraordinary, even a bit fantastic in some places (the steam-roller sequence) and, in our opinion, carried off by the jovial villain, Beery. Naturally, our audience still goes for Harlow in a big way, though personally I consider her a complete washout as an actress. Gable and Lewis Stone played their parts to perfection. Running time, 87 minutes. Played February 29.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Madge Evans, Franchot Tone—A very nice interesting picture but drew business below average. I believe another title would have helped. Running time, 73 minutes. Played February 23-24.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—One of the few pictures that merit the supreme adjective "Colossal." Every patron had something complimentary to say about the acting of Charles Laughton.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—The funniest picture I ever saw. Just one funny situation after another. I would walk ten miles to see Chico play the piano, and he plays much longer than in any of his previous pictures. There were two little kids sitting in front of a friend of mine. One said, "The big fellow with the black mustache is the brains of the bunch." Another one replied, "Naw, it's the yellow haired fellow." General speaking it went over good. Played February 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—Fair. About on a par with their former efforts. Lacks story. Running time, 96 minutes. Played February 23-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—A good comedy production which gave us fairly good houses, but these specials cost too much money, when one has to pay 40 per cent of the gross plus score charge and the cost of short subjects. Played February 14-15.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—A splendid picture. I predict great things for Miss Russell if they give her a chance. She has a fine voice and a wonderful personality. Powell is always good.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell—One of the best spy stories that I can recall seeing. The methods used in deciphering enemy messages is alone worth the admission price. It has everything one can possibly ask for to entertain the masses and classes. While we doubled it with "This Is the Life," this no doubt did its full share in giving us above average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—After "Midsummer Night's Dream" thought the town would be broke but they must have borrowed money, for it played to above average Saturday-Monday business. A natural for anyone. Played February 22-24.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen—Regardless of the good review McCarthy of the "Herald" gave this I say it is a waste of film. Just nothing to it. Played February 21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—An old timer, hut one that does not fail to draw. In this picture Jackie Cooper is not at his best and Wallace Beery is half the show. Photography and scenery are good. Played February 14-15.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—A darn good picture. I agree with my friend, Palmer of Presque Isle, who a few weeks ago said, "That there gal's going places." Played February 10.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Country patronage.

WOMAN WANTED: Maureen O'Sullivan, Joel McCrea—A good average program picture. Played February 19.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Charles Ruggles, Ethel Merman—The best Crosby picture since "We're Not Dressing," although our friend, Mr. Ruggles, steals the honors. A close adaptation of the play with fine music and a lot of wholehearted fun. A first-class picture that will please everyone. You'll chuckle for a week over Charlie Ruggles as the public enemy number 13, disguised as a minister, and complaining of his rating. Played February 16-17.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—All snowed in on this one, but at that we did a nice business. As good as any of the Cassidy series. Lots of pretty horses and equipment. I would say that it is a good western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played February 12-13.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

BAR 20 RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—This is by far the hest of the "Hopalong Cassidy" series. Tbese pictures have grossed above average Friday-Saturday business. Played February 21-22.—Frank Aydelotte, Kiowa Theatre, Hobart, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Robert Young—Fast moving comedy with clever dialogue and situations. Story doesn't amount to much but will please any audience. Grossed above average on Sunday dates. Played February 16-18.—Frank Aydelotte, Kiowa Theatre, Hobart, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—This picture drew exceptionally well and pleased everyone and that's all we can ask of any picture. While it won't he among the 10 best pictures of 1936, from a purely exhibitor's standpoint it should certainly be put close to the top of the heap under the classification of "They Satisfied." Play it by all means. Plenty of laughs and excellent music. A darn good show. Played Februaary 21-22.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—Personally did not think much of this picture but the audience laughed and the general comment was good. Played February 9-11.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Claire Dodd, Edward Arnold—An old one that I decided to run after reading several favorable reports in these columns. The comments indicated that this picture made an excellent hit. As a matter of fact this drew more compliments than any picture we have run this winter. My personal opinion is that this is a great show that for some reason or other failed to get much publicity. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HER MASTER'S VOICE: Edward Everett Horton —Pretty weak. Mr. Horton has a great following here as a feature player. To star him will weaken his popularity. This might go over better with a full house. Played February 11.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Slyvia Sidney—A very good picture. For once a good playdate from Paramount. Put these two things together and the result is good business and everybody praised the show. Played January 26.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd—A picture that drew both young and old. Would consider it better than his two previous attempts. Got the laughs and satisfied the customers. Played February 19-20.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—A remarkable picture for our town. In spite of snow, blocked roads and terrific blizzards they turned out in mass to see this one. Story weak and ramhly. Boles old and wrinkled. Swarthout marvelous; will go far if properly cast. Running time, 81 minutes. Played February 16-18.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—It was a great show and pleased everyone. The new comedy team of Willie Howard and Herb Williams is sure funny. Did a fair Saturday business.—Fred S. Vassar, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—Very good entertainment. Played February 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SOAK THE RICH: Walter Connolly—Why in Hades do they still allow this Hecht and MacArthur to produce pictures? Can't someone make them see that the show patrons we have are human beings? If they ever produce a picture worth a tinker's dam it will be because they have had so much practice. A wanton waste of time and all that goes with it. Paramount would do well to "pay them off" and not merchandise their stuff. Running time, nine reels. Played February 19.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

SOAK THE RICH: Walter Connolly, Mary Taylor, John Howard--You will profit if you shelve this. Absolutely nothing to it. Walter Connolly and John Howard do their hest to put this impossible story over. Mary will have to wake up and put some pep into her parts if she wants to remain in the movies. Played February 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—A fine production played during the coldest weather of the season. Those that saw it liked it. Should be good over entire South. Just wonder how it would go anywhere else. However, it follows history. Such as this happened right here after the war. Played February 9-10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA JUDGE, THE: Walter C. Kelly, Marsha Hunt—A nice little picture that gave general satisfaction. Stepin Fetchit was a typical lazy darkie and should be given more prominent parts. After all, people want to laugh.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

Republic

CAPPY RICKS RETURNS: Robert McWade, Florine McKinney, Lois Wilson—A lot of action and some good comedy but the recording was terrible. The last two pictures from Republic had bad recording, or did I get two bad prints? I would appreciate it if some kind exhibitor would write in to this column if they have had trouble with the sound on this picture. Played February 5.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

DANCING FEET: Ben Lyon, Joan Marsh, Eddie Nugent—Gay, light and wholesome. Strong enough to single hut still better as the hrighter half of a double bill. Ben Lyon is ohviously used for his name value only as he has a minor role. It is Eddie Nugent's picture.—J. W. Noah, New Liherty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SPANISH CAPE MYSTERY, THE: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Cook—I would class this as a better than average mystery drama and is fully equal to the major pictures of this type and better than some of them. The plot gets away with considerahle originality and holds interest right to the end. The first couple days in Lent seems to have cut into our receipts.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FOUR MORE JOIN REPORTING CORPS

From Maine to Nevada come four new reporters to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. The quartet are:

Frank Aydelotte, Kiowa Theatre, Hobart, Oklahoma

L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada

Fred S. Vassar, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine

R. A. Mallon, Dickinson Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Read the reports of these showmen in the department this week.

RKO Radio

ANNIE OAKLEY: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—A fine picture, well cast and well directed. Will please in any situation large or small. Barhara turns in an excellent performance as the "Shoot-them-through-the-head quail hunter" who gains national fame as the world's greatest markswoman, and Preston Foster takes another step towards stardom. Drew exceptionally well for the weather conditions. Played February 21-22.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee and Columhus, Mont. Rural patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Virginia Weidler—We had this one hooked three months ago and were compelled to cancel, so ran it very late and were in doubt whether we should run it. But it surprised us by giving us the best gross of any program picture in the last seven months. Played February 21-22.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FRECKLES: Tom Brown, Carol Stone—While this did only average business, it is one of the best small town shows that I have ever run in my 18 years in this husiness. It should be used on the end of the week but I made the mistake of using it for Sunday. You can't go wrong on this production. Running time, 68 minutes.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

HI GAUCHO: John Carroll, Steffi Duna—This is one of the poorest pictures it has heen my hard luck to run. What is RKO trying to do? They might get by with this stuff in the East, but in the West we know our Mexicans. John Caroll was as graceful as an underfed cowboy. No, Johnny, you'll never make a Doug Fairhanks.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

I DREAM TOO MUCH: Lily Pons, Henry Fonda—This is supposed to he a picture for lovers and admirers of Lily Pons, and I have this to say: if there are any admirers of this little lady in Winchester, Ind., they failed to let me know it by paying their shekels into the box office. This one holds the record for poor business, and the only advice I will give out is if there is any doubt in your mind about the value of this type picture for your theatre see it before you give it playing time.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Not a special hut a good picture. Ginger could use Astaire but I am still strong for her and will give her credit in her own right.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant—Well, I thought when RKO gave us "Hi Gaucho" they had gotten it all out of their system but along they come with a worse one. It is a shame to give an actress like Hepburn a story of this type. Watch them, Katharine, or they'll ruin you. One more like this and you're done for.—L. C. Denton, Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. General patronage.

SYLVIA SCARLETT: Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant—RKO certainly has nerve to inflict such a picture on the poor exhibitors. I consider it one of the three worst pictures I have seen. As one person said it is a mess of piffle. Just awful. Running time, 94 minutes. Played February 25-26.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Margot Grahame—Subzero weather cut attendance on this costume picture. A picture that is rather difficult to report on. Very elaborate and undouhtedly a fine production but will not draw any over-amount of enthusiasm in the small town theatre.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Fair entertainment and will get by but will not bring a penny into the box office that you could not get with the poorest picture ever made.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Lots of entertainment in this film, though not as good as "Roherta." My playdate was held back so far it hurt the drawing power so much that I did very little better than average. Running time, 100 minutes.—L. F. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FARMER TAKES A WIFE, THE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Fonda—Early days Erie Canal and railroad portrayal. Some liquor, not too much. A good fight or two. Call it an all around good picture. Played February 22-23.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE: Nino Martini, Genevieve Tobin—All in all this seems a well rounded story all logically worked out with a good snappy ending, but our business on this was not so good. To seek out the causes—the star is new to movie patrons. I would also say that the music was too much on the classical side and sung in foreign language. The musical pictures with opera stars would find more response if they sang more of the popular classics that people are more familiar with.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—No comments necessary on this. It is among his best and that is plenty good. We did about the same on this as on his previous picture but would have done better but for the bad weather conditions. Running time, 84 minutes.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter—An excellent musical that pleased. Warner Baxter plays the producer with fine sincerity. Played February 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—This was a fine picture in which Jack Oakie had a perfect part. Fats Waller and Dixie Dunbar extra good. Played February 16-18.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Here is a fine musical not as elaborate as some but good all the way through. Drew a good business in the middle of the week. Running time, 88 minutes. Played February 18-19.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—Good music and comedy in this picture, which pleased our Friday-Saturday crowds.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye—Fair. Some good spots in it, but lacks story. Running time, 66 minutes. Played February 19-20.—M. W. Mattecbeck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PADDY O'DAY: Jane Withers—Good entertainment. Running time, 76 minutes. Played February 21-22.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

REDHEADS ON PARADE: John Boles, Dixie Lee—Very good feature, fair story, good cast and some outstanding dance ensembles. I advertised that all redheads would be admitted free and this one seemed to please the cash customers as much as the redheads. Running time, 77 minutes. Played February 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—Good entertainment here. It's different from others so far produced, and so well acted, held interest from start to finish. Used it on our Owl Show. Played February 8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Bruce Cabot—An interesting G-Men versus gangdom picture which is distinguished by comedy with a different twist. Eddie Brophy is at last given a chance to deliver some clever, unforced humor, and he does it effectively.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Bruce Cabot—This, the second Twentieth Century production we have used, is a swell melodrama. Unfortunately, however, it pulled in only a fair crowd, despite the fact it was well liked so that we had hopes of a second night pickup. Played February 19-20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell—An unusual story provided with plenty of comedy and music. The film proves a worthwhile offering that most fans will like. Played February 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—A very pleasing picture for old and young. The double with this was "Rendezvous." We did a nice business with this program. Either one of these pictures should stand alone where single bills are the custom.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—A real neat little program picture for end of week run. Had several favorable comments and did average business. Jane does not draw like Temple by any means, but if properly cast probably has a future. Running time, 65 minutes.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien, Barbara Fritchie—A very good Zane Grey western, beautiful scenery and a satisfactory cast. Owing to the extreme cold weather could not show the second night and to very poor attendance the first night, but it pleased those hardy enough to risk the cold and snow. Running time, 58 minutes. Played February 12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN: George O'Brien—This started out like a million but didn't keep up the pace and before it was half over was running in the class of a very average western. Right now O'Brien is the best western star in the field, but a few more like this and he will rate no better than Jones or Maynard, who have lost a lot of their popularity due to poor direction and weak story material.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Gasson, Minn. General patronage.

REPORTING ON NEW RELEASES

Frank Aydelotte, manager of the Kiowa theatre at Hobart, Oklahoma, writes to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week:

"Playing Paramount, Warner-First National and Columbia pictures at early release dates prompts me to write in a few reports so that other exhibitors may have this information before the picture is old."

Mr. Aydelotte's reports appear in the department in this issue.

WAY DOWN EAST: Henry Fonda, Rochelle Hudson—This picture has all that it takes to genuinely entertain a family patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Universal

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold—What a surprise! This is a very realistic portrayal of Diamond Jim Brady's life. Edward Arnold seems to actually live his part and he has very good support from the rest of the cast. Played February 24-25.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Country patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold—We played this in the midst of the longest cold spell in history—below zero on 40 consecutive days—and actually did almost average business with it. Exceptionally fine picture. If Universal would pattern more of their pictures along these lines it would be to the advantage of both Carl L. and his customers.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—A first rate action picture, credible throughout, although the story offered many pitfalls. Credit to all concerned that it turns out interesting film fare. Average draw. Played February 18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OUTLAWED GUNS: Buck Jones—No better or worse than the other Jones Universal has produced. It seemed like that had reached the budget allowed for this in the middle of the last reel and cut it terribly short. The end came so suddenly that it left every one wondering if we had skipped a reel.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT: Edward Arnold—A pretty fast and tensely told murder play. Good direction and expert playing by a large cast of favorites. However, heavy drinking and loose living scenes in the opening sequences may offend in some spots. Played February 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SHE GETS HER MAN: Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell—Universal's only star that gets plenty of laughs. A little risque in parts, but audience reaction is favorable. Has good opening and story follows quite true throughout picture. Good for any spot in the week. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 28-29.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatre, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STORMY: Noah Berry, Jr.—Good western picture, but would have been considerably better with less horse scenery and more tunes from the Arizona wranglers. Good business on this despite bad weather. Played February 12.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN: May Robson—Played this to the smallest weekend business in history, due entirely to the worst blizzard the Northwest has ever experienced. We will surely bring this back, as it has almost everything it needs for all around small town entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

DANGEROUS: Bette Davis, Franchot Tone—Bette Davis has the best role of her career and gives it everything she's got. Her performance should be the outstanding of the year. Her role is somewhat better liked in this one than former ones. Hard to sell, but will please if you can get them in. Played February 23-25.—Frank Aydelotte, Kiowa Theatre, Hobart, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull—Played this on Bank Night when the stakes were high. Patrons liked it very much. Good lively comedy. Running time, 67 minutes. Played February 14.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—An exciting story of a sbanghaied sailor who returns and becomes the king of Frisco's Barbary Coast, but a pure heart beats beneath his rough exterior and he wins the gal, who saves him from being hung by the vigilantes. No business due to weather, but pleased all who came. We missed Pat O'Brien. Played February 19-20.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee & Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—An excellent picture of the Barbary Coast in San Francisco, featuring James Cagney as a super gambler and king of the waterfront. Plenty of action and suspense and a very good cast. George E. Stone gives an outstanding performance. Extreme cold, sixty mile winds and snow cut down the attendance. Running time, 77 minutes. Played February 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney—Very good action picture. Played February 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Boy, this is a show and don't you forget it. Play it on the end of the week and mop up. Bad weather was the only thing that prevented more than average business for me. Running time, 77 minutes.—G. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, A: James Cagney, Joe E. Brown, Olivia De Havilland, Jean Muir—Against the advice of my directors booked this for one day and chalked up largest single day gross in history of house. A roadshow engagement with high prices, but they came and paid. May disappoint in average small town, but went over well here. Played February 21.—H. A. Griswold, Sewanee-Union Theatre, Sewanee, Tenn. University patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—A pretty routine plot that offers nothing new yet it drew the customers in a little better than usual of late. So far as we know it pleased. Played February 25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook N. H. General patronage.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Glenda Farrell, Joan Blondell—Not much to this one. It is not up to the regular standard of these two gold digging blondes. It will pass all right for a program picture, if the audience does not expect too much.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Sheila Mannors—An outstanding western, featuring the singing cowboy, Dick Foran. Some beautiful scenery and pictures of wild life, a stampede of wild horses, rustlers and intrigue, makes a feature that pleased the western fans. The only complaint I heard of this one was, "Why didn't Dick Foran sing more?" Running time, 63 minutes. Played February 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran—A very good western and some fine singing. Running time, 63 minutes. Played February 14-15.—M. W. Mattecheck Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Dick Foran has a good voice and a pleasing personality, but it is the first time I have seen a western star with pink and white complexion and to come through seven strenuous reels looking as if he had come out of a bandbox. His fight never mussed a hair. Now, I ask you. Outside of that it is an average western along the same lines as the others that we have run.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PETRIFIED FOREST: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Of course, it is too early for me, a last run house in my zone, to have run this. I saw this picture at the first run theatre and I agree with all the rave reviews, but—yes, there is quite a "but" in this. I understand that two endings have been made for this and they have decided to keep the tragic ending which is the one that I saw. Tbis tragic ending will spoil a perfectly fine picture for my patrons. I cater to a working class patronage, most of whom come to get away from their daily grind, and a happy ending sends them away refreshed. This particular picture does not need a tragic ending, the simplest twist at the end can make a happy ending of it. It is all well enough to show a preview of this to a selected group and have them vote for the tragic ending, but let them show it to an average audience first with the happy ending and then with the tragic end and see which is preferred. Ninety-nine out of a hundred who will see the picture have not seen the play and would not know if the ending had been changed. The power and the beauty of the picture would not lose one iota by giving it a happy ending. If Warner has two endings on this I hope they will give me a print with the happy ending.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jane Froman—Why did they take the chance of ruining one of the best small town stars (Pat O'Brien) by putting him in a picture like this? James Melton has a fine voice, but so have a lot of dogs who do not even attempt grand opera. I don't see why the producers keep having high class singing in their pictures. Played February 2.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

STARS OVER BROADWAY: Pat O'Brien, Jane Froman—I don't know what is wrong with this show. While it had some fine numbers, it appeared to drag. We had average attendance the first night and nothing the second. Had several adverse comments and none the other way. My advice would be do not use this on your best nigbt. Running time, 90 minutes.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ANTS IN THE PANTRY: Three Stooges—They are crazy and who could ask for more in a good slap-stick comedy. They always keep the audience in an uproar and this one is no exception.—C. McKusick, Assistant Manager, Community Theatre, Guilford, Maine. Country patronage.

UNCIVIL WARRIORS—Three Stooges—If you want a good slapstick comedy, book this. It produces plenty of laughs. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

E-FLAT MAN: Star Personality—This got some laughs but it was rather draggy in spots.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

GAME OF JAI-ALAI, THE: Treasure Chest Series—Still another good subject from this much improved series. If only the improvement could become contagious Educational could boast "The Spice of the Program," but we have to be shown to believe it now.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

> "This is my first contribution to your department but it won't be my last," writes L. C. Denton of the Rex Theatre, Caliente, Nevada. "I am like a great many other exhibitors, I guess—let the other fellow do it. But I get so much good out of this department that I have decided to help out my fellow exhibitors as they helped me."

HOME TOWN OLYMPICS: Paul Terry-Toons—These Terrytoons are the poorest cartoons we play. This one was saved somewhat by the turtle when it turned it's shell into a racer.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND MELODY: Musical Comedies—Good any time you want a two-reel musical. Music, dancing and girls.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM OF PAREE: Musical Comedy—Why blaspheme the name of "musical comedy" with such awful stuff as this. Only one halfway good song to recommend it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTRYSIDE MELODIES: Paramount Varieties—A lovely colored reel showing scenic countryside and a fox hunt. Nice musical score. A quality subject, but not dull.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DANCING ON THE MOON: Color Classics—A fine colored subject. Running time, nine minutes.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

KIDS IN THE SHOE, THE: Color Classics—A very good color cartoon with some good music.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

MOSCOW MOODS: Yacha Bunchuk and Orchestra—One short that my patrons were disgusted with. Who wants to hear foreign music when we don't even understand American music? Running time, one reel.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWSREELS: We have shown Paramount News at every performance and find this to be our best attraction. It never fails to interest. If you are not showing newsreels, do so.—O. Ingmar, Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS: These are generally very good subjects.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN DREAMLAND: Color Classics—Beautiful; comes very near to producing third dimension. Put it on your best days. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WE AIM TO PLEASE: Popeye the Sailor—Another dandy Popeye. Running time, one reel.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MOLLY MOO COW: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A series of colored shorts that are original and full of good hearty laughs. Excellent.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee & Columbus, Mont. Rural patronage.

PATHE TOPICS: These Topics have some good subjects, but the editing is wrong. They start out with a good comedy or musical subject and end up with a draggy scenic which should be just the other way around.—J. E. Matuska, State Theatre, Jackson, Minn. General patronage.

BEST BUILDING YEAR RECORDED IN MEXICO

But Theatre Patronage Falls Off 50 Per Cent Because of the Strike; Decks Are Clear Now

by JAMES LOCKHART

Mexico City Correspondent

Despite the employees' strike which started September 27, cutting off practically the entire supply of product from eight large American companies until the settlement a few weeks ago, the year 1935 saw Mexico's most active building and theatre opening period in three decades.

Ten new houses, four of them first-class theatres, were opened and work was started on five others. Motion pictures developed a new popularity. The federal district, including this city, had 63 theatres in operation at the end of the year.

Exhibitors had a more prosperous year than in a long time, at least up to the strike. Now that that is over, it is expected that the better product from across the border will again be freely distributed in the Mexican communities.

Patronage Halved

Patronage fell off about 50 per cent as a result of the strike, since the public showed little interest in independent American product or foreign pictures. It is generally agreed here that the better class American films completely dominate this market. Some Mexican producers say that the loss of American ace product was a retarding influence on Mexico's growing industry, since the domestic films, though vastly improved, still cannot stand on their own feet, and the public will not attend the theatre merely to see domestic product.

Mexican producers are making drastic efforts to increase their output during 1936. The totals for 1935 were about 40 features and 22 shorts, while it is estimated the 1936 total will be 60 to 80 features and about 36 shorts.

Tax Reduction Sought

There is a movement afoot to bring about a reduction in federal, state and municipal taxes on the industry, the argument being that films are today Mexico's most popular amusement and should not be so burdened.

Cinematografica Latino Americano, S. A. (Clasa), most enterprising of Mexican producers, has just completed the largest studio in the federal district. The company is headed by Alberto Ricardo Pani, one of the country's leading capitalists. It plans 10 features and 24 shorts this year.

Two Booth Companies, So Booth Dominion Changes

by J. A. COWAN

Toronto Correspondent

Clarifying somewhat the confusion which arose from a double use of the name "Booth" in Canadian production efforts, the name of Booth Dominion Productions, Ltd., has been changed to Dominion Motion Pictures, Ltd. This is the organization with which Burt Kelly, formerly of Paramount; Arthur Gottlieb of Film Laboratories of Canada, Ltd., and J. R. Booth, young Canadian millionaire, are associated. The organization has made two features.

A protest over the use of the name was made by Booth Canadian Films, Ltd., incorporated in 1929 by George Thorne Booth. Officials of the first named company, which came into the field only recently, said the change of name had been made voluntarily in order to avoid confusion of the two organizations.

Booth Canadian Films, according to George T. Booth, is now operating from 604 Merton street, Toronto, and Mr. Booth reports this company as not concerned with feature production at the present time.

In 1929 George Thorne Booth, a young Englishman who had served five years with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, decided that Canada should have productions of her own. He wrote and directed "The White Road," a six-reel feature using all Canadian artists. He then incorporated Booth Canadian Films, Ltd., in July, 1929, but then came the general depression.

In 1932 he wrote and directed the first Canadian-made talker, a two-reel cameo of "The Bells," and wrote many articles in the interest of Canadian production, most of them featured in Canadian newspapers and many quoted by American trade magazines. Just recently he wrote and directed two musical shorts which will be ready for release soon.

Booth Canadian Films, Ltd., now has a fully equipped studio including screening room, latest trick printer and portable recording equipment with sound car. At present it is confining production to commercial and educational shorts and newsreel material.

Mintz Cartoon Staff Doubled for Color

"Our cartoon staff has been exactly doubled since we started using color in our cartoons about a year ago and we are now employing 120 artists constantly, exclusive of the rest of our technical staff," said Charles Mintz, producer of animated cartoons for Columbia release, in discussing the use of color in cartoons.

The Mintz studios are producing four series of animated cartoons for Columbia, "Color Rhapsodies," "Scrappy," "Krazy Kat" and "Barney Google."

Columbia Names Twelve Special Exploiteers

Columbia Pictures has engaged 12 special exploiteers to handle the national release of "The Music Goes 'Round and Around." Those to be stationed in key cities and other towns are Jack Thoma, John Curran, Ed Rosenbaum, Don Prince, James Ashcraft, J. S. MacNeill, Lee Kugel, William Parker, Mike Roth, Harry Bernstein, Jean Finley, Eddie Meck, Mike Newman, Arnold Van Leer, Al Duffy, Jack Fuld and Les Kaufman.

FEAR OF COMPETITION BY WPA IS DISCOUNTED

U. S. Theatre Productions in New York Running in Red; Farnsworth Answers Critics

While President Roosevelt was evolving plans for continuing the Works Progress Administration and its various projects after July 1, it appeared in New York, the largest center of WPA theatre project activity, that established theatres, either film or stage, have little to fear in the Government shows as competition.

Operating on a small overhead, other than payroll, which comes from the WPA, the Government's productions in New York have been running in the red, these including "Walk Together Chillun," Negro production which has closed after a month's run in Harlem; "American Holiday," at the Manhattan on Broadway; "Chalk Dust," experimental play, at Daly's, and "Woman of Destiny" at the Willis in the Bronx. Grosses have not even covered house rent, it was reported.

The theatre project thus far has not been able to obtain finances for promotion, and the New York newspapers have been lukewarm to the productions. The frequent delays and bickerings have been a factor.

Meanwhile in Washington, William P. Farnsworth, former deputy administrator of the NRA film code and now administrative officer of the federal theatre, answered exhibitor alarms over possible competition and said he was prepared to discuss any such complaints with theatremen, pointing out that the federal shows charge admission and collect the federal admission tax.

The WPA's policy is to avoid becoming competition to established theatres, motion picture or legitimate, it was said, and in local situations to adjust complaints by either renting the theatre of the complaining showman or canceling bookings.

Free Shows Given

However, nothing was said of such situations as reported from Bridgeport, Conn., that free film shows under WPA auspices are being given one night a week in the three recreation centers at nearby Fairfield.

The motion picture division of the federal theatre has extended its program in the New York area to five circuits of film shows once a week at 47 camps of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Bills including a feature and two short subjects—chosen for their "educational" value—are shown at a nominal admission, the product being obtained from Universal, Columbia, Warner, United Artists, Republic and other companies. The showings are under the supervision of the camps' educational supervisors.

Would Extend WPA

President Roosevelt has been conferring with Government department heads on new appropriations for federal relief, looking to an extension of the WPA activities after their scheduled expiration next July 1 for another year or possibly eight months.

Meanwhile Philip W. Barber, New York regional director, has been instructed by Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, not to add workers to the project, in line with a general WPA retrenchment program. The appropriation of $3,000,000 for New York will be exhausted May 15.

The American Federation of Actors and the American Federation of Musicians, Local 802, protested the retrenchment and moved to unite organized labor against curtailment of employment. While the project's future depends on Congressional action, Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director, said the national program would not be seriously affected.

Mr. Barber asserted that the federal project's plays were in a way "closer to real theatre than Broadway's, because they were not tied to the apron strings of Hollywood." He said 44,494 persons attended 113 project performances in New York in the last week of February, when there were 4,854 persons on his payroll.

In Indianapolis, B. F. Keith's theatre, which has been dark most of the time, has become the home of Indiana's federal theatre unit. A stock company will present plays on a weekly basis for about five months, it is planned. The theatre has been rented for a percentage of the gross.

Vaudeville Units Organized

Vaudeville companies employing 150 actors are being prepared for touring New York state, and a visiting stock company is scheduled to appear once a week in Sing Sing prison.

The New Orleans federal theatre unit has announced it will give free shows for any organization that requests them, and since it is importing outside talent it is assuming a commercial aspect, according to exhibitors and legitimate theatrical managers who are reported considering a protest to Washington.

With the Cincinnati project employing 81 persons, it is providing free entertainment for thousands of persons, according to its supervisor, D. H. Heim.

Planning to keep the theatre "intimate," 1,400 of the 4,000 seats in Hartford's State will be offered for sale. Government drama has started there with a cast of 50.

Productions in Chicago

Chicago will see WPA productions in the Great Northern and Blackstone theatres, and Milwaukee in the Davidson. Federal shows opened in the Mayan, Los Angeles, and the Mason and Musart also have been taken over. Five shows are in preparation for Los Angeles and Southern California cities.

WPA production also is under way in Kansas City, Houston, Detroit, New Haven, Boston, Tampa, Peoria, Ill., Charlotte, N. C., and other cities.

Paid admission symphony concerts will be inaugurated in New York by the concert division of the federal project, beginning March 22nd. The object is to determine whether such concerts can be supported publicly after Government aid has been discontinued. There will be two orchestras, each with 100 professional musicians. Admission will follow the theatre project sale—25 cents to 55 cents top.

Nathan Zatkin, director of publicity of the federal theatre in the New York region, this week resigned.

Signed by Paramount

Marjorie Little, St. Louis, in private life Marjorie Bornstein, has signed a contract with Paramount for a part in a musical production.

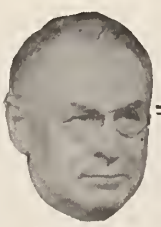
(A) I have selected the reply of W. C. Brown as concise and correct. He says, "The term 'feed back' is applied to the condition whereby changes in the plate voltage of a tube, which are brought about by changes in the grid voltage are fed back to the grid by the inter-electrode capacity that exists between the plate and grid. Excessive feed-back causes distortion. If the excess be too great the tube will go into oscillation."

D. Danielson applies the term more generally. He says, "Feed-back is a condition wherein an electric current, in process of transmission either directly or indirectly causes another current to be reproduced in the same circuit. This may be due to a condenser capacitance between tube electrodes, or the more common howl produced by holding a telephone receiver to the transmitter when the circuit is complete. In such case a sound, even though very minute, is produced when the receiver touches the mouthpiece. This sound is in turn reproduced in the receiver, and is again picked up by the transmitter and returned to the receiver, and so on indefinitely. The reproduced frequency will, in this case, be proportional to the time for the impulse or signal to complete the electrical circuit and leap the air gap. This condition is present in P. A. systems when too high a gain is used with an unprotected, non-directional mike."

B. DeVietti makes an answer that also seems most excellent. He says, "Feed-back is the term applicable to the condition existing between the plate and grid in a triode vacuum tube. Since their relation to one another constitutes a condenser, the action of a condenser will of course enter into their operation.

(B) Herman Polies answers, "The effect of too much tension at the projector aperture is unnecessary strain upon film sprocket holes, unnecessary wear of tension shoes and aperture plate tracks, unnecessarily fast undercutting or wear of intermittent sprocket teeth, a shortening of the life of the projector mechanism as a whole. There also is added fire danger, for the reason that added, unnecessary strain is placed upon film splices, with increased danger of weak ones pulling in two below the aperture, thus stopping the film over the aperture opening. Excessive tension also adds unnecessary load to the driving motor."

J. T. Raleigh says, "Too much aperture tension is a projection crime. It not only imposes unnecessary strain on all working parts of the projector mechanism, thus reducing their length of useful life, but also works heavy damage to film and increases the fire hazard because of the added liability of weak splices pulling apart between the aperture opening and intermittent sprocket. But what seems the most serious objection of all is the greatly increased liability of emulsion of green films sticking to the tension shoes or aperture plate tracks because of the added pressure it is subjected to.



J. R. Prater puts it thus, "The worst effect of too much tension at the projector aperture is damage to the film. Excess tension causes strained and cracked sprocket holes. My experience is that with proper tension film may be projected several times a day for several months without showing sprocket hole damage, but run a green film just once with enough tension to strain the sprocket holes (and with green film very little excess tension will do it) and the film is right then on the edge of the junk pile. As to the mechanism itself, excessive tension causes excessive wear on the following parts: (1) Aperture plate tracks, (2) tension shoes, (3) intermittent sprocket teeth, (4) the entire intermittent movement, which at best must operate at high speed, under severe strain and under the most exacting adjustments, (5) all shafts and bearings of the intermittent movement, (6) every gear, shaft and bearing between the driving motor and the intermittent movement, including the shaft and bearings of the motor and any drive chains or belts employed, (7) besides all this, the motor itself is subjected to added, unnecessary load, which adds to the power bill. In hot weather the overload may add sufficiently to the motor temperature to weaken its insulation and finally cause serious damage."

(C) Weldon Limmroth says, "The primary purpose of transformers is to increase or decrease voltage on the secondary," which was essentially the answer of very many, though most added "and amperage."

(D) One "student" says, "I always thought a Maxwell was a now obsolete car. Will be interested to learn what it is applied to in our profession." To my surprise more than 200 students disclaimed knowledge of the Maxwell, some citing cars, coffees, etc. One said, "I have searched everywhere and failed to discover the answer."

Well, gentlemen, if you will turn to question No. 20, page 327, of your Bluebook of Projection, and then to its answer at (20), page 331, your search will end.

Evans and Rau say, "The Maxwell is the unit of magnetic force. It is the amount of magnetic force, or number of lines of magnetic force, passing through one square centimeter of space in a magnetic field of unit density."

Western Electric Nets $2,620,279 On $105,417,000

Western Electric Company—a prominent participator in motion pictures through its wholly-owned Electrical Research Products—improved its financial condition in 1935 to the extent that a $7,751,548 loss in 1934 was displaced with a $2,620,279 profit in 1935, after all charges.

Western Electric manufactures the equipment used by the telephone companies, various other subsidiaries and motion picture recorders for studios and reproducers for theatres. The corporation's investment today in Erpi stands at $9,136,950, of which $6,736,950 represents stock and $2,400,000 is for advances. This investment is a reduction of some $2,700,000 from the $11,860,593 evaluation at the end of 1934. Erpi is Western Electric's second largest subsidiary.

Western Electric equipment sales in 1935 were $105,416,801, compared with $91,807,396 in 1934, an increase of some $14,000,000, and the cost of those sales stood at $102,864,997 in 1935, and $98,481,160 in 1934.

For Western Electric and subsidiaries, including Erpi: Total plant assets for 1935 amounted to $142,804,365 as compared to $144,455,233 the year before; total investments amounted to $23,327,278 as compared to 1934's $26,613,751; total accounts receivable were $16,431,755 as compared to $14,530,442 for 1934; total current assets amounted to $77,932,318 against the previous year's $104,561,500, and the grand total of assets was $273,666,079 against $306,294,326 in 1934.

The company has a total capital of $142,500,000 as in 1934, and a surplus of $13,741,534 against $12,579,222 in 1934. Total reserves amounted to $71,066,720 against $68,682,251 for the previous year. Total long term liabilities amounted to $36,416,197 against $72,068,730 in 1934. Total current liabilities amounted to $273,666,079 against 1934's $306,294,326.

Edgar S. Bloom, president, for the board of directors, told stockholders that further improvement in the business of the Western Electric Company resulted in sales for the year 1935 of $105,417,000, an increase of 15% over the sales for 1934. Sales to Bell Telephone Companies were $97,554,000 and to others $7,863,000, the total comparing with previous years as follows:

1926	$263,105,000	1931	$228,956,000
1927	253,724,000	1932	117,850,000
1928	287,931,000	1933	69,511,000
1929	410,950,000	1934	91,807,000
1930	361,478,000	1935	105,417,000

For the first time since 1931 the operations of the Western Electric Company and its subsidiary and associated companies resulted in a profit, the earnings for 1935 having been $2,620,279, which compares with a loss in 1934 of $7,751,548. The return on investment (gross assets less current liabilities) was 1.9%, which compares with previous years as follows:

1934	1.6%	Loss

For the sixteen years prior, 1916-1931, the return on investment averaged 7%, and for the past 20 years, 1916-1935, averaged 4.5%.

The company's issue of $35,000,000 of Debenture 5% Bonds due April 1, 1944, was called for redemption October 1, 1935 at 105 plus accrued interest. Other interest-bearing indebtedness was reduced by $602,929, leaving the total interest-bearing indebtedness at December 31, 1935, $33,871,597, consisting principally of notes payable to the Trustee of the Pension Fund.

At the close of the year the company's plants were operating at about 27% capacity and the volume of business was sufficient to provide 5 days' work a week for the great majority of employees. The number of employees at the end of the year was 21,033, as compared with 17,148 in June, 1933, the low point in employment during the depression, at which time also the majority of employees were working 4½ days or less per week.

The company's payroll for the year amounted to $37,192,349.

Mr. Bloom added that the Federal Communications Commission has undertaken the examinization of the company's business under the authority of the Federal Communications Act of 1934 and as directed by joint resolution of Congress approved March 15, 1935 (Public Resolution No. 8).

Net at Paramount Theatres Up 15% N. Y. Board Meets

Despite extremely severe weather conditions throughout the country, the theatres associated with Paramount showed an increase over net operations during January and February, 1936, of 15 per cent, according to Y. Frank Freeman, vice-president in charge of theatre operation, prior to his departure for the south to confer with operating partners.

With the improvement in weather conditions as spring approaches, and the increase in good product from all companies, Mr. Freeman anticipates an even larger increase in theatre business in the next several months.

An adjourned meeting of the Paramount board was held late last week in New York to transact unfinished business carried over from the regular monthly meeting held February 29, according to an official of the company.

The Winfield Sheehan and Frank Lloyd producing contracts, reported to be included in the unfinished business, were not passed upon at the meeting, it was stated. It is understood that details of the contract with Mr. Sheehan are still in work.

Meanwhile, hearings on five appeals from Federal Judge Coxe's decision on the allowance of fees for Paramount reorganization services, which were scheduled to be held in the United States circuit court of appeals Tuesday, have been postponed to April 6 with the consent of the five appellants because counsel for several of them had to be in Washington before the United States supreme court.

The appeal hearings scheduled were those of Root, Clark and Ballantine, counsel for the Paramount trustees, whose application for a fee of $750,000 was reduced to $200,000; Cook, Nathan and Lehman, attorneys for the Paramount stockholders' protective committee, whose application for a fee of $250,000 was allowed at $115,000; Kuhn, Loeb and Company and their attorneys, Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood, whose applications were denied in toto, and the stockholders' committee appeal on behalf of its auditors, Coverdale and Colpitts, whose application for $51,000 was allowed at $27,860.

Trade Extends Testimonial to E. C. Grainger

All strata and most branches of the industry were represented in multiple among the 500 friends of E. C. Grainger who attended the testimonial dinner given for him Monday night in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York. Mr. Grainger will retire as eastern division sales manager of Twentieth-Century Fox on April 15th to become general manager of the Feiber and Shea circuit of theatres. Exhibitors constituted an imposing majority of those present and vociferously welcomed him as a recruit to their forces.

Louis Nizer, master of ceremonies, broke into the soup course to introduce Lew (Movietone) Lehr, who threw proceedings into high gear with three characteristic anecdotes. He was followed by Laurence Stallings, who, like Mr. Lehr, had to leave early to return to the newsreel studio, and by Lowell Thomas, who drew a parallel between exhibitors and unfavored suitors of Ethiopian belles as revealed by returning cameramen.

Harry Brandt took the microphone and welcomed Mr. Grainger to exhibitor ranks and was followed by Saul Rogers, who reviewed events in which the retiring guest of honor had an important part. E. W. Hammons cast a short address in humorous parody of a sales talk for Educational shorts. A. W. Smith, Jr., was the next speaker.

Felix Jenkins, Claude McGowan, William Sussman, who succeeds Mr. Grainger in the post he vacates, paid tribute to his business and personal integrity. Austin Keough declared "Eddie's word is as good as his bond." James R. Grainger expressed briefly his best wishes for his brother's success in the new field of endeavor. Telegrams from Sidney Kent, John D. Clark, Jules Levy, N. L. Nathanson and W. F. Rogers were read by Toastmaster Nizer.

The guest of honor, who had been given a silver service, sketched swiftly his activities in the industry, bestowed credit for lessons learned, treated frankly of policies he had followed as a sales executives and as frankly of those he proposes to follow as an exhibitor.

Morris Sanders was chairman of arrangements and Joseph J. Les was treasurer of the committee, which included Clayton Bond, Harry Brandt, Leon Netter, J. J. O'Connor, Charles O'Reilly, Eugene Picker, Walter Reade, Sam Rinzler, Harry Shiffman, H. H. Buxbaum, Nat Cohen, Harry Gold, William J. Kupper, Frank McCarthy, Ed Schnitzer, Jack Skirboll, William Sussman and George Weeks.

Gaumont British Will Augment Educationals

Following receipt of various awards at the Brussels Cinema Exhibition for Gaumont British educational subjects produced under supervision of H. Bruce Woolfe, that company has authorized Miss Mary Field to produce a series of historical films for classroom use. Her first will depict the career of Napoleon.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended March 7, 1936 from 111 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,171,200, a decrease of $62,800 from the total of the preceding calendar week ending February 29, 1936, when 110 theatres in 18 major cities of the country aggregated $1,234,000.

Chicago Correspondent

Independent exhibitors in Chicago are refusing to buy the Chaplin picture, "Modern Times."

So far, it is understood, no independent city deals for the Chaplin picture have been consummated. The reasons are two. First, United Artists, which distributes the product, sold its pictures away from Balaban & Katz this season for the first time in years. Independent theatre men who bought the UA pictures had expected to get first chance at the Chaplin picture after the loop showing and in several instances exhibitors say they were promised this picture on the same release basis as the other UA product.

The other reason is that when the picture was sold to Balaban & Katz the additional seven days' clearance, which B&K staged such a battle for last fall, was granted to them for the first time.

This, it is learned, was granted B & K by the home office executives of U A and not by the local exchange.

Independent exhibitors say it was unfair to allow this extra clearance. It was the general understanding that the allowance of this extra seven days' protection would be worked out before the selling period started and, if generally accepted, would be allowed. Last fall so many deals had been made without granting the clearance to B & K that distributors did not dare to grant the extra time on any of this season's product. B & K agreed to drop the fight when advised by major distributors they would grant them the extra week with the 1936-37 product.

Circuits which have not bought the Chaplin picture and, according to reports, do not intend to do so, include Essaness, Warners, Jones, Linick and Schaefer and many others.

Downstate the picture is playing in the independent houses that bought the UA product. Here it is understood the picture was a definite part of the deal for UA pictures and bought to play on a percentage basis. Great States, the B & K affiliate, did not buy UA picture this year except in non-competitive spots.

The real action is expected to come when the picture is ready for bookings in the first-week-of-release houses.

Verbal Union Agreement

After many weeks of dickering the contract between the exhibitors and the Chicago Motion Picture Operators' Union has been set aside, and until September 1, 1936, the agreement will be a verbal one. Frank Clifford, business manager for the Chicago organization, announced that word from Washington was to the effect that no new contract be made at this time, because of the international law of the IATSE that all contracts with locals must start on September 1. The Chicago agreement, which expired on January 10, was the only local contract in the country to fall on a date other than September 1st.

Demand for a 20 per cent pay increase is dropped for the time being. Just what increase, if any, will be made in September is not revealed, Clifford said.

So great is the demand for "Rhodes" that GB says it is having a time getting enough prints to fill the damands of exhibitors in this territory.

Local exhibitors report evidences that an old and protested sales practice is returning. At a local large exchange they have been confronted with exact information of their deals with other exchanges and told just what they would have to pay to get certain pictures. This trading of information between exchanges is, they charge, most unfair.

Three weeks ago the number drawn at the Avalon theatre Banknight was that of a Mrs. Hess. The award that night was $900 but the woman was not there to claim it. The next week the award was $1,000 and the same number was drawn again! The lady was not present the second time but she did appear the third week to see someone else get the $1,100. The management gave Mrs. Hess a consolation prize—a six months' pass to the theatre. And it's good on Banknights. The 10,000 attendance set a house record.

Study Diesel Engines For Theatre Use

David Weinstock has been authorized by the Independent Theatre Owners of America to make a survey of New York theatres contemplating installation of Diesel-powered generators. The action followed failure to obtain reductions in theatre rates from the New York Edison company. An exhibitor organization representative said that theatre men installing Diesel engines would be guaranteed light and power at a cost not exceeding one cent per kilowatt hour, as compared with the prevailing rates of five and six cents.

Maurice Fleischman, chairman of the board, presided at the meeting which authorized the survey.

Coast Independents Plan Booking Office

Independent exhibitors in the Los Angeles territory are laying plans for formation of a cooperative booking office.

Distributors are said to favor the idea as enabling them to make deals that otheriwse would be unprofitable.

A meeting of the exhibitors will be held within the next few weeks. Such an office will not affect the Independent Theatre Owners or any other independent exhibitor organization, it was said.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SWEAT ALONE WON'T DO IT

It's all a personal opinion of course but being as the world has never been overrun with lightning-fast thinkers capable of spontaneously generating smart selling ideas, there has always been propaganda afloat to put over the solid virtues of honest labor to make it more palatable.

Thus when the world was younger, the good old copybooks were rife with such maxims as "Genius is one-tenth inspiration and nine-tenths perspiration." "Genius is an infinite capacity for taking pains"—the slant being that great ideas were not produced only by flashes of inspiration, that most anyone could by conscientious toil become a fast thinker and mental prodigy.

Well, without any desire on our part to sink a carping harpoon into the backside of good honest labor, we venture to opinionate that while a lot of sweating is necessary to work out the machinery of a worthwhile idea—its concept is purely mental. If one's brain is not equipped to turn out the sock angles every moment of the day, then no amount of pick and shovel work can gear up the ole thinker to the desired lightning speed.

Support for this theory comes almost daily to your Round Table in the form of profit campaigns touched off by ideas that bubble up spontaneously in the minds of agile-brained theatremen. Without pointing to any one or two particular instances, it may be said that showmen more than any other class of worker are gifted with the talent for cooking up those fancy ideas, the speedy and profitable execution of which causes wonder and muttering among supposed fast-thinkers in other lines.

Of course your theatreman works hard if not harder to make his thoughts saleable but in most instances he is thrice blessed by the possession of a mental machinery that first produces the selling idea.

MANAGERS ALSO THRILL

It has been said that one gets the greatest kick out of doing something for other people and thus it must be so that theatremen have frequent occasion to appear in the pleasurable role of benefactor. Much has been said on this page of the prominent part played by the manager in the relief of the underprivileged. More and with pleasure is to be said.

In this issue is recounted the thrill experienced by Round Tabler Hugh Martin, of the Ritz, in Valdosta, Georgia, in acting as host to some 200 school children brought from a rural community in the surrounding hills and which boasts no theatre of its own. Half of the children had never been away from their homes, fully three-quarters had never seen a motion picture.

"That's the part that was hard for me to believe, but it's true," writes Martin, "for I faced every one of the bright-eyed kids on the way in—and know. Some were afraid to enter, pulling back from their older sisters and brothers, although I had all the house lights on. Some were in overalls and barefooted. . . . You can just bet I'll repeat this soon and give the little souls something to talk about now as Santa Claus is beginning to get old with a lot of them. . . ."

There is no denying the tough grind that accompanies the routine of the average day at the theatre. But many of the harsh lines of monotony are brushed away when managers can respond so readily and get so genuine a personal kick out of making a Great Day possible in the lives of so many deserving children.

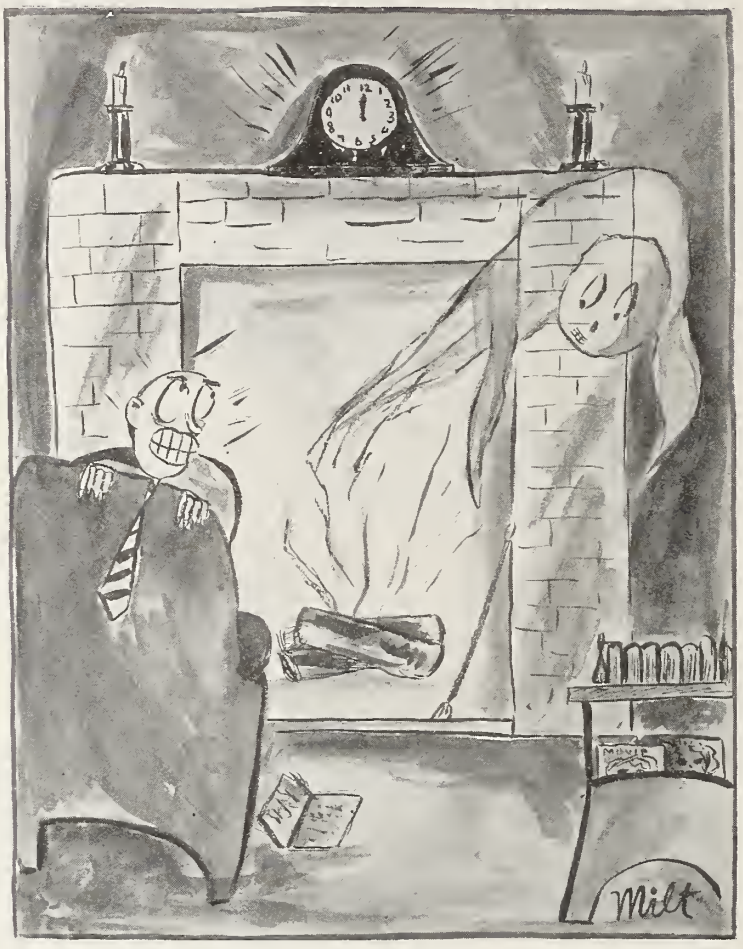
A WOMAN'S AUXILIARY?

To encourage women concerned with theatre operation, the young ladies attached to Walt Davis' personnel at the Capitol, in Regina, Canada, have proposed the formation of a woman's auxiliary of the Round Table.

Turned loose by Davis some time back to do their durndest on an exploitation campaign at the theatre, the Misses Warner-Davis, Graham, Summers and Williams scored high and were duly credited for their accomplishments. Now gals want "in" saying that there should be some outlet for their ambitions outside of ushering and ticket-selling.

The Chair therefore (and quite timidly, too), will entertain a motion for further discussion of the question.



And don't say we didn't warn you, girls.

If any of the readers are feeling unduly fretful or out of kilter, immediately is to be recommended a reading of that very amusing script entitled "A Day in the Life of a Press Agent" and authored by Round Tabler Mort Goodman, of Warner Theatres' Cleveland publicity staff. Maybe Mort has a few copies left—we refuse to lend ours.

Newspapers, governors, police department, traffic courts, auto clubs and a host of other contacts are recommended for exploitation on M-G-M's "Hit and Run Driver" short put out by Herb Morgan of Howard Dietz's department. Short publicity stories, one column mats and lobby photos are also recommended.

In view of the many safety drives being put on, pressbook covers sufficient number of angles to either hook in with these drives or to encourage theatremen to inaugurate them as part of the advance buildup.

Rural School Kids See First Picture

Nearly 200 children, including many who had never seen a motion picture, were brought from the nearby rural community of Lakeland to Valdosta, Ga., to attend a special showing at the Ritz, arranged by Manager Hugh Martin on "Littlest Rebel."

Lakeland, some 22 miles from Valdosta, is off the paved roads and boasts no picture show. The idea for the screening came from one of the teachers, who queried Martin on the possibility of putting on the special show for the pupils in the first, second and third grades—to be put on in the morning before the house opened. When Hugh discovered that 75 per cent of the youngsters had never seen a motion picture and that half of them had never been out of their small community, he readily agreed.

The kids, brought in by special busses, were ushered in by the Round Tabler, who, before the showing, explained the operation of the screen, sound equipment, stage equipment, etc.

The show was successful in all respects with the youngsters, says Martin, properly thrilled by the occasion. Page one stories were carried in the local press and Hugh says he got sufficient of a kick out of the proceedings to arrange another show of the same kind in the near future.

Kunze Goes to Town On 24-Hour Notice

Short time back there was much of a to-do on the occasion of some boys in a New England CCC camp who had been carried out to sea on ice floes and rescued by a coast guard cutter which makes its base at Plymouth, Mass. The newsreels covered the rescue and as the event was shown in the Paramount News at both the Old Colony and Plymouth, skippered by Manager Paul W. Kunze, this Round Tabler with but 24 hours' notice, put together a fine advance campaign.

Paul was able to crack both local weekly papers with page one stories in one and also received coverage with printed heralds distributed by newsboys. One of the papers helped out also by making available a window display of posters and stores also cooperated.

For the last night of the showing, Kunze arranged personal appearance of the captain and executive officer of the cutter, the seamen speaking of the rescue. They were introduced by chairman of board of selectmen, the civic body throwing a dinner in honor of the officers in addition.

In view of the fact that Kunze's theatres were first to show the newsreel rescue, and that the officers were to attend, the Boston papers also carried stories and announced it over news broadcasts. Box office reacted favorably, reports Paul, with no extra expense other than printing of heralds, posters and lobby stuff.

KRENDEL, SAUNDERS TOP FEBRUARY LISTS

FP-Canadian Theatreman Voted Quigley Silver; Bronze Plaque Goes to Bridgeport Loew-ite

by A-MIKE VOGEL

For the second time in the history of the Quigley Competitions the royal colors of the Dominion of Canada wave bravely from the top of the pole with the announcement that the Quigley Silver Plaque for February has been voted to a Toronto showman.

Dan Krendel, manager of Famous Players - Canadian's Tivoli Theatre, wins, and wins ably, with a splendid second-run campaign on Universal's "Magnificent Obsession". And following Dan closely across the line is Matt Saunders, manager of Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, Conn., in Harry Shaw's division, Matt outstepping the rest of the field for the Bronze honors on MGM's "Rose Marie".

Although both Dan and Matt have previously taken down Quigley Mentions, this is the first time their efforts have been voted the top honors. Especial attention is called to the status of Krendel's entry—a subsequent-run campaign and chosen almost unanimously by the Judging Committee for the Silver. This selection is stressed for the purpose of again reminding theatremen in other than first-run situations that the Awards are voted to campaigns for their excellence irrespective of their origins.

"ROSE MARIE"

Rose Marie, perennial favorite, has been raised to a new high in popularity by the stars, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy. New "star" patterns recently added to the Alexander Smith line of theatre carpets should greatly increase the popularity of this perennial favorite with theatre owners throughout the country.

ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

Ace Ballys, Fronts Used By Charninsky

Among the more active Round Tablers is of course to be counted Louie Charninsky, skipper of the Capitol, Dallas who is always thinking up some new gag to bring folks to his boxoffice. From some recent campaigns reported by Louie are set down the highlights of his activities.

Electric Gags for "Invisible Ray"

Drive on this Universal was started three weeks ahead with much more newspaper space than usual and publicity planted in papers within a 50 mile radius. In addition to house trailers, one-frame flashes were planted in newsreels of all local Interstate Theatres.

Out front, art heads from the 24-sheet were placed across entire arch with stars and title in ten foot letters, and yellow bulbs placed in sockets of Karloff's eyes worked on a flasher. Background was deep green with green gelatine sheets on lobby spots for further effect.

For street and lobby bally, man wore specially built helmet and black cape (see photo). Spark coil and buzzer concealed under cloak were controlled by push buttons in his hands, helmet insulated against shock. Spark coil was run off an A battery that hung from belt.

Also interesting was electrical display borrowed from power company and local university, high voltage transformers obtained to produce climbing spark as in the picture. For this, table with insulated legs was used and glassed-in case for climbing spark.

Goes Circus on "Oakley"

For advance bally on "Annie Oakley", Louis promoted band wagon from circus wintering locally. Wagon was decorated with bunting and cutouts and on stand in center was placed long-haired buckskin-costumed girl holding rifle. Band playing circus numbers helped to attract attention, the outfit being hauled round town by old, model Ford. At stops "annie oakleys" were distributed and now and then a real pass.

Charninsky's "Invisible Ray" Bally

For further buildup, Charninsky himself participated wearing his famed 10-gallon hat given to him by Tom Mix, other details of Louie's costume being buckskin jacket and high hip boots. In the parade also was Maxine his daughter in costume and riding a pony. Riding at the head of the parade were members of local woman's riding club accoutered in riding habits, many of the riders being Dallas socialites.

In addition to ushers and cashiers in Indian and cavalry costumes, Louie's front was thoroughly in keeping (see photo on picture page) with tent material covering outside and inside lobby. Sawdust, popcorn, red lemonade, etc., were all on tap with various freaks and barkers.

Sporting stores all carried windows including targets shot at by leading marksmen and one display carried interesting antique firearms as contrasted with modern high powered rifles. To local members of the National Rifle Ass'n were addressed letters informing them of the date.

Starts "Tailspin Tommy Club"

Local Dallas juveniles are not neglected by Charninsky who finds kid clubs very profitable. His lastest is a 12-week Tailspin Tommy Club to tie in on "Great Air Mystery" serial. Youngsters are allowed in for wrappers of special candy bar sold for five cents at Louie's lobby candy store which nets him a tidy return on the special offer.

For serial opening city was blanketed with heralds, the club plugged with special trailers, lobby posters and newspaper publicity. For the first time, Louie reports, local daily tied in by running banner across bottom of the Sunday full page Tailspin comic strip.

Other Exploitations

Some of Charninsky's slants on other dates included man made up as Mr. Hyde for bally on his rerun of 'Dr. Jykll and Mr. Hyde", engineer in costume ringing locomotive bell on "Whispering Smith" and a jungle lobby with stuffed animals for "Fang and Claw" was done realistically enough to bring a lot of the folks around.

WHEN YOUR HOUSE LIGHTS GO OUT

What happens in your theatre when the lights go out? No, this isn't one of those biblical questions, it refers to a situation we all have to meet, that of having your house suddenly go dark.

Possibly other theatres have the same system we use at the Capitol. The moment the power is off, two emergency lights located on either side of the booth flare up with sufficient light to illuminate the entire auditorium. The light is made possible by the use of two old lamp house reflectors plus two exciting lamps and a wiring arrangement to the "A" batteries in the booth.

Of course, the illumination of the theatre is important, but when the lights go dead, do you think of sending someone with a flashlight out to the cashier's booth, to stand guard, while the lights are out? It's an idea that might prevent a hold-up.—JACK FINK, Manager, Capitol, Miami, Fla., in Wometco's "CONTACT."

Warner-ites Report Recent Activities

What some of his boys have been doing lately up in that busy sector is detailed by R. E. Crabill, Warner Theatres Jamestown district manager, with reports from the Winter Garden and Palace, in Jamestown, and the Keeney, in Elmira. Here's some of what the boys did:

Straw Hat and Sleigh Gags

That was Manager Walter League, at the Palace, Jamestown, who on "Last of the Pagans" had a man on the streets dressed in white suit and straw hat outfit, with the weather around zero. His back banner read: "I may be a nut but I'm not going to miss," etc., etc. Then to switch the pace, Walter dug up a bannered horse-drawn sleigh to make the folks feel more at home.

League also hooked in with safety drive put on by police and newspaper by offering guest tickets to careful drivers. Stunt went over so well that officials are continuing it on other pictures, building it with announcements over regular police broadcasts. Telegrams addressed to local prominents and dropped in conspicuous spots and phone calls to school and scout officials were other slants on the campaign in which Walter was aided by MGM exploiteer Jack Gilmore.

Screen Picture for Blind

Every number in the book was called by cashiers at the Winter Garden, Jamestown, on the campaign for "Magnificent Obsession" put together by Sander Lazar and Wallace Folkins. And for top newspaper break, the boys put on a special screening for local blind, slant handled discreetly and reacting favorably.

Book marks distributed by libraries and house-to-house herald stunt worked through newsboys' club were other slants. Ads were distinguished by quotes from prominents who had attended invitation showing.

Allen's Premiere for "Ceiling Zero"

Plenty of that Hollywood stuff was put across by Manager Wally Allen at the Keeney, Elmira, on "Ceiling Zero," one of his last campaigns there before moving over to Ohio to join the Schine forces. Opening was featured by appearances of Mayor, other city officials, officials of local airports and American Airways, club presidents, etc.

BLACK AND WHITE. Was the color scheme used by R. D. Leatherman, Rialto, Denison, Tex., for "Littlest Rebel," with predominating figures of Temple and Boles topping the display.

Degenhart Arranges Fifth Anniversary

To celebrate the fifth anniversary of E. E. Alger's Peru Theatre, in Peru, Ill., Manager Degenhart, who also handles publicity for four other of the circuit houses, put together a campaign topped by a resolution of congratulation from the Mayor.

Week ahead both local papers broke out with double-truck congratulatory co-op plus page one stories and photos of Mr. Alger and the manager. Also carried were pictures of theatre and group shot of personnel. Opening attraction of the week was "Thanks a Million" and this was used as tag line for the drive and to express appreciation for local patronage.

One of the publicity highlights was 18-page souvenir program, well written and laid out. Contents were history of circuit and photos with dope on the pictures of the week and a lot of congratulatory ads, Degenhart realizing sufficient revenue to pay all costs.

Special giveaways included electric range, coupons which were given with admissions and also to those paying light and water bills during that time. Other gifts also were given. Theatre was especially decorated with banners, streamers, and all ads carried out the anniversary week idea along the bigger and better lines.

Bridge Contest Suggested In "Colleen" Pressbook

On "Colleen," Warner's pressbook is featuring the Lektrolite. Merchants carrying complete line of these lighters have been notified of playdates and supplied with counter cards, etc.

It is further suggested that managers arrange with local bridge club to hold public bridge contest on mezzanine of theatre during showing. Winner to receive a Lectrolite bridge set, which should be donated by cooperating merchant.

Arnold's Car Parade

Tying in with local auto dealer H. J. Arnold, Indiana Theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., for "Anything Goes" staged a parade of cars each of which was bannered with theatre copy and playdates.

COLLEGIATE CURTAIN. Each of the schools in the vicinity of Whiting, Ind., were well represented with pennants on Hal Grady's curtain at the Hoosier Theatre for "Collegiate."

Prescription Blank Sells "Capt. Blood" for Sloane

Using different slant of the prescription idea for "Capt. Blood" Joe Sloan, Tuxedo Theatre, Brighton Beach, L. I., worked out regular prescription blank illustrated above using star's name as M. D., etc. Local printer made up the regular form which was then run through mimeograph giving impression of being printed.

Completed forms were distributed in all drug stores, restaurants and subway stations. Tieup was also made with druggists to place the "prescriptions" in all packages leaving stores.

Shock Stuff

Jack Sampson, publicist Winter Garden Theatre, Seattle for "Crime of Dr. Crespi" decorated foyer with army cot covered with white sheet, table with smelling salts, and other medical aids. Two nurses in attendance would occasionally walk up and down in front of theatre to attract attention, and aspirins in imprinted envelopes were distributed as heart stimulants.

"Collegiate" Gals Sell Date for Emerson

Taking advantage of the fact that 12 girls who were in "Collegiate" passed through Omaha from Hollywood on their way to fulfill an engagement in England, Ted Emerson, at the Omaha Theatre there, had newspaper reporters and cameramen at the station, thus garnering some extra breaks.

Teaser ads were run in dailies, i. e. "Uncle Charlie, please come home. Dinner is cold and you've already sat through three performances of" etc., etc. Cash prize was offered member of service staff selling largest number of tickets, hit tunes were plugged over radio station in addition to a contest in which tickets were awarded first six people daily calling in correct list of orchestrations played during broadcast.

Managers Preparing To Welcome Easter

With the Lenten season upon us, it is not too early to begin thinking of plans for Easter that follows. Managers here and there are already planning their celebrations and as most of the drives will include some of the old reliables—what the boys did last year is briefly detailed. Here are a few that brought returns.

The Juvenile Easter Show

There were a flock of these put over last year with managers tying in with local dancing schools and staging their own revues. As the amateur show idea still flourishes this form of entertainment will not be neglected. Theatremen are hooking in with radio amateur hours and intend having the best of the children who appear on these broadcasts act in the theatre Easter show.

Egg Hunt Again Popular

Nothing much that is new can be said of the egg hunt, a honey for publicity and good buildup when handled properly. Newspapers are often tied in, city officials go for it and prizes are promoted without difficulty. The operation of this idea has been published in these pages and from their files, managers can dig up the necessary information.

Showmen have been putting on the egg hunt with their kid clubs, Rotary, Kiwanis, etc., staging the stunt at some central spot, city park, etc. Participants can be assembled at theatre and parade to the hunt with police escort. Bands, banners and other attention-getters are also suggested.

Candy eggs and other prizes are usually promoted with most interest among children aroused when arrangements are made for every youngster to get an egg, prize winner or not.

Easter Lobby a Draw

Of course the cutout bunnies and colored eggs are traditional for this form of decoration and managers who desire more atmosphere have also used live chicks and bunnies, for giveaways from the stage. For advance when used these are caged or penned in lobbies and precautions taken for proper handling.

Style Shows Effective

Theatremen who have put on Easter style shows find them sufficiently profitable to repeat this year. Show is tied in with leading stores which furnish clothes to be worn by local girls.

For more entertainment, style shows have been combined with singing and dancing numbers and as is often the case, co-op pages with ads of participating merchants have been obtained to stimulate interest.

Flower Tieups

The many florist hookins are applicable especially for Easter and these might include lobby floral shows, florists tieup windows and displays. The Florists' Telegraph Delivery Ass'n has been doing a lot of theatre and picture exploitation in the last year and this slant might be looked into wherever possible for the current celebration.

In parts of the country where climate makes it possible, managers have also encouraged tieups with garden clubs and such like as extra aids and publicity buildups for their Easter flower tieups.

VARIOUS IDEAS FROM THE FIELD

BANNERED STREET CAR. Not used for some time and therefore quite novel in Sandusky, Ohio, was this street car stunt arranged by Manager J. J. Scholer, Warners' Ohio. 24-sheets were placed on each side of the car which traversed all the city routes in advance and during the run.

WILD WEST FRONT. Front on "Annie Oakley" arranged by Manager Louie Charninsky for date at the Capitol, Dallas, was typically circus. For atmosphere there was Sitting Bull, Oakley impersonator, midget, mechanical man and barker. Sawdust covered the sidewalk and red lemonade was served.

GIANT CHAPLIN HEADS. Manager John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, used a Chaplin impersonator on "Modern Times" and also worked a variation of the slant by having men carry giant cutout heads of the star about town. Picture and theatre copy was lettered atop the famed derby.

TRANSPARENT SETPIECE. Another of the excellent lobby art pieces created by Rod Collier and Toby Joyce at the Stanley, Baltimore. Background is in keeping with the picture with title and stars cutout and backed with white to allow light from behind. Star figures are set several feet in front of display.

LAUGH LOBBY DISPLAY. To carry out theme of the picture, on "Bride Comes Home," Manager J. G. Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, spotted the above ahead in his lobby to show some of the presents the newlyweds received. Note boxing gloves, rolling pin, scrubbing brush, etc.

"FLEET" FILM AIR DELIVERY. Rushed to Louisville by air from Chicago was print of "Follow the Fleet" for date at Brown Theatre. Film was met by U. S. Navy officials with motorcycle cops clearing the way. Vic Sicilia and Kolman Hirschman, of the theatre, carried through for excellent returns.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We have been hearing a whole lot about "A Tale of Two Cities" of late, and we went to the Moon theatre to see it. We are somewhat in doubt about this picture pleasing the small town audiences as some others do, but we regard it as a splendid production, partly from its historical value and because of the splendid cast.

When they put Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allen, Henry B. Walthall, Blanche Yurka, Claude Gillingwater, Tully Marshall, Edna May Oliver, and several other excellent players in one picture you can count on its being a good one. The director must have had a pretty good knowledge of ancient history of the foreign countries when he depicted a mob violence of an enraged people.

The picture will cause one to be thankful that he lives in a country where conditions are righted by the peaceful ballot rather than by mob violence. This picture should be shown in every theatre for the lesson it teaches, if for nothing else.

We were especially pleased with the picture because of Henry B. Walthall, and when we saw him in it we were reminded of the time when we used to shoot grouse with him up in Cherry county, Nebraska, but that was back before there were "silver threads among the gold," although we both had black hair at that time. In our immature judgment we would say that it is a picture well worth showing.

We have just received a very delightful letter from Mrs. J. G. Heywood, secretary treasurer of the Heywood Amusement Co. of New Richmond, Wisconsin, and enclosing their check and asking us to have their subscription to the HERALD renewed. Thanks, Mrs. Heywood, your check is now on its way to the HERALD unless it is stuck in a snow drift somewhere. She says: "We have been holding this check hoping you would call on us." She also intimates that Wisconsin is the only place where there is cold weather. If that is true, Wisconsin folk ought to be eating walrus meat and living in igloos.

Out here we have had 33 days of subzero weather and last night it was 25 below. One man told us that his wife had to break the icicles off the teakettle spout before she could get hot water to make coffee for breakfast. That sounds a whole lot like T. F. Lee of Shulesburg or that boy Roob over at Port Washington, Wisconsin.

We are told by press and radio that spring is on its way. That may be true, but it is going to find it mighty tough traveling unless they get the drifts off the highways. Our advice to the folks living down in the lower Mississippi river country would be to take to the hills, for when this snow starts to melt and flood the streams, they are going to see more water than they ever saw before, for this entire middlewest will bear a striking resemblance to the Atlantic ocean, unless our knowledge of H_2O is a little out of plumb.

We also received a check from F. A. Van Housen of the Western Theatre Supply Co. of Omaha and his letter asking us to renew his subscription to the HERALD. You betcha, Van, we have done it, and we hope you won't shed your red flannels until it is time to go swimming in the Missouri, unless possibly you might want to take a bath, which we doubt very much.

In speaking of the weather, the Omaha World-Herald says editorially that it will be "Unfair and colder." This reminds us to say that we'd be willing to kiss a sow pig if we could see May Allison in "Fair and Warmer" again.

We read that an eminent doctor advises people to eat crow, claiming that crow meat is finer and better than chicken meat. All right, doctor, you eat crow and we'll stick to a young Plymouth Rock pullet. Some people eat frog legs, some eat lobster, some eat muskrats, some eat eels and still others fried bull snake, so why not try crow?

When we think of the number of our favorite actors who have been removed from the screen, some by age and some by death, it makes us wonder if the efforts of Major Bowes to develop young talent, for both stage and screen, are being appreciated as they should be.

His radio programs are a major factor in making the radio worthwhile. We wish we had more of them.

There is a constant wail going up all over the country against the ever mounting tax bills, and Congress is having a hemorrhage trying to find new ways of taxing the people. There is only one way of reducing taxes, and that's by reducing the expenditure of money. You can't continually draw water out of a barrel without pouring some in at the top. The country ought to establish an 8th grade in congress.

If you think that the theatres haven't been having a struggle to keep their theatres open the last 30 days, it is because you are not operating a theatre. Many of the smaller houses have had to close on account of lack of patronage, some because of lack of fuel and some because of an order from the city councils in order to conserve coal for the needy. Yet in spite of these drawbacks people will wade snowdrifts and brave frigid weather to see a picture show.

We can assign but two reasons for this: one that they are tired of being shut in at home for so long a time, and the other being that they can go and see a two-hour picture program in a warm theatre for 25 cents. They realize that when they can see a picture program for 25 cents it is the best and cheapest entertainment that can be had. It is even better and cheaper than paying 45 cents a pound for bacon, as we did yesterday.

A fellow writing to the Omaha World-Herald from Hyannis, Nebraska, about the cold weather out there, says that the jackrabbits are wearing ear muffs and overshoes and the coyotes are roosting with the chickens in the hen houses. Geemynently kraut, they've got us beat for cold weather. Here in this part of Nebraska it has gotten so warm, compared with Hyannis, that we have stopped using icicles to start the fire with.

If they will stop loading the picture industry down with taxes and not hamstring it with censorship we believe it will come out all right. It is able to stand a lot, even politicians.

Maybe that this will be enough.

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR

OUR COUNTRY DOCTORS

Maybe you have already seen the film story of the Country Doctor with the Dionne Quintuplets. If not, we advise you to try to see this beautiful, wholesome picture of truth and romance, of laughter and tears when it comes to Newark in the near future.

When we read that Joseph Schenck and Darryl Zanuck, heads of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Company, were to produce a moving picture which would include for the first time action pictures of the famous Dionne Quintuplets, we thought as others did that it would be a lengthy news reel of these famous babies.

Well, of course, the five little girls are shown and it is thrilling to see these happy, healthy youngsters in their pleasant surroundings.

But there is another part of this picture which is responsible for the tears and the heart throbs which alternate with the smiles and laughter. And that is the part which describes the effort almost for existence by a Country Doctor who is pictured as the counterpart of Doctor Dafoe, who has reared these youngsters since their arrival on earth.

One has but to be reminded that in all recorded history these are the only quintuplets who lived beyond birth and one needs but see, as illustrated in this film, what humble facilities this Doctor Dafoe and thousands of Country Doctors all over America have to help them in their efforts to keep their fellow citizens alive and well.

We read of famous specialists, usually at the head of great hospitals who accomplish so much today in their splendid profession, but we rarely hear of the small-town physician, the general practitioner, who is called in for every conceivable sickness.

They do not ask—will there be a large fee or any fee? They do not have office hours from 11:00 to 1:00. They are called at 3:00 P. M. or 3:00 A. M., sometimes driving miles through storm and sleet. Often the most humble and poor call for them and the Doctor knows when he hurriedly rushes to the patient that the small fee may not be paid for months, if at all.

There is a great story told in this grand screen play. The sight of the Doctor, the Nurse, the Priest, all helping the ill is not only a story of tears but a story of truths. For what occurred in the little Canadian outpost where the quintuplets were born occurs every day in villages and small cities throughout our own country.

And it gives us a thrill as we are reminded of those who still live unselfishly a life of devotion toward their neighbors and toward all humanity.

No large hospitals, no modern equipment, no large fees exist for these Doctors, but they carry on night and day and few know their troubles for they try always to give encouragement and that can best be done with smiles.

We thought the Country Doctor with the little quintuplets would be a picture just for mother and sister but we were wrong. Every man, woman and child will be better for having seen this screen production, and doctors and ministers will become better known to us all and perhaps will receive greater encouragement from those fortunates who can afford it.

In this modern age we need the lessons this picture so vividly portrays, "lest we forget!"

UNCLE SAM'S SHOW

THINKING in just a lightsome, casual way about the influence of faraway Turkey on the screen's plans for "Musa Dagh" and such matters of international politics and amity, one may regard with particular interest the current activities of Uncle Sam with his Works Progress Administration in the show business, now preparing to buy and produce a play entitled "Class of '29."

The script is quoted as including in a "Red" scene dialogue as follows:

> "KEN: A Soviet poster compared with an American advertising lithograph is like a Soviet film compared with the stuff that they grind out of Hollywood.
> "MARTIN: By God, you're right. It's the same in all the arts.
> "LAURA (hysterically jovial): 'Fess up, Ken. Who's been taking you to American movies?
> "KEN: I still remember the ones I saw during Hoover's administration. You don't mean they've changed them?
> "MARTIN: Only the revolution will change that tripe."

That, one is to suppose, is just entertainment.

YEARNING FOR TROUBLE

ONE of the most worn of the adages is: "Experience is a dear school but fools will learn in no other." The sage who set that down did not, however, supply his opinion of those who would not learn by experience either.

This week in Washington we have had the continuing spectacle of a group of persons participating in, and holding common interests with, the motion picture industry, engaged in effect in inviting special government supervision and invasion of the affairs of the screen.

All about are ample evidences of the results of governmental administration of American industry, from the long continued plight and problems of the railways where executive initiative has been inhibited for more than two decades, down to the radio broadcasting industry operating under the thumb of a bureauracracy the like of which never before ruled any channel of expression in these once sovereign states.

And if that were not enough, we have the spectacle of the United States Government, or shall we say the current Administration, engaged in the show business, buying plays and staging them, with an exhibition of administrative inconsistency no less than tragic in its ridiculousness.

None or all of existing abuses or possibilities of abuses in the trade practices of the motion picture industry under the present state of the law can possibly contain the menace involved in the movement which contemplates delivery of rule of the screen into the hands of government bureaucrats.

THE GAMBLE

THE diligent Mr. Red Kann, editor of our esteemed contemporary, Motion Picture Daily, and now discreetly spending stormy March in sunny Hollywood, records that Mr. Louis B. Mayer "would completely overturn the existing order of sales . . . fix the exhibitor's profit . . . guarantee him his net . . . set up a rising scale—after the theatre's end—and compute the distributor's earnings from that point on . . . in other words place the gamble on the distributor, not the exhibitor, and let the draw of the product determine the issue. . . ."

That Mr. Mayer's revolutionary notion has its elements of merit, especially where he sits as a maker of pictures extraordinary, is not to be disputed. Clearly it is addressed at getting a larger share of the profits of bigger hits for the picture makers, larger encouragement and reward for better efforts.

However, it will be equally obvious that many exhibitor showmen, probably most of them, are motivated and inspired with interest and enterprise in their business by that same speculative margin and lure of the hit product. The inevitable tendency in all enterprise is to limit the rate of reward to the rate of risk. It is most likely that the speculative margin, which creates the interest, never will be successfully eliminated from any phase of the show business.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Fake Accidents

A sweeping nationwide drive is under way against the fraudulent accident claim racket which exacts a toll of $2,000,000 a year from theatres. Exaggerated and false claims for injuries have increased public liability insurance rates for theatres by as much as 300 per cent.

In New York, Kansas City and elsewhere exhibitors are cooperating with the authorities in stamping out the racket, and convictions have resulted.

New rates, however, have not shown a decrease, while there has been a reduction in the number of claims. The nationwide situation, together with a tabulation of new rates for theatres, will be found in the story starting on page 19.

Equity Flareup

Ashes of the bitter controversy between the administration forces of the Actors Equity Association and members of the dissolved Actors Forum group blazed again and flared momentarily this week when 709 Equity members met at the Hotel Astor to select a nominating committee to prepare the regular ticket for Equity councilors which will be presented at the annual election late in May or early in June. It was over the procedure involved in this step that Frank Gillmore, Equity president, and Philip Loeb, councilor and a spokesman for the former Forum, clashed once more.

Following the attempt by Mr. Loeb to change the method of voting on the candidates the election of the nominating committee was almost a formality. The six chosen to prepare the "regular" or administration ticket were Edmund Breese, Jerome Cowan, Katherine Emmet, Franklyn Fox, Claudia Morgan and Selena Royle. Three others, appointed by the council, are Leo Curley, Effie Shannon and Blanche Yurka.

Overage Ruling

Likely to have a widespread effect on the designation of percentage arrangements by distributors, say attorneys, is a decision given in the New York supreme court Wednesday upholding the contention that overages may be computed on pictures in a group rather than individually.

The ruling, from which Twentieth Century-Fox plans to appeal, was given in a case brought against Springer and Cocalis circuit and is applicable to a similar action filed against Consolidated circuit. It would make the distributor's overage on a group of designated pictures dependent on the earnings of the entire group, rather than the earnings of each picture.

Fox sued on a 1934-35 contract for 58 pictures at a flat rental of $2,750 a picture for 30 S. and C. theatres. The contract stipulated that "on six pictures to be allocated by Fox the distributor shall receive a 50 per cent overage." Fox sued for $18,000 plus interest.

The exhibitor defendant admitted a profit on two of the six pictures allocated for the overage, but said a loss on the other four offset the gain. It claimed the right of cumulative accounting for the six. Judge Cunningham of Rochester agreed.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, and subsidiaries, showed a net profit of $403,073 and B. F. Keith Corporation, and subsidiaries, a net profit of $464,644.94 for the year ending December 31, 1935, it was announced Wednesday.

KAO's income during the period was $14,601,060.80. Expenses, before depreciation and amortization, were $12,757,430.71. B. F. Keith had an income of $9,974,630.03 and its expenses were $8,453,069.70.

Flood Losses

The business of the motion picture distribution and exhibition suffered with all others this week by the eastern floods estimated to have caused damages amounting to some $35,000,000. In some places exhibition was paralyzed, especially in the Pittsburgh and Johnstown, Pa., areas.

Upstate New York continued under flood waters and whole sections of Connecticut, Maryland and Virginia were inundated.

Distributors in New York were unable to ascertain the extent to which the picture business is suffering because in the areas hardest hit all methods of communication with the outside were destroyed by the raging waters.

"Theatres suffering millions of dollars in damages in eastern Pennsylvania flooded area," wired Charles Leith, QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS correspondent on the scene. The Stanley, Penn, Pitt, and Fulton Penn in Pittsburgh were under 10 feet of water, while houses elsewhere in the area were covered by 18 feet of water. There was no indication how soon they could reopen.

Exchanges in Washington stopped all deliveries to the Shenandoah and upper Potomac River valleys. Theatres in the Cumberland, Md., area were under 10 feet of water and delivery trucks were marooned on the highways there and near Martinsburg, W. Va. As a result, prints could not be returned to exchanges, and service to houses not affected by the raging waters was jeopardized.

Newsreel crews went into action Tuesday and were operating from the air.

Rigid Inspection

Two recent projection room fires in Greater Boston, at the Olympia in Somerville and the Mattapan, Mattapan, are understood spurring the state Department of Public Safety to fresh efforts in making a survey of the 16-year-old film safety regulations in Massachusetts. George Parsons, chief of inspectors, is in charge of the investigation.

The fight by union projectionists against adoption of the 2,000-foot reel took a new turn in Boston when rules against the new standard were offered for consideration by the union.

A thorough inspection of all theatres in the Brooklyn and Queens boroughs of New York has been started by the fire department and 12 inspectors have been assigned to cover the 1,102 theatres, night clubs, dance halls and other amusement places listed by the department.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Woolf Deal

A complete interchange of talent, story material and technicians between Universal and General Film Distributors is expected under the terms of the C. M. Woolf organization's participation in Standard Capital's acquisition of the company from Carl Laemmle, the London company said Wednesday, according to a cable from Bruce Allan from MOTION PICTURE HERALD London offices. This is in addition to the deal for the distribution of all Universal product, including the newsreel, by GFD in the United Kingdom and worldwide distribution of a selected number of GFD pictures by Universal.

Details of J. Cheever Cowdin's taking up of the option on Universal held by his Standard Capital Corporation are to be found on page 21.

Deciding

Federal Judge William Bondy Monday in New York reserved decision on an application for a stay of execution of an order fining William Fox $235,000 and $10,000 in attorney fees for contempt of court, and directing that Mr. Fox be taken into custody until the fine was paid.

The stay was sought by Mr. Fox's attorneys, Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker, who said that papers for a writ of certiorari were now being prepared to appeal the punishment order to the United States Supreme court. If the stay is granted Mr. Fox would not be subject to arrest in New York while his appeal was pending before the Supreme court.

Sensation

A fight with the New York state censor board over approval of "Ecstasy" is anticipated by Eureka Productions, Inc., which also is involved in a court battle with Metropolis Pictures, Inc., over use of the title.

Sam Cummins, general manager of Eureka, this week said that the board has seen "Ecstasy" a couple of times but no decision has been made. The board said officially that the picture "has not been licensed," and nothing more. Mr. Cummins declared that if the board refused a permit he would take the fight to the highest court.

A member of the censor board said that its regulations prevented disclosing whether a picture had been passed or rejected, but merely whether a license had been issued.

The National Board of Review also has taken two looks at the picture and a decision is awaited.

On Friday the appellate division of the New York supreme court will hear arguments by Eureka counsel that Joan of Arc Pictures, Inc., and S. S. Krellberg, operators of the Bijou Theatre, Metropolis Pictures and Martin J. Lewis, president, should be held in contempt of court for failure of the theatre to remove the word "Ecstasy" from the advertising of a film now called "Young Love" until more than 24 hours until after a temporary injunction so ordering was handed down by Justice Untermyer.

Also in the appellate division, on April 6 there will be an airing of Eureka's charges that Metrooplis appropriated the title "Ecstasy" in combination with "Young Love" to mislead the public.

One of the signs outside the Bijou now bills the film owned by Metropolis as "The Sensation of Young Love."

New Certificates

Holders of "B" stock in the Radio Corporation of America are being advised that the certificates of deposit which they will receive in exchange for their stock under the company's plan of recapitalization have been listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

In making that announcement last week, David Sarnoff, president, added that the corporation had received from its counsel an opinion that stockholders exchanging their "B" stock under the plan will not realize taxable gain or deductible loss under the present Federal Revenue Act.

The corporation will issue the new First Preferred stock, bearing dividends from April 1, 1936, as soon as the recapitalization plan has been declared operative. A special meeting of stockholders to vote upon the plan has been called for April 7, the date of the annual stockholders meeting.

Charges Abuses

Federal bankruptcy statutes should be tightened because 5,000,000 small investors lost life savings totaling $20,000,000,000 through fraudulent manipulation of realty securities, Representative Adolph J. Sabath told a House Judiciary sub-committee in Washington last week.

Mr. Sabath, chairman of the House committee investigating real estate bondholders' reorganization, urged approval of his bill to prevent the alleged abuses of bondholders' protective committees. It would amend the Federal bankruptcy law to provide for a Federal conservator to pass on reorganization plans to protect investors.

Authors Sue

Because its income is insufficient to meet curent expenses, the Authors Club filed suit in the New York Supreme court Monday for permission to use part of a fund of more than $250,000 established with the aid of Andrew Carnegie for the relief of literary men and women and their families. The fund includes $200,000 left to the Authors Club in Mr. Carnegie's will.

The action is in the form of a controversy on an agreed statement of facts which, under the court rules, will be heard by the Appellate Division. The suit is brought by the Authors Club against Lucien S. Kirtland, Norbert L. Lederer and Daniel M. Henderson, members of the finance committee of the club in possession of the Carnegie fund.

Radio Ignored

Motion picture advertising budgets will continue in 1936 to practically ignore the radio as an advertising medium. Not one film company is included in Advertising Age's study of radio ad budgets of the 105 leading radio advertisers, each spending more than $100,000 in 1935 on the networks.

March of Time, as a part of Time Magazine's broadcast, is set down for a $194,871 ad budget in for 1935, as compared with $94,556 in 1934.

Comparing last year's leading magazine advertisers, Advertising Age ranked Eastman Kodak 23rd, spending $742,854 in 1935 and $884,626 in 1934; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer 54th, with a $441,116 expenditure in 1935 and $273,135 in 1934. No other motion picture company ranked within the 150 leaders.

Independents

Members of the Independent Supply Dealers' Association, Inc., have set June 4-8 as the dates for the annual convention at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago.

Ken Douglas of Boston is expected to be elected president of the association to succeed B. F. Shearer of Seattle, under the plan decided upon some time ago, a rotating presidency provides that a new man be elected to the top post each year.

Forstalled

The bill introduced by Representative Thomas A. Dorgan of Dorchester, Mass., for legislation to prohibit theatrical productions of "low moral standards or employing subversive propaganda" has been handed an adverse report by the Massachusetts Legislative Committee on Legal Affairs.

QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD WINNERS FOR 1936 ARE NAMED BY EXECUTIVES

John Armstrong, London, Wins Silver Plaque for Campaign on "Lives of Bengal Lancer" in Paramount Theatres Run

Twenty-three motion picture executives expert in the vending of motion picture entertainment foregathered at the New York Athletic Club on Tuesday, pored over twenty-four exploitation campaigns that had won silver and bronze plaques for their sponsors during 1935 and, voting by ballot, awarded the Quigley Grand Awards for primacy in showmanship to John Armstrong of London (silver) and Harry Goldberg of Philadelphia (bronze). The winners will be transported to Hollywood by Transcontinental and Western Airlines plane for presentation of the awards, a visiting round of the studios and other entertainment.

Mr. Armstrong's winning campaign was conducted in behalf of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," Paramount, at the Paramount theatres in the British capital. It was awarded the Quigley silver plaque for June.

Mr. Goldberg's winning campaign was conducted in behalf of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Warner Brothers, at the Chestnut Street Opera House in the Quaker City and won the Quigley bronze plaque for October.

Executives impaneled as judges, whose names are published herewith, arrived promptly at noon and by 12:30, while bands outside blared in parading celebration of St. Patrick's Day, were engrossed in concentrated study of competitive entries compiled by showmen throughout the world and sifted out, by judicial bodies chosen monthly, of exploitation campaigns submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD by five thousand active theatre owners and managers. Exhibits were identified by number only and judges were supplied with ballots which limited them to numerical scoring.

So intent were the judges upon the work in hand that it was necessary for A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Round Table Club, to interrupt at 2 o'clock with announcement that luncheon was served and judges who had not completed their inspection of exhibits would be afforded ample time to do so afterward. On account of this gastronomically advisable intervention it was impossible to announce the winners, as formerly, at the table.

Luncheon disposed of, Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, addressed the judges briefly on the value of the exploitation function in the industry's operation and introduced Colvin Brown, vice president and general manager of Quigley Publications.

Mr. Brown paid a tribute to the men in the field for their energetic enterprise in furthering the cause of the motion picture and read the following telegram from Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and donor of the Quigley Awards for outstanding showmanship:

"I want first to acknowledge my appreciation of your interest in our efforts to promote and duly credit better exploitation methods and practices as manifested by your presence at this award luncheon. And next to explain my regret in not being present, which is due to the fact that after all arrangements for this luncheon were completed I received an emergency call to assist on a matter which vitally affects the interest of all of us. On account of the seriousness of certain last minute developments in this connection I have decided to forego our luncheon, which decision I trust you will understand and approve."

Mr. Ramsaye next introduced A-Mike Vogel, himself an outstanding exploitation man in the most rigorous and practical application of the term prior to becoming chairman of the Round Table Club, who spoke feelingly and with figures on the subject of theatre exploitation and exploitation men. Mr. Vogel revealed statistics compiled from a questionnaire circulated among monthly winners of Quigley Awards and showed that 30 per cent of the showmen acquiring this distinction in the past have received promotions or salary increases or both as a result of it and that 100 per cent have found their prestige augmented and their position in the trade enhanced.

Other than the winners and the others mentioned, the following were also considered for final honors:

Harry Crull, Loew's Valencia, Jamaica, L. I.; J. Lloyd Dearth, Capitol, Vancouver, B. C.; R. E. Knight, Warners' Fairmont, Fairmont, West Va.; Ed Douglas, Loew's Kings, Brooklyn, N. Y.; William J. Reilly, Warners' Kentucky, Henderson, Ky.; Fred C. Souttar, Lincoln, Belleville, Ill.; Bill Hendricks, Warners', Memphis, Tenn.; S. S. Holland, Elco, Elkhart, Ind.

Also Al Sindlinger, whose campaign was put over at the Warner Appleton, Appleton, Wisc.; Herb Morgan, Loew's Century, Baltimore, Md.; Chuck Shannon, Hollywood, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Sig Solomon, on his entry from the Regent, Newark, N. J.; Ralph Lawler, on his entry from the Orpheum, Springfield, Ill.; Earle M. Holden, Capitol, Atlanta, Ga.; Dick Brown, Rowland, Wilkinsburg, Pa., and Larry Woodin, Arcadia, Wellsboro, Pa.

Also Morris Rosenthal, Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn.; Les Pollock, Loew's, Rochester, N. Y.; E. E. Whitaker, Fox, Atlanta, Ga.; Ed Hart, Oxford, Plainfield, N. J., and Wally Caldwell, of Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio.

In the compilation of monthly plaque winners, Warner-ites were listed in February, March, April, June, July, August, September and October. Loew-men won plaques in January, February, May, October, November and December.

Other circuits included Jucas & Jenkins, in August and November; Famous Players-Canadian, in January; Fox West Coast in March, and Great States in July. Independents scored in April, September and

Directors' Guild Accepts Changes In Its By-Laws

The Screen Directors' Guild voted unanimously in Hollywood this week for acceptance of the by-laws as revised by the directorate in collaboration with Lloyd Wright, Guild attorney. Copies will be received this week by all members.

The revision completes the official organization of the group and a concentrated membership drive will follow. The most important change in the Guild rules is on Article 3, dealing with membership qualifications. The first draft opened the roster to any director of recognized professional standing in the senior membership classification.

The new by-laws limit the senior group to members having directed and received screen credit for not less than two films for major release, and within the 12-month period prior to the date of the last classification or meeting date received screen credit for the direction of a feature for major release or began the direction of a film for which screen credit will be given.

The voting law was changed to prevent the passing of drastic measures by non-representative or inactive members in the voting group. Several prominent directors have been waiting for this change before joining the Guild, it has been learned. Members will be classified on the first of January and July of each year, or at the time membership applications are accepted. Junior and associate membership qualifications remain as they were.

The only other important amendment permits members to resign on six months' notice after the Guild has been organized for one year instead of the former indefinite term.

In New York, important benefits in jurisdictional authority and organization strength for the Screen Writers' Guild are expected to accrue from a plan for reorganizing the Authors' League of America by which the full strength of the latter will be made available to its affiliated organizations.

The plan, which will be voted on at a league meeting at the Hotel Shelton, March 30, calls for the absorption of the guild by the Authors' League in order to obtain uniform contracts for members of the Screen Writers' Guild and Authors' Guild. The latter two organizations already have surrendered their legal entities to the Authors' League, but a "firmer solidarity" is expected to result from the plan for vesting full control of the three guilds in the council of the Authors' League.

Seek Coast Theatres

Warner may add a number of theatres to its coast circuit, Joseph Bernhard, in charge of operations, said last weekend on his arrival back in New York from California, where he is understood to have looked over a number of situations. Nat H. Brower, west coast district manager for Warners, is also in New York for conferences at the home office.

HOPE WILLIAMS

Hope Williams Joins London Offices of Quigley Publications

Hope Williams (Mrs. J. D. Williams) has been appointed special London representative of Quigley Publications, Motion Picture Herald, Motion Picture Daily and Motion Picture Almanac—and will sail to assume her duties at the London Bureau on Friday, March 27th. Mrs. Williams will be associated there with Bruce Allan, London representative.

Hope Williams was born in Sheffield, England. Her first employment was in the office of Frank Macnaghten, owner of the Macnaghten Vaudeville Circuit. At the age of 18 she became the first woman manager of one of Mr. Macnaghten's theatres. She went to Australia as executive secretary to the Hon. Hugh D. McIntosh, theatre owner, newspaper publisher and member of Parliament. In Australia she married Jaydee Williams and coming to America acted as his confidential secretary during the organization and formative years of First National Pictures. She assisted Mr. Williams during his several years' residence in London when he was engaged upon a work which contributed important impetus toward the development of British production.

Brandt, Rosenblatt Favor Sales Plan

Two New York independent circuit heads have endorsed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's plan to eliminate seasonal hangovers by the cancellation of 10 features from the current list. They are Harry Brandt, head of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, and Leon Rosenblatt, president of the Rosenblatt-Welt circuit.

Both exhibitors express the same thought in that "MGM has always been fair in its dealings with exhibitors and now is the time to play fair with the company." The two men also hold that the company would not suggest the plan if it were unreasonable.

Rogers Commission Ready to Operate NVA Sanitarium

Arrangements by which the Will Rogers Memorial Commission formally will take over the Sananac Lake sanitarium from National Vaudeville Artists with the five affiliated circuits underwriting the institution for $100,000 annually for five years, have been completed except for minute legal details, it has been learned.

With the closing of the arrangements, the sanitarium will be known as the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital. The present NVA governing board will resign and be succeeded by a governing board to be designated by the memorial commission. Will H. Hays, a member of the latter body, will be the representative of the affiliated circuits on the institution's new board.

While the agreement legally commits the circuits to only a five-year underwriting of the sanitarium, it is expected that this sponsorship will be made permanent. The five underwriting circuits, Paramount, Warner, RKO, Loew's and National Theatres, are studying plans for creating a sinking fund which might be sufficient to carry the sanitarium for a long term of years. Annual contribution drives in the theatres of all five circuits are expected to be utilized.

With the new sponsorship for the sanitarium its policies will be broadened and the admission privilege will be widely extended, it is said.

GTE Reorganization Plan Seen Operative in Week

The reorganization plan for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., is expected to be declared operative within a week, it is understood, despite the fact that conditions set by Chase National Bank as prerequisites to turning back securities held as collateral for defaulted loans have not been fully met. Doubting this, a committee of independent bondholders headed by M. A. Goldsmith of Chicago on Tuesday started solicitation of authorization from debenture holders to act for them "in such an emergency."

The company has been in receivership since February, 1932. Earnings have improved in the past few months and interests close to the company are anxious to relieve it of restriction imposed by the receivership. Chase Bank has stipulated that consent to the plan must be obtained from all but $5,325,000 of debt claims, of which not more than $3,000,000 could represent debentures.

Supply Men Delay Meet

The scheduled meeting of the board of directors of the Independent Supply Dealers' Association, scheduled for last weekend in New York, was postponed indefinitely because B. F. Shearer, president, was unable to attend, having been detained in San Francisco.

$2,000,000 ANNUAL LOSS ON FAKE ACCIDENT CLAIMS

Drive Underway to Wipe Out Racket Which Has Increased Theatre Liability Insurance Rates 300 Per Cent

Eradication of the fraudulent accident claim racket which has caused an increase in liability insurance rates for theatres by as much as 300 per cent and since 1929 has been mulcting theatres of an estimated $2,000,000 a year, is the aim of a nationwide drive now underway.

In a number of large centers the campaign is directed at weeding out dishonest lawyers and unethical doctors who connive with lying plaintiffs, and in several instances those implicated have been sent to jail. So serious has the situation been that law enforcement officials enlisted the aid of John Edgar Hoover's indomitable "G men," with the result that convictions have been obtained on charges of defrauding through the mails.

In New York, where the racket exacts an annual toll of $50,000,000, a sweeping investigation is about to be launched and important evidence has been adduced in cases involving theatres.

Insurance Rates Raised

Circuit and individual theatre operators have a direct interest in the outcome of the cleanup drive since the racket has added to their overhead in higher insurance rates, cash settlements made with claimants, litigation costs and tax increases. During the depression the curve took a sharp upturn in the incidence of injury claims filed against theatres, and the large number of suspicious cases boosted theatre public liability rates to such a degree that many houses found such insurance prohibitive. Insurance companies likewise found a commercial disadvantage in carrying such risks, with the result that a large number of theatres today remain uncovered, these being known as "self insurors."

Last year the public liability rating for theatres was changed, partly as a result of exhibitor protests, from a basis of seating capacity to attendance. While the drive against fraud has not reduced rates as yet, because they are based on previous experience, it has decreased the volume of accidents which, according to insurance executives, is bound to be reflected in the new rate structure when it receives its periodical revision in about two years.

$1,700,000 on 9,100 Claims

In 1933 it was estimated by M. Marvin Berger, a member of the New York bar specializing in law pertaining to theatres, that 9,100 claims arising out of motion picture theatre accidents were paid in five years by members of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters. The amount paid on these claims, from 1924 to 1929, was $1,700,000. This, however, did not represent a complete picture, for these figures did not include claims paid by self insurors or by those casualty companies which do not belong to the Bureau, nor were court judgments included.

Since that survey the number of claims and the amounts paid in settlement by theatres have greatly increased. Furthermore, it would be impossible to estimate the loss in such intangibles as goodwill and reputation.

Seats, floors and staircases were found to be the most prolific sources of accidents, and despite the vigilance of house staffs numerous accidents are attributed to loose handrails, stairs and seats needing repair, worn and torn carpets, loose signs and lamps, unsecure marquee displays, falling plaster, dimly lighted or dark passageways and exits. The courts have held that it is the duty of the management to provide reasonable safety for patrons and to maintain the theatre free from hazards.

An investigation of the fake claims racket in New York is soon to be launched under direction of a state supreme court justice at the behest of the appellate division of the supreme court, or a special grand jury impanelled on order of Governor Lehman.

Not only are many claims "faked," but in many cases the "plaintiff" never existed, lawyers forging names, addresses and evidence. Evidence submitted to the Bar Association consists of affidavits, photostatic copies of documents and photographs of malefactors. Much of this material was gathered from the fraud bureau of the Greater New York Taxpayers' Mutual Insurance Association, with 25 insurance companies writing liability coverage for all types of establishments cooperating.

Prosecutions Launched

Prosecution of several lawyers and at least one physician on charges of being implicated in trumped-up accident cases has been launched by Assistant District Attorney Lyle Boston.

One of these is Edward Hausman, bogus lawyer, who was employed by a man and wife who filed numerous suits for injuries, including several against theatres, one for $1,000 against Loew's Palace for injuries alleged to have been sustained when someone shoved the woman against a door. The couple was arrested on conspiracy charges and Hausman was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for posing as an attorney, and is now waiting trial on three felony indictments. He was found to have instituted 129 suits which the plaintiffs never had authorized.

Another instance was revealed wherein a woman filed 33 claims, insisting she had tripped over worn carpets in a number of Greater New York theatres.

A leading circuit in the metropolitan New York area is the target of 1,000 injury claims a year and estimates the annual payments in such cases at $10,000. Only about one-fourth of the claims filed are paid, while only one out of 50 claimants brings suit. Where settlement is paid before trial, the amounts vary from $5 to $100, while in the case of serious injury the amount may be as high as $1,000. The great majority of injury claims are brought by women patrons, it was found. This is attributed to the fact that high heels cause tripping over carpets or on stairs, resulting in turned or sprained ankles.

While a majority of the theatres are insured, others prefer to take the risk themselves, and their slogan is "millions for defense but not one cent for tribute," said an attorney for a theatre circuit, explaining that theatres, being public places, are particular targets for the fraudulent claim racketeers.

To cope with the situation, the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters has established a network of index bureaus at 10 strategic points where complete files are kept on liability cases throughout the country. Information thus is exchanged on experience of this type, and suspicious cases are traced. Such bureaus are maintained in New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Cleveland, St. Louis, St. Paul, Dallas, Oklahoma City, San Francisco and Boston.

Indications or evidence pointing to the existence of fake accident claim rackets have been found in Boston, New York City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Atlanta, Birmingham, Buffalo, Syracuse, Youngstown and cities in New Jersey and other places. It was determined by investigation that one out of every three cases filed in Massachusetts was greatly exaggerated or fraudulent.

As a result of the cleanup drives, however, the number of such suits have decreased in Boston 25 per cent and in Atlanta 33 per cent. The Georgia city maintains a permanent "sentry" against the racket.

The National Bureau is a rate-making organization embracing more than 30 insurance companies who report their loss experience.

So far as possible the rates are based on individual territories and determined on an average spread of exposure. A few years ago it was found that the method of rating theatres for liability insurance was inadequate since it was based on seating capacity, said Milton Acker, manager of the Bureau's compensation and liability department.

Circuits' Data Obtained

Data then were obtained from the leading motion picture theatre circuits throughout the country indicating seating capacities and attendance over a period of years. These figures enabled the Bureau to translate the rate from a seating to an attendance basis. The present rates, shown in the accompanying tabulation, were promulgated in April, 1935, and became effective as soon as possible thereafter.

The change in rates varied in individual territories, but the overall effect was an increase, Mr. Acker said, explaining that loss costs have been increasing. In New York City, however, the rate level was not changed, since it was calculated so that premiums would not be affected.

The Liability Protective Association, Inc., has aided materially in reducing accident claims against theatres in Kansas City. The Association was formed early in 1935 by the insurance committee of the Chamber of Commerce to combat the racket, which had reached such alarming proportions in Kansas City and Jackson County that it had raised liability rates for theatres from 12 cents a seat to 40 cents.

The Association was disbanded this year because the bar committees in each judicial district in Missouri, working under the supreme court, had taken over the task of disciplining unethical lawyers. The Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City is continuing the work.

Contesting All Claims

Before the Association was organized, the Tower, independent downtown first-run theatre, had at least one liability claim a week. Now it has not more than one every three months. However, taking a cue from the more determined front against the racket, the Tower and other theatres began some time ago to contest all claims, which has been a factor in the reduced number of cases.

Many of Kansas City's theatres contributed to the support of the Bureau, led by Jay Means, former president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, and as a result of the exhibitors' vigilance a conviction was obtained.

Theatre operators and other members of the Association reported claims to a central file, and each new claim was checked against this information. The ITO also maintained such a file, and the exhibitors were able largely to eliminate claims of "repeaters," those who make a practice of filing a series of claims against theatres.

Since suburban runs now actually have few claims, Mr. Means felt that they are made to bear a part of the downtown theatres' experience, and this is the chief reason so few suburban theatres have bought liability insurance. He suggested segregation of the two types of theatres for rate-making purposes.

Formerly 80 to 85 per cent of the theatres in the Kansas-western-Missouri area carried liability insurance, but now the number is much lower. However, a group plan provides a reduced rate to members of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association.

Before the change in rates last year only Boston, with a rate of 68 cents a seat, had a higher rate than Kansas City, with 40 cents. Kansas City's rate was the same as New York's but twice Chicago's. Cities of comparable size had a rate of about 12 cents a seat.

CIRCUITS MAINTAIN CLOSE INSPECTION

Frank L. Gates, manager of Warner Brothers insurance department, emphasized this week that at all times, but especially in a period of financial stringency, it is vitally important for the careful theatre owner and manager to check up periodically on an important potential source of serious loss—the condition of his plant with reference to possible accidents.

The RKO circuit has standing instructions that house inspection is to be made at least once each week by the manager, copies of the check to be forwarded to the division office. Loew's, Warner and other circuits maintain a similar policy.

COWDIN CLOSES UNIVERSAL DEAL; BRINGS COCHRANE TO THE PRESIDENCY

Charles R. Rogers Vice-President in Charge of Production; Grainger and Koenig Continue in Their Positions

At 11:58 a. m. on March 14th J. Cheever Cowdin, president of Standard Capital Company, turned over to a representative of the Manufacturers' Trust Company in his office at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, checks aggregating about $1,600,000. With seconds to go before bank closing, the banker telephoned the deposit entry that denoted exercising of an option taken on November 1, 1935, to buy 90 per cent of Universal Pictures corporation, subject to indebtedness estimated at $2,000,000, for $5,500,000.

R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, acted with power of attorney for Carl Laemmle in closing the deal. Universal attorneys Willard McKay and Adolph Schimel also were present.

After 30 Years in Industry

Teletype flashed the word to Hollywood and venerable "Uncle Carl," sometime belabored but mostly beloved picture pioneer, knew that the deal writing virtual finis to the vivid scenario of his thirty years in the industry was closed.

Up 4½ on the Friday preceding, closely held Universal preferred stock rose nine points Saturday morning.

Standard Capital Company was formed in Delaware January 15, 1935, for the purpose of financing motion picture producers. Capitalized at $1,600,000, the company listed as voting trustees, in addition to President Cowdin, George N. Armsby, longtime associate in Bancamerica-Blair and various aeronautical corporations, and Lawrence W. Fox, Jr., of Los Angeles. The option exercised was obtained in a transaction advancing $750,000 to Universal to finance production. Electrical Research Products, Inc., and C. M. Woolf, representing British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., are understood to be associated with Standard Capital in the purchase.

An official announcement issued immediately following consummation of the transaction named Mr. Cochrane president of the company under the new control. Charles H. Rogers, formerly an independent producer distributing through Paramount and active in developing the purchase plan, will be vice-president in charge of production. William Koenig will continue as general manager of production and James R. Grainger as general manager of sales. Although not announced officially, it is expected that Mr. Cowdin will become chairman of the board, on which Mr. Laemmle will continue nominally as a member.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., whose production, "All Quiet on the Western Front," won the Gold Medal Award of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for 1930, will leave Universal after completion of his next picture, "My Man Godfrey," which is to go before the camera April 6th. He is reported considering offers from two major studios.

Lean, taciturn J. Cheever Cowdin (the J. is for John) brings to the motion picture industry a stern, rigorously analytical executive talent. He was born on St. Patrick's day, 1889, in New York, a Son of the American Revolution, and after completing his education at St. Paul's at Concord, N. H., started business as a partner in Bond and Goodwin. He became vice-president of Blair and company and Bancamerica, figuring importantly in bringing about the merger of the companies and continuing as vice-president of the new corporation. An informed commentator writing of this event in Time magazine, described him as "the soul of severe deliberation" having "an air of almost scriptural conservatism and rectitude."

Engineered Air Financing

In contrast with breezy, jovial George Newell Armsby, his associate in Bancamerica-Blair, Standard Capital and a dozen other corporate enterprises, Mr. Cowdin discourages familiarity, likes to withdraw with a few chosen friends to his country place at Ausable Fork, N. Y., designed by Rockwell Kent. Son of John E. Cowdin, one of the truly great polo players of tradition who rated a 10-goal handicap in the nineties, he inherited his father's love of horses and the game, rated an eight-goal handicap in the late '20s and served as honorary treasurer of the United States Polo Association from 1927 through 1929. At that time his experience in aviation, acquired during war service, redirected him to the air, an interest reflected in his business affiliations. His son, graduated last year from Harvard, carries on the polo tradition. Besides aviation, Mr. Cowdin's sports activities include tennis and golf.

Mr. Cowdin is credited with engineering the first important national aeronautical financing, that of the Transcontinental Air Transport, and with a business foresight and tenacity which keeps his aides hard pressed to supply the voluminous and exhaustive data his voracious appetite for information demands, yet he gave plentifully of his time and counsel to the War Against Depression movement backed by the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor, which he served as treasurer. Member of the Hangar and Rookery Clubs, his New York residence is at 30 Sutton Place.

No Ceremonies

Mr. Cowdin dislikes publicity. In his opinion it is the business institutions themselves that are important, not personalities. No cameraman witnessed the depositing of the $1,600,000 which secured control of the oldest motion picture company in the world. No ceremonies were staged for benefit of the picture pages, and newspapers got the story when the J. Walter Thompson advertising agency released it, two hours or so after the event.

Split-second activities attendant upon banking the deposit last Saturday recalled to oldsters familiar with the company's history another dramatic incident in financial affairs of the concern which took place in 1913, when Carl Laemmle and Robert H. Cochrane staged a breakneck race with P. A. Powers to obtain David Horsley's interest in the company. Added to the holdings of either, the Horsley share would have insured control.

Mr. Horsley demanded $179,000 in cash. Messrs. Laemmle and Cochrane spent the afternoon in taxicabs dashing from bank to bank collecting the required currency, mostly in bills of small denomination. Mr. Horsley had persuaded his bank to stay open until midnight to receive the deposit. It was four o'clock in the morning when tired clerks, thrice counting the money and footing the total to Mr. Horsley's satisfaction, placed it in the vault, terminated the transaction.

To Mr. Cochrane, who acted for Mr. Laemmle in New York in completing the transaction that terminated a relationship spanning three decades, the presidency of Universal comes logically and naturally in a succession of experiences consequent upon an alert young advertising man's businesslike effort to keep a client contented.

Mr. Laemmle, thirty-nine, ambitious, dissatisfied with the progress he had made with the Continental Clothing company of Oshkosh, Wis., was the client. Mr. Cochrane, handling the Continental account for the Witt K. Cochrane advertising agency, Chicago, was the alert young man. Among other devices for the care and cultivation of business contacts, he kept a file of customers' birthdays, faithfully and suitably observing each as it came up on the calendar.

To Mr. Cochrane Mr. Laemmle wrote a letter, declared the Oshkosh company to be so dominated by relatives as to make a young man's progress a matter of grave uncertainty, asked advice. To Mr. Laemmle Mr. Cochrane, scanning his birthday book, replied to the effect that a man who hasn't gone into business for himself by the time he is forty isn't worth his salt. To Chicago and to Mr. Cochrane came Mr. Laemmle with $2,500 in cash and a vague idea about starting a chain of five and ten stores, another and even more vague thought of going into real estate.

On the slender basis of the second idea, Mr. Laemmle roamed Chicago, came to busy, bias Milwaukee avenue, to a five and ten cent store show on that thronging thoroughfare and to the conclusion that this must be the five and ten cent business for which he had saved his money. On February 24, 1906, the White Front theatre passed into Mr. Laemmle's possession, and Mr. Cochrane associated himself with Mr. Laemmle.

Reporter at $6 a Week

Mr. Cochrane, born in Wheeling, W. Va., and educated at Toledo, Ohio, had been a reporter on that city's Bee at $6 a week and knew, as did Mr. Laemmle, the value of nickels, dimes and pennies in relation to the dollar. His newspaper, advertising agency and pocketbook experience combined to make him especially susceptible to the allure of the motion picture theatre. After two months' experience in operating the White Front Mr. Laemmle purchased another theatre. In October of the same year, experiencing difficulty in obtaining films, song slides and posters on time, he opened his own exchange, the Laemmle Film Service, and Mr. Cochrane bought an interest in it.

Knowingly or not, the ambitious young clothing man from Oshkosh had chosen an extremely appropriate name in Laemmle Film Service. What he had to offer was service and very little else. But service was precisely the thing that exhibitors of the period wanted, needed more than any other thing. The Motion Picture Patents company was turning out plenty of good pictures, but getting them on or near a prearranged change of program date was a matter of high diplomacy, bribery, browbeating or trusting to luck.

Often as not the new shipment, if it came, turned out to be made up of pictures used weeks or months before, and redress was a dim dream of the future. That it became an exhibitor practice, at first defensive, to retain pictures until return was demanded, and that this practice resulted in acquisition of a substantial film library when it became evident that the Patents Company kept no better check on incoming shipments than outgoing, is pertinent to this chronicle only because this didn't happen to Laemmle Film Service shipments.

It was this uncaring, high-handed attitude of the Motion Picture Patents company toward its customers that suggested to Mr. Laemmle the possibilities of the opposite thing. He got pictures where he could, from Italy, France, some of them from nobody ever knew where and many of them altogether terrible, but he got them to his customers on time. Neither they nor their customers cared very much what kind of pictures they were, just so they moved. Laemmle Film Service marched on.

BRITAIN APPROVES SMPE STANDARDS IN CONTROVERSY OVER 16-MM. SOUND

Action of British Institution Through Lord Riverdale, Arbitrator, Called Big Step Toward World Agreement

by SYLVAN HARRIS

Secretary of Sectional Committee on Motion Pictures of American Standards Association

An important step was taken last week toward achieving international agreement on 16-mm. sound-film standards by the British Standards Institution, through Lord Riverdale, K. B. E., arbitrator, in approving the 16-mm. sound-film standards of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers as the official standards of the British Standards Institution in that field. There has been much controversy on the subject during the past year or so, concomitant with the discussions and conferences held in various other European countries, notably at Stresa, Berlin, and Paris; and as a result of the long-drawn-out indecision and the difficulty of achieving accord because of the investments of British companies in equipment and film, Lord Riverdale accepted the position of arbitrator for the B. S. I. to consider the arguments of the several parties, and to render a decision that would seem most favorable to the general interests of the Empire. Presentation of the various briefs and arguments began February 26th.

That such a decision was imperative was evident from the great vitality that the 16-mm. sound-picture industry acquired in the last year or so. If the full benefit was to be derived from this growing business, it was clear that an agreement on standards was immediately necessary.

Accounts of previous activities in the 16-mm. sound-picture field were published previously in the HERALD (July 6 and August 10, 1935), referring particularly to the presentation of the American delegates, George Friedl, Jr., apparatus design supervisor for Electrical Research Products, Inc., and J. W. McNair, engineer of the American Standards Association, at the Berlin Reichsfilmkammer and at the joint meeting at Paris, in July, of the International Standards Association and the International Congress of Photography.

Referendum Arranged

At the Paris Conference arrangements were made for a referendum on the subject of 16-mm. standards among the nineteen national standardizing bodies who are members of the International Standards Association. Although the British Standards Institution is not a member of the International Standards Association, the decision of Great Britain in this matter was of prime importance to the welfare of the world industry. It is felt that the British decision will carry considerable weight in influencing the final outcome in France, where a division of opinion also exists at the present time.

The SMPE 16-mm. sound-film standards were originally published in the November, 1932, Journal of the Society, and due to what was apparently a misinterpretation of the SMPE drawings, the German standards promulgated by the Deutscher Normenausschuss showed the sound track next to the edge of the film opposite that advocated by the SMPE. Some months elapsed before the discrepancy was noticed, either abroad or in America, and in the meantime various interests in Europe had constructed equipment and produced film according to the German standard; whereas, other interests produced film and equipment according to the SMPE standard. Accordingly, considerable discussion ensued as to the technical merits of the two standards and the commercial disadvantages that would arise from making film and equipment that would not be conveniently interchangeable by the consumer. To project film made according to the German standard with equipment made according to the SMPE, and vice versa, would require a special arrangement of equipment and an adjustment by the operator.

Among the important concerns in Eng-

Goldsmith Sees Cinematic Unity Helped by Britain's Acceptance

Acceptance of the American 16mm. standards by the British film industry "will not only lead to closer cooperation between the two groups and increase Anglo-American friendship, but will bring the English-speaking nations into a cinematic unity which cannot but speed the development and commercial and educational acceptance of 16mm. sound film," was the comment this week of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, former president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Dr. Goldsmith now is chairman of the Sectional Committee on Motion Pictures under the American Standards Association, which has been active with other national standardizing organizations in the movement to achieve a world standard for 16mm. film.

Motion picture engineers in New York hailed the British decision as of far-reaching importance to the entire industry, since, for example, much of the narrow gauge product is made by reduction from the standard 35mm. prints.

Leading up to the present stage of developments detailed in the accompanying article by Sylvan Harris, the controversy has been marked by strong feeling among the European nations, accentuated by the realization that the infant 16mm. field holds potential millions in profits.

It is recalled that the 16mm. sound film standards first became an international issue when Dr. Lucian DeFeo of Rome, official of the International Educational Cinematographic Institute, an actual or alleged affiliate of the League of Nations, called a meeting in Stresa, Italy, in June, 1934, to determine "educational standards" for 16mm. sound pictures. The German manufacturing companies were well represented, as well as one or two British groups supposedly somewhat under the German influence. There was no attempt to represent commercial interests in proportion to their commercial importance, nor to bring into the picture standardizing organizations accustomed to handle such matters.

Dr. Goldsmith, as president of the SMPE, received an invitation to have the Society represented. There was a slight difficulty involved, in that the conference was called for a certain Monday, whereas Dr. Goldsmith received the invitation on the preceding Friday afternoon.

Hurried arrangements by radio resulted in the attendance of an American representative, flown from London, to the apparent distress of the remainder of the conference. Nevertheless, the steam roller functioned effectively, and the American representative, W. F. Garling of the London office of RCA Photophone, Ltd., departed in a highly flattened condition.

Dr. Goldsmith could not understand the manner in which this meeting was called, nor sympathize with it. Furthermore, he saw no purpose in educational standards alone, but believed that entertainment, educational and industrial applications of 16mm. sound film should proceed on a given, identical standard. It therefore became his purpose to force the consideration of these standards by properly constituted national and international standardizing groups qualified to handle the matter.

FRENCH 16MM. ACTION IS AWAITED

land favoring the SMPE standard were:

British Thomson-Houston Co.
J. H. Dallmeyer & Co., Ltd.
RCA Photophone Co., Ltd.
Western Electric Co., Ltd.
Bell & Howell Co., Ltd.
Publicity Films, Ltd.

These organizations had produced equipment according to the SMPE standard for some time and had made considerable investment in equipment and film, although there was, of course, considerable hesitation to continue to produce equipment and film until there was some certainty as to what the final outcome would be in the controversy on standards.

Organizations supporting the SMPE standards were the Sub-Standard Cinematograph Manufacturers Association and the British Institute of Cinematography.

The difficulty no doubt delayed the development of the 16-mm. sound-film industry in Great Britain considerably; and likewise, for the same reasons, the firms that advocated the DIN (Deutscher Industrie Normen) standards were loath to proceed very far with their production and endanger any investments that they might wish to make. Firms adhering to the DIN standards were:

Gaumont British Equipments, Ltd.
Gaumont British Instructional, Ltd.
Soho, Ltd.
S. P. Equipments, Ltd.
Synchrophone, Ltd.
N. Marshall
British Acoustic Films, Ltd.

The British Sub-Standard Sound Association also supported the DIN standard.

With regard to the world situation, as stated in the foregoing, action on international standardization of 16-mm. sound-film and equipment was undertaken by the International Standards Association following the Paris conference. The Deutscher Normenausschuss was appointed Secretariat to the ISA for the project, and on August 3, 1935, a questionnaire was mailed to the nineteen member-bodies of the ISA requesting their action on the two proposals. The nineteen member-bodies are as follows:

American Standards Association (United States)
Oesterreichischer Normenausschuss (Austria)
Association Belge de Standardization (Belgium)
Ceskoslovenska Normalisacni Spolecnost (Czechoslovakia)
Dansk Standardiseringsraad Industribygningen (Denmark)
Finlands Standardiseringskommission (Finland)
Association Francaise de Normalisation (France)
Deutscher Normenausschuss (Germany)
Centrall Normalisatie Bureau (Holland)
Magyar Szabvanyugyi Intezet (Hungary)
Ente Nazionale per L'Unificazione Nell'Industria (Italy)
Japanese Engineering Standards Commission Bureau of Industrial Rationalization (Japan)
Norges Standardiserings-Forbund (Norway)
Polski Komitet Normalizacyjny (Poland)
Committee Roumaine de Normalisation (Roumania)
Comision permanente de ensayo de materiales y de tipificacion industrial (Spain)
Sveriges Standardiseringskommission (Sweden)
Bureau des Normes du V S M (Switzerland)
International Standardization Bureau of USSR (Russia)

This questionnaire requested information concerning the preference of the national standardizing bodies for the two standards and their technical reasons and commercial investments. Replies returned by the countries mentioned below, indicated the following conditions:

In America, England and Holland there has been much activity in 16-mm. motion pictures, and the amount of investment is quite considerable. In France also there has probably been much development and commercialization, although the extent of that development is not known. In any event, however, just as in national standardization the purpose is to effect an interchangeability of parts, equipment and accessories so as to promote the transaction of business between various parts of the particular country; so the purpose of international standardization is to make possible the use of equipment in all countries to the greatest convenience of the user and the manufacturer, so that the mutual advantages of export and import business may be enjoyed by all the countries interested in the product. So long as important differences in design and use exist, just so long will such international business be curtailed, which in the case of 16-mm. motion pictures, promises to be an important field provided it is permitted to develop unhampered.

In Germany, although there has probably been considerable activity in 16-mm. sound motion pictures, the amount of equipment sold and in production, and the extent of the investment in equipment and film cannot be ascertained.

Austria likewise gives no dependable answer on this subject. In Czechoslovakia the development of 16-mm. sound motion pictures is only beginning, and the industry is apparently awaiting international agreement before proceeding further. No information on the subject was forthcoming from Poland or France.

In Russia, the 16-mm. sound motion picture industry is only in the first stage of its development and only a small amount of equipment and film has been produced. No definite information was forthcoming from Hungary and Sweden, and the investment in Norway and Denmark was considered to be negligible. Although the investment in Holland is probably considerable, definite figures are not available.

$2,500,000 Investment in America

In the report of the Sectional Committee on Motion Pictures of the American Standards Association, it was shown that the investment in 16-mm. sound pictures in America, referring only to immediate and present development of equipment, was in the neighborhood of $2,500,000. Furthermore, it has been estimated that the cost of original development and design, and construction of early models of equipment approximated $900,000, making the total investment in America of the order of $3,400,000.

As to the position of the sound-track on the films, the following are the preferences of the various countries:

United States—SMPE.
Holland—SMPE.
Great Britain—SMPE.
Germany—DIN.
Russia—DIN; might follow SMPE.
Hungary—DIN; might follow SMPE.
Denmark—DIN; might follow SMPE.
Switzerland—DIN; might follow SMPE.
Austria—Preference divided; might follow SMPE.
Czechoslovakia—Uncertain.
Sweden—Uncertain.
France—Divided, one group favoring DIN and the other SMPE.
Italy—Uncertain; tendency toward SMPE.
Poland—Uncertain.

Although Great Britain's decision was not referred through the International Standards Association, it is important to include it here, as it is probable that the 16-mm. sound-film investments in Great Britain probably exceed those of any other European country. It is important also to recognize the fact that accord has been reached between the great English-speaking peoples of the world, including the United States, England, Canada, Australia, etc., who will be considerably affected by the decision of the British Standards Institution. In considering the preferences of the various countries listed above, for one or the other standard, the extent to which development has proceeded in each country and the amount of investment involved must be considered, because it is clear that the preference of a country for one or the other standard has little or no real meaning so long as that country has no investment at stake. Aside from that, however, it has been definitely shown that the SMPE standard has advantages in respect to its adaptation to color processing and the reversal process.

Although it may be too early to hope that the entire world will eventually agree upon a single standard, at least during the present unsettled times, the alignment of Great Britain among those favoring the SMPE standard will do much to improve the business relations between the two countries, and will prove extremely beneficial in respect to interchange of films, equipment, etc., devoted not only to entertainment, but education as well. With the United States, Great Britain and Holland agreeing upon the SMPE standards, representing the bulk of the business in 16-mm. sound films, it is probable that an incentive will be provided for France to adopt the SMPE standard also.

Unsung

In an industry where the last chords of superlative description have been struck so often that now they are banal, the studio cinematographer—the fellow who makes the pictures—is a notable instance of studied self-restraint. His labors are great; his rewards few. No gaudy colored spreads burn his name and features into the public mind. A frame or two in the credits is about all he gets.

The camera man has to know a lot. The most important thing he must know is that the highest quality of motion pictures photography is that which is unobtrusive and deliberately refrains from diverting audience attention to its own perfection.

If one's memory is good, he may be able to recall the name Charles Rosher, A. S. C. It has been appearing on screens for about a quarter century, lately in connection with "Call of the Wild," "Broadway Melody of 1936," "Lord Fauntleroy," and soon in the credits for "Small Town Girl."

Mr. Rosher knows photography from A to Z. He's known it from the crude efforts of the pioneer days to the most masterpieces of motion picture camera art. He knows it particularly from its commercial and showmanship viewpoint. Thus he says:

"Every time the director of photography trains his cameras on a production, he makes a considered artistic surrender to practical picture requirements. His is a commercial compromise, a carefully-poised subordination of his professional talents to exalted delineation of story, star and setting. Not for one moment can he lose sight of the governing factor that he is lensing a product that must tour the channels of trade and return with a profit, not a museum piece of photography that will incite artistic admiration but bring no shekels. Through his photography, he must sell the story and stars to the public, emphasize the whole entertainment plan and make it appealing to the public.

"Let us suppose the director of photography should give unbridled expression to his artistic traits and make every scene in a production a photographic Rembrandt. The result would be appalling. The eyes and senses of appreciation would tire and be surfeited under sixty to ninety minutes of unalloyed sheer beauty. The very weight of beauty would swamp out the star, the story, the entertainment content of the picture.

Practical versus Artistic

"Believe me, there is constant temptation to throw off trade demands and let oneself go into a revelry of artistic composition. When we were on location shooting 'Call of the Wild' I experienced almost hourly conflicts between my practical and artistic natures. Here was an artist's paradise. Towering pines sprinkled with snow, gaunt white-hatted mountains, gracefully undulating snow-blanketed landscape.

"The director of photography strives for clear, clean, sharp and rich photographic tones, easy and pleasing for the eyes to look upon under all the various levels of theatre projection. He is a dramatic as well as graphic artist. He is not above under-photographing a few scenes that the dramatic climax may be relatively strengthened. He injects all the artistic value the story will assimilate.

"If his photography contributes to the flow and plausibility of the picture, if his characters are clothed with focal charm, and he has incorporated precisely the proper amount of artistic flavor, he has done a good job."

12 Films Start

Nearing the stretch run of the production schedule year, twelve pictures started in the past week. Eleven others were finished. Important feaures are included in both groups.

Twentieth Century-Fox, starting three, was the busiest studio. First to go into work, "White Fang" will present John Boles, Jean Muir, Thomas Beck, Slim Summerville, Jane Darwell, Charles Winninger and Brian Donleavy. David Butler is directing. The second picture, "Turmoil" (temporary title), will feature Jean Hersholt, J. Edward Bromberg, Ann Shoemaker, Francis Ford, Christian Rub, Paul McVey, Allen Jenkins and Gene Reynolds. Otto Brower and Gregory Ratoff are collaborating on direction. The third picture is directed by Sidney Lanfield. Principal players to date are Frances Dee, Brian Donleavy and Helen Westley.

Paramount Starts Two

Two pictures were started by Paramount. In "Early to Bed" Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland are starred, supported by George Barbier, Gail Patrick and Robert McWade. Norman McLeod is directing. The companion picture, "Bar 20 Three," a Harry Sherman production, will present William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison, Onslow Stevens, Muriel Evans, Claude King, Al Hill, John St. Polis and John Rutherford. Howard Bretherton is the director.

The cast by no means complete, MGM started "The Good Earth," with Paul Muni and Luise Ranier in the leads. Sidney Franklin is directing.

Ambassador Pictures started "Born To Fight." It will present, among others, Frances Grant, Frankie Darro and Roy Mason.

Universal's starting feature was "Banished." A Buck Jones production, it features him supported by Dorothy Revier, Billy Burrud and Harry Worth under Ray Taylor's direction.

Sentinel started "What Becomes of the Children" with Joan Marsh, Robert Fraser, Natalie Moorhead, Claudie Dell, Barbara Pepper, Nils Welsh, Glen Boles, Mary McLaron and Johnny Bupp. Direction is by Walter Shumway.

"Revolt of the Zombies," a Halperin production, was started. With Victor Halperin at the helm it will present Dean Jagger, Dorothy Stone, Robert Nolan, George Cleveland, Fred Warren, Roy D'Arcy, Carl Stockdale, Fern Schumaker and William Crowell.

Its cast headed by Dick Powell, Joan Blondell and Frank McHugh, Warner started "Stage Struck." Busby Berkeley is the director.

The second picture, "Comin' Round the Mountain," features Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnette, Ken Cooper, Tracy Lane, Roy Mason and Raymond Brown. Mack Wright directed.

Two also were completed at Twentieth Century-Fox. The first, "Under Two Flags," has a cast headed by Claudette Colbert, Ronald Colman, Rosalind Russell and Victor McLaglen. Support includes Gregory Ratoff, Nigel Bruce, Herbert Mundin, C. Henry Gordon, Lumsden Hare, John Carradine, Thomas Beck and many others. Frank Lloyd directed. In "Human Cargo," which Alan Dwan directed, are Claire Trevor, Brian Donleavy, Helen Troy, Alan Dinehart, Ralph Morgan, Rita Cansino, Ralf Harolde, Claudia Coleman, Morgan Wallace, Herman Bing, Paul Stanton and Ford Sterling.

Universal also checked in with a pair. "Dracula's Daughter" lists Otto Kruger, Gloria Holden, Marguerite Churchill, Irving Pichel, Edward Van Sloan, Nan Gray, Hedda Hopper, Gilbert Emery, Claude Allister, E. E. Clive, Halliwell Hobbes, Billy Beven and Douglas Wood. Lambert Hillyer directed. After months of work, "Showboat" was completed. The cast principals are Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Paul Robeson, Helen Morgan, Helen Westley, Maryllin Knowlden, Arthur Hohl, Queensie Smith, Charles Middleton and Clarence Muse. James Whale directed.

At Paramount "Fatal Lady," formerly "Brazen," a Wanger production, was finished. It will present Mary Ellis, Walter Pidgeon, Ruth Donnelly, Samuel Hinds, Guy Bates Post, Alan Mowbray, Norman Foster, Lucille Ward and Otto Hoffman. Edward Ludwig directed.

The last of the completed pictures, "The Unguarded Hour," MGM, features Loretta Young and Franchot Tone with Lewis Stone, Roland Young, Jessie Ralph, Dudley Digges, Henry Daniell, Robert Greig, E. E. Clive, Wallis Clark, John Buckler and Aileen Pringle. Sam Wood directed.

"Doctor" Rolling Up Highs in Many Spots

Reports reaching the Twentieth Century-Fox home office on the business in 24 cities on "The Country Doctor" indicate that the Dionne Quintuplets are the biggest box-office

---

THERE have always been in show business a few who envy anybody else's success. They take joy in spreading false propaganda about their competitors or their competitors' product.

It is unfortunate that a grand production, such as "THE COUNTRY DOCTOR", which is both a credit and an asset to the entire motion picture industry, should be the victim of this propaganda.

Certain people have gone out of their way to spread the rumor that this picture is flopping. We have a good idea who are behind it and it should be to their eternal shame.

For the benefit of those who bought the picture and who have still to run it, I want to quote a few statistics about one of the most successful pictures this business has seen in many a day:—

"THE COUNTRY DOCTOR" opened in 322 theatres between March 3rd and March 8th.

Of those theatres playing the picture for a week's engagement, 53 held "THE COUNTRY DOCTOR" over for a second week or transferred it to another first-run theatre for a second week.

48 theatres extended their engagements from three to four days.

31 theatres extended their engagements two days, and 83 theatres found it necessary to play the picture an extra day.

In all, 215 theatres—or more than 67 per cent—of the 322 that played the picture in its first week of release, held the picture over for additional playing time.

One of the most successful pictures released by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation this year was Shirley Temple in "THE LITTLEST REBEL." Released on Christmas Day, it played during the holidays to enormous business.

"THE COUNTRY DOCTOR" already has surpassed "THE

WHISPERING CHORUS

LITTLEST REBEL" in receipts by more than 15%.

Of course, there are individual spots affected by terrific weather conditions that have not done as well as the exhibitor might have hoped. We speak of the average.

We are proud to point to the chorus of critics' praise which has greeted the picture from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf. Not only have the motion picture reviewers accorded "THE COUNTRY DOCTOR" their highest rating and most enthusiastic praise, but great publishers and editorial writers have gone out of their way to urge the American people to see this great human document.

Elsewhere on this page are printed excerpts from some of these reviews.

We are not responsible for certain greedy individuals who hoped this picture would pay off the national debt. We are, however, humanly happy that "THE COUNTRY DOCTOR" has brought profits to our customers, entertainment to millions and has been a credit not only to ourselves but to the entire motion picture industry.

This picture is a sincere contribution to the business we are all making our living out of. It is an asset to the cause of better pictures, no matter who turns them out.

This, then, is the record of "THE COUNTRY DOCTOR." These figures do not lie, and if this be a flop, we pray give us more like it.

THE KEYSTONE OF YOUR FUTURE

FEDERAL BOARD QUESTIONS LEGALITY OF PETTENGILL SYNOPSIS PROVISION

Summer-Long Study of Bill to Bar Block Booking Proposed; Kent and Schaefer Call Measure Impracticable

Block booking legislation in Congress this week was menaced on three fronts with the appearance of a Federal Trade Commission opinion holding the synopsis provisions of the Pettengill bill probably invalid under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, a demand by Canon William Sheafe Chase for nothing less than creation of a federal motion picture commission and a suggestion before the Senate interstate commerce film subcommittee that a special group be appointed to study the whole subject and make its report next session.

The opinion of the trade commission, signed by W. T. Kelley, chief counsel, accompanied by a less critical brief by Eugene W. Burr, attorney, was put into the record by Representative Samuel B. Pettengill, chairman of the House interstate and foreign commerce subcommittee, as the group began the second week of hearings on block booking.

The fight in opposition to the legislation was started Tuesday with Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, and George Schaefer, vice-president of United Artists, leading the opposition forces.

"The atmosphere created in this hearing might lead the committee to believe that this (block booking) was a poisonous method of forcing bad product down the throats of the exhibitors," Mr. Kent declared in beginning his testimony. "This is a method that has always been in use in this industry; it is no different from the method used in hundreds of other lines in this country."

Mr. Schaefer's testimony was interrupted as the committee adjourned, to resume hearings next Monday. However, in order to enable some of the witnesses to return home, C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, who directed the opponents' testimony, obtained an early hearing for Stanley Sumner, manager of the University theatre, Cambridge, Mass., and the Reverend Joseph A. Daly, Ph.D., executive secretary of the National Legion of Decency.

Upholding the power of Congress to legislate on block booking and blind selling, on the basis of opinions of the Supreme Court upholding similar legislation to regulate the traffic in narcotics, Mr. Kelley's opinion attacked the synopsis provisions of the block booking bill as being "arbitrary and discriminatory," with "reason to believe that this is contrary to the protection guaranteed by the fifth amendment against 'depriving of life, liberty or property without due process of law.'"

The synopsis provisions will at least, Mr. Kelley said, be "a burden upon the sale or leasing of futures," adding that "sales of futures are a recognized incident of property ownership."

Further, the opinion declared, the provision for cancellation where a picture differs substantially from its synopsis is the "creation of a new right of action" which usually is accompanied in legislation by the designation of machinery for its exercise. Similarly, the injunctive provisions of the bill, while proper for application to anti-trust cases, seem "out of place and of doubtful practical value for the conditions toward which this bill is directed." On the whole, the opinion held, there is "a general incongruity" in the measure.

"The current bill," Mr. Kelley pointed out, "attacks a business method which has grown up with this $2,000,000,000 industry during the past 20 years, stamps the business practice as a monopolistic practice, and overlooking available experienced administrative machinery for treatment of such practice proceeds to define it as a crime.

"The present legislative designation of these current, extensive practices as being unfair ought not to brand them as being inherently within the classification of unfair competition cases defined by volumes of court decisions. They would seem very properly to come within the competence of the Federal Trade Commission and its precedents, rulings and decision on price, sales promotion, and trade relations policies."

The accompanying brief prepared by Mr. Burr apparently made efforts to find the legislation valid, and differed from the chief counsel as to the Congressional power to deal with futures sales, but could not approve of the synopsis provisions, it being pointed out that the use of the word "knowingly" in dealing with deviations would render the measure practically ineffective.

Mr. Burr contended that the bill should give the exhibitor the right to cancel after seeing the picture, but admitted this would be subject to objection from the producer, whose losses might be increased and the market for "mediocre productions" decreased. In its anti-trust aspects, the attorney admitted, the bill is "unique."

After sitting on the sidelines throughout the Senate hearings, for the first time in all the years block booking has been before Congress, Canon Chase, superintendent of the International Reform Federation, Monday resumed his position as the spearhead of the censorship attack and told Representative Pettengill his bill could not be enforced and that nothing less than the creation of a federal commission would be adequate to defeat the "motion picture trust."

In a spirited defense of the Culkin bill, a measure which Representative Culkin, himself, earlier in the hearings had admitted could not be passed, Canon Chase admitted that the Pettengill bill, if broadly amended, might do as a first step since, if the responsibility for the showing of pictures was imposed upon the exhibitor "we could bring pressure and secure punishment for exhibiting something that will incite to crime."

At the same time, he warned the subcommittee that the "trust" will "be artful in evading the provisions of the bill."

"I am not asking for censorship," he asserted. "I am asking that a commission be appointed which would have some authority.

"At the source of production we can assist the men who want to make clean pictures. The standard of morals as applied there (in the Culkin bill) is the standard of the motion picture trust itself and which they have promised the American people they would give.

"I believe if your committee could draw up something that seems reasonable and fair to all concerned, which would effectively deal with pictures before they are filmed," he continued, "you would find this would save the producers a vast amount of money and would prevent censorship in the states."

Canon Chase, who told the committee he was representing the various organizations for which he has always spoken, engaged in discussion of the commission idea with Chairman Pettengill when the latter pointed out that the Supreme Court has held production to be a matter for the states to deal with under their general police powers and expressed the opinion that, although the plan was "very desirable in theory," "from the constitutional standpoint I don't see how we could pass such legislation."

"You can say that no picture can enter interstate commerce unless it has received a license," Canon Chase retorted.

Apparently mindful that all members of the House who desire to remain in Congress must

SENATE MAY MAKE NEW BOOKING PROBE

Creation of a special Senate committee, adequately financed, to make a thorough investigation of every phase of the block booking question and report at the next session, was understood in Washington this week to be under consideration by members of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

The Neely sub-committee on films has not yet met to consider the testimony taken at its hearings last month, but members of the group are represented as feeling that the whole subject of block booking is so hedged about with technicalities as to demand a thorough study before any legislation is considered.

Indications are that, even though the House may pass block booking legislation this session, which is doubtful, the Senate will demand that the measure be laid aside until more careful consideration can be given. To that end, it is likely, the suggestion will be made that a special committee be appointed to study the subject during the summer, and to make recommendations next session as to the desirability of legislation.

seek re-election next fall, Canon Chase promised that "the party which would solve this proposition in a reasonable, sensible, sane sort of way," will "sweep the country."

At the same time he warned that "some power ought to be exercised over the use of the motion picture politically," pointing out that the Culkin bill provides that films shall be fair to both parties.

Canon Chase attempted to discuss at length a Legion of Decency list which, he said, placed only 56 per cent of the pictures in Class A and another 45 per cent in Class C, but Mr. Pettengill, desirous of closing the hearing, asked him merely to put it into the record.

As the House group met for further consideration of the legislation, members of the Neely sub-committee were considering a proposal that a special group be appointed to study the whole question of block booking and make its report to the interstate commerce committee next winter.

Canon Chase's appearance marked the termination of the presentation by the proponents of the legislation, during the course of which, earlier in the day, representatives of 11 national organizations advocated adoption of the Pettengill bill.

Appearing for the first time, Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, in a statement submitted on his behalf, aligned the farm organizations in opposition to block booking, declaring it "destructive to the American principle of freedom of choice in entertainment" more particularly in the rural communities, where there is ordinarily but one theatre, rather than the urban centers.

Repeat Senate Testimony

Most of the organizations which this week submitted their recommendations of the bill repeated what was said during the Senate hearings, with Miss Callie Waldran of the National Education Association again submitting a statement by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior under President Hoover, that the bill "offers the most promising solution of this vitally important matter," and a statement from Dr. Henry James Forman of the National Motion Picture Research Council that films "constitute for minors a supplementary, haphazard, chaotic program of education" accompanied by a charge that "80 per cent of all feature pictures deal with love, sex and crime."

Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman of the same Council repeated the statement offered before the Senate group. In answer to a question by Representative Peyser of New York whether she agreed with the claim that the morals of pictures have improved, Mrs. Bannerman admitted she was not a "movie fan" but that she had heard that films were better.

Repeating the plea of Shanghai (China) women's organizations for abolition of block booking, Mrs. Ray Nourse of the American Association of University Women, in a prepared statement similar to that submitted at the Senate hearings, voiced a plea for the freedom of "art," declaring that "with the present system of distribution the market is practically closed to all producers outside the Big Eight."

Also appearing and citing the "helplessness" of parents and teachers under block booking, were representatives of the Home Economics Association, National YWCA, National Women's Trade Union League and the National Congress of Parents and Teachers whose witness, William H. Bristow, declared that local film councils have been abandoned because of inability to make any headway against block booking.

Drinking scenes in pictures were attacked by Dr. Izora Scott of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, who joined with Canon Chase in a demand for a federal commission and told Chairman Pettengill his bill would not insure pictures of high moral value, adding, however, that it would be a step in the right direction.

During the course of the hearing, Representative Cooper of Ohio became curious as to how the exhibitor would select his pictures under the bill if pictures are sold before they are made. He was answered by Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, with an explanation that the bill required a synopsis to be shown when the exhibitor's order was solicited. Mr. Myers admitted, in answer to a question by Chairman Pettengill as to the number of pictures on the market at any given time, that at the beginning of the season the producers usually had but two or three apiece.

A protest against the bill "because it does not meet the moral situation," sent by Michael Freedman, theatre operator in four Pennsylvania towns, was read into the record by Representative Peyser of New York.

"You have been misled by the arguments and alibis presented to community leaders over a period of years by a selfish group of exhibitors," the letter declared. "The exhibitor group fighting for the bill represents a minority of exhibitors, and the majority will face a terrific fight to stay in business if the bill is passed." Mr. Freedman declared that he never had been forced to play a picture which he felt would be subject to objection.

Mr. Myers declared it had come to his attention that exhibitors were being invited into the film exchanges and requested to write and wire the committee in opposition to the measure.

Representative Peyser replied that he was receiving communications both for and against the bill.

Gets 30 Per Cent Cancellation

Mr. Sumner, the exhibitor witness from Cambridge, Mass., explained that he deals with all of the "Big Eight" and buys about 300 films a year, using slightly more than 200, and making such adjustments as he can on the remainder. He was subjected to sharp questioning by Chairman Pettengill as to why he obtained a 30 per cent cancellation as against the 10 per cent given others, and explained that he receives sympathetic consideration from the distributors of his particular circumstances. However, he added, he does not escape scot free, sometimes having to pay full contract price for a canceled picture, other times half or some part.

Declaring that Mr. Sumner appeared to be getting privileges denied other exhibitors, Chairman Pettengill suggested his favorable treatment might be due to the fact that President Lowell of Harvard was also head of the National Motion Picture Research Council. This was denied indignantly by the witness.

"I believe that the independent exhibitor would be seriously harmed if this bill were to pass," Mr. Sumner asserted. "I think that in many instances the brains back of the production and the distribution ends of the business are perhaps better than the brains of the average exhibitor, and it is just as well that some of us are forced to run pictures."

Mr. Sumner said he never had been coerced by a distributor and expressed the belief that good pictures could not be made if it were not for advance contracts.

Congratulates Bishops

Reading to the committee the statement issued by the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures on February 26, expressing fear that legislation might lead to political censorship, the Reverend Daly declared that the various Catholic bodies represented as in favor of the Pettengill bill do not speak for the Catholic Church.

He was questioned at length by members of the committee as to whether the organizations or the Episcopal committee represented the greater number of Catholics and said that while there might be differences of opinion among various groups and that individual prelates throughout the country might not always agree personally, the committee was the official mouthpiece of the church with respect to motion pictures and was the only organization authorized to speak for the 22,000,000 Catholics of the country as a whole.

"The lists of the Legion of Decency go out to over 6,000,000 people through the Catholic papers alone and that list is recognized as being official by these organizations," he said.

Thanking the witness for appearing, Chairman Pettengill said: "I want to say to you and the bishops for whom you speak that I congratulate you and them for the splendid contribution you have made to this work. We are simply confronted with a problem; the question is whether it requires a legislative remedy and, if so, what it is."

Misnomer, Says Kent

Block booking is a misnomer for group selling or wholesaling, Mr. Kent declared as he swung into a defense of the industry. Nevertheless, few contracts are 100 per cent and, as a businessman, if an exhibitor who is already booked full seeks to buy one or two pictures from Fox, he considers the matter carefully and, if the situation warrants it, makes the sale. Many exhibitors are using Fox films on a basis of one every other week.

"I hope the committee won't think we are so foolish as to toss millions of dollars of business over our backs just because we want to sell 50 pictures and a man only wants to buy 30 or 40," he said. "That is 1,000 per cent away from the truth."

Mr. Kent told the committee, as he told the Senate group, of Paramount's efforts to sell individually, dropped after business fell from $500,000 to $350,000 a week, and declared the

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Dracula's Daughter

(Universal)

Mystery-Thrill

About six years ago, "Dracula," antedating "Frankenstein," became the first of the modern blood chilling, screech-scream provoking horror pictures. With the substance of that story retained, the locales the same but reversed, this Garrett Fort work brings the vampire Dracula's daughter to the fore to carry on the fiendishness of her sire. Naturally its potential entertainment worth and showmanship availability depend more upon the thrills of horror activities and situations than they do upon anything else, even to the almost total elimination of romantic interest and a complete eschewal of comedy.

With direction by Lambert Hillyer, who has handled scores of pictures, probably one of the picture's outstanding features in addition to story content and production mechanics which embellish it is the presentation of a comparative newcomer in the title role. She is Gloria Holden, former stage actress, previously seen in pictures in MGM's "Wife vs. Secretary." With her the center of practically all action, other principals are Otto Kruger, Margaret Churchill, Irving Pichel and Edward Van Sloan, who is playing the same role in which he appeared in "Dracula."

Other important persons in the cast are Nan Gray, Hedda Hopper, Gilbert Emory, Claude Allister, E. E. Clive, Halliwell Hobbes, Billy Bevan, Gordon Hart and Douglas Wood.

Though production effects are being counted upon to provide the weird terror of inhuman practices, it is acknowledged that the power of illusion is being counted upon to provoke reactions to incidents that are not actually seen. Thus its showmanship is suggested as incorporating into advance publicity all those vivid ideas that promise the maximum amount of thrills and chills.

The Unguarded Hour

(MGM)

Drama

In this production there is an unusual combination of title, story content and player values. The title is terse and interest quickening. It can be adapted in many ways to unique and effective exploitation. It fully suggests but does not reveal the story theme. That is a melodramatic delineation of what a powerful part circumstantial evidence plays in modern criminology. A lawyer is successfully prosecuting a murder case. The suspect is doomed to conviction. His wife knows the man is innocent. A situation arises, over a social conversation, that forces both to account for a single hour in their lives. The wife knows that if she tells the truth it will lead to her husband's political and professional ruin. If the husband tells the truth as to his whereabouts it will result in the shattering of his wife's faith in him. The circumstances result in the husband's being charged with another murder. To save him, the wife makes a confession that not only clears the suspect of the first murder, but brings the perpetrator of the second killing into the hands of the police. As the story is vividly unfolded it is a merging of intrigue, melodrama, romance, mystery, comedy and suspense culminating in a surprise climax.

As the entertainment worth of the subject matter is acknowledged, it is necessary that the prestige of the players who bring it to screen realism be given consideration. Loretta Young, last in "Call of the Wild," and Franchot Tone, recently in "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Exclusive Story," are featured as husband and wife. Lewis Stone is head of Scotland Yard whose propounding of the unguarded hour question implicates Tone in a murder crime. Roland Young, in a comedy characterization, is the sole holder of Miss Young's unguarded hour secret. Other players are Jessie Ralph, Dudley Digges, Henry Daniel, Robert Greig, E. E. Clive, Wallis Clark, John Buckler and Aileen Pringle.

Direction is by Sam Wood, whose adaptability to handling this type of entertainment material was demonstrated by "Whipsaw."

Little Miss Nobody

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Drama

To increase as well as capitalize upon the popularity of the personality it features there is no lack of comedy in this story. Yet it is announced that "Little Miss Nobody" is the strongest dramatic story that Jane Withers has had. It is the kind of yarn in which those two qualities conditionally counterbalance and accentuate each other.

The production is based upon the story "The Matron's Report," written by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan. The screen play is by Lou Breslow, Paul Burger and Edward Elliscu. Direction is by John Blystone, who has made more than 60 pictures for Fox and Twentieth Century-Fox.

It tells of an orphan asylum child with a penchant for getting into mischief.

With Jane Withers heading the list, the cast appears to be of more than usual strength. While Betty Jean Hainey is featured as her pal and Jackie Morrow and Donald Haines are revealed as two youngsters upon whom she practices some of her most comical mischief, the adult contingent provides some names of undoubted commercial value. Included are Jane Darwell, Sara Haden, Ralph Morgan, Harry Carey, Thomas Jackson, Jed Prouty, Claudia Coleman, Clarence H. Wilson and Lillian Harmer.

Absolute Quiet

(MGM)

Comedy Drama and Adventure

A ranch owner sends his secretary's husband off on a wild goose chase so that he can be alone with her in absolute quiet. In on them arrives a pair of ex-vaudevillains, convicted of murder and freshly escaped from jail; a plane crashes and out of it staggers a pompous governor, his slick tonged campaign manager and a newspaper reporter. Come also a passe movie star and his hero worshipping girl friend. The convicts cut the ranch off from all outside communication. Newspapers go frantically in search of information and then comes the secretary's husband just as the reporter connecting the wires sends out first flashes of the crash.

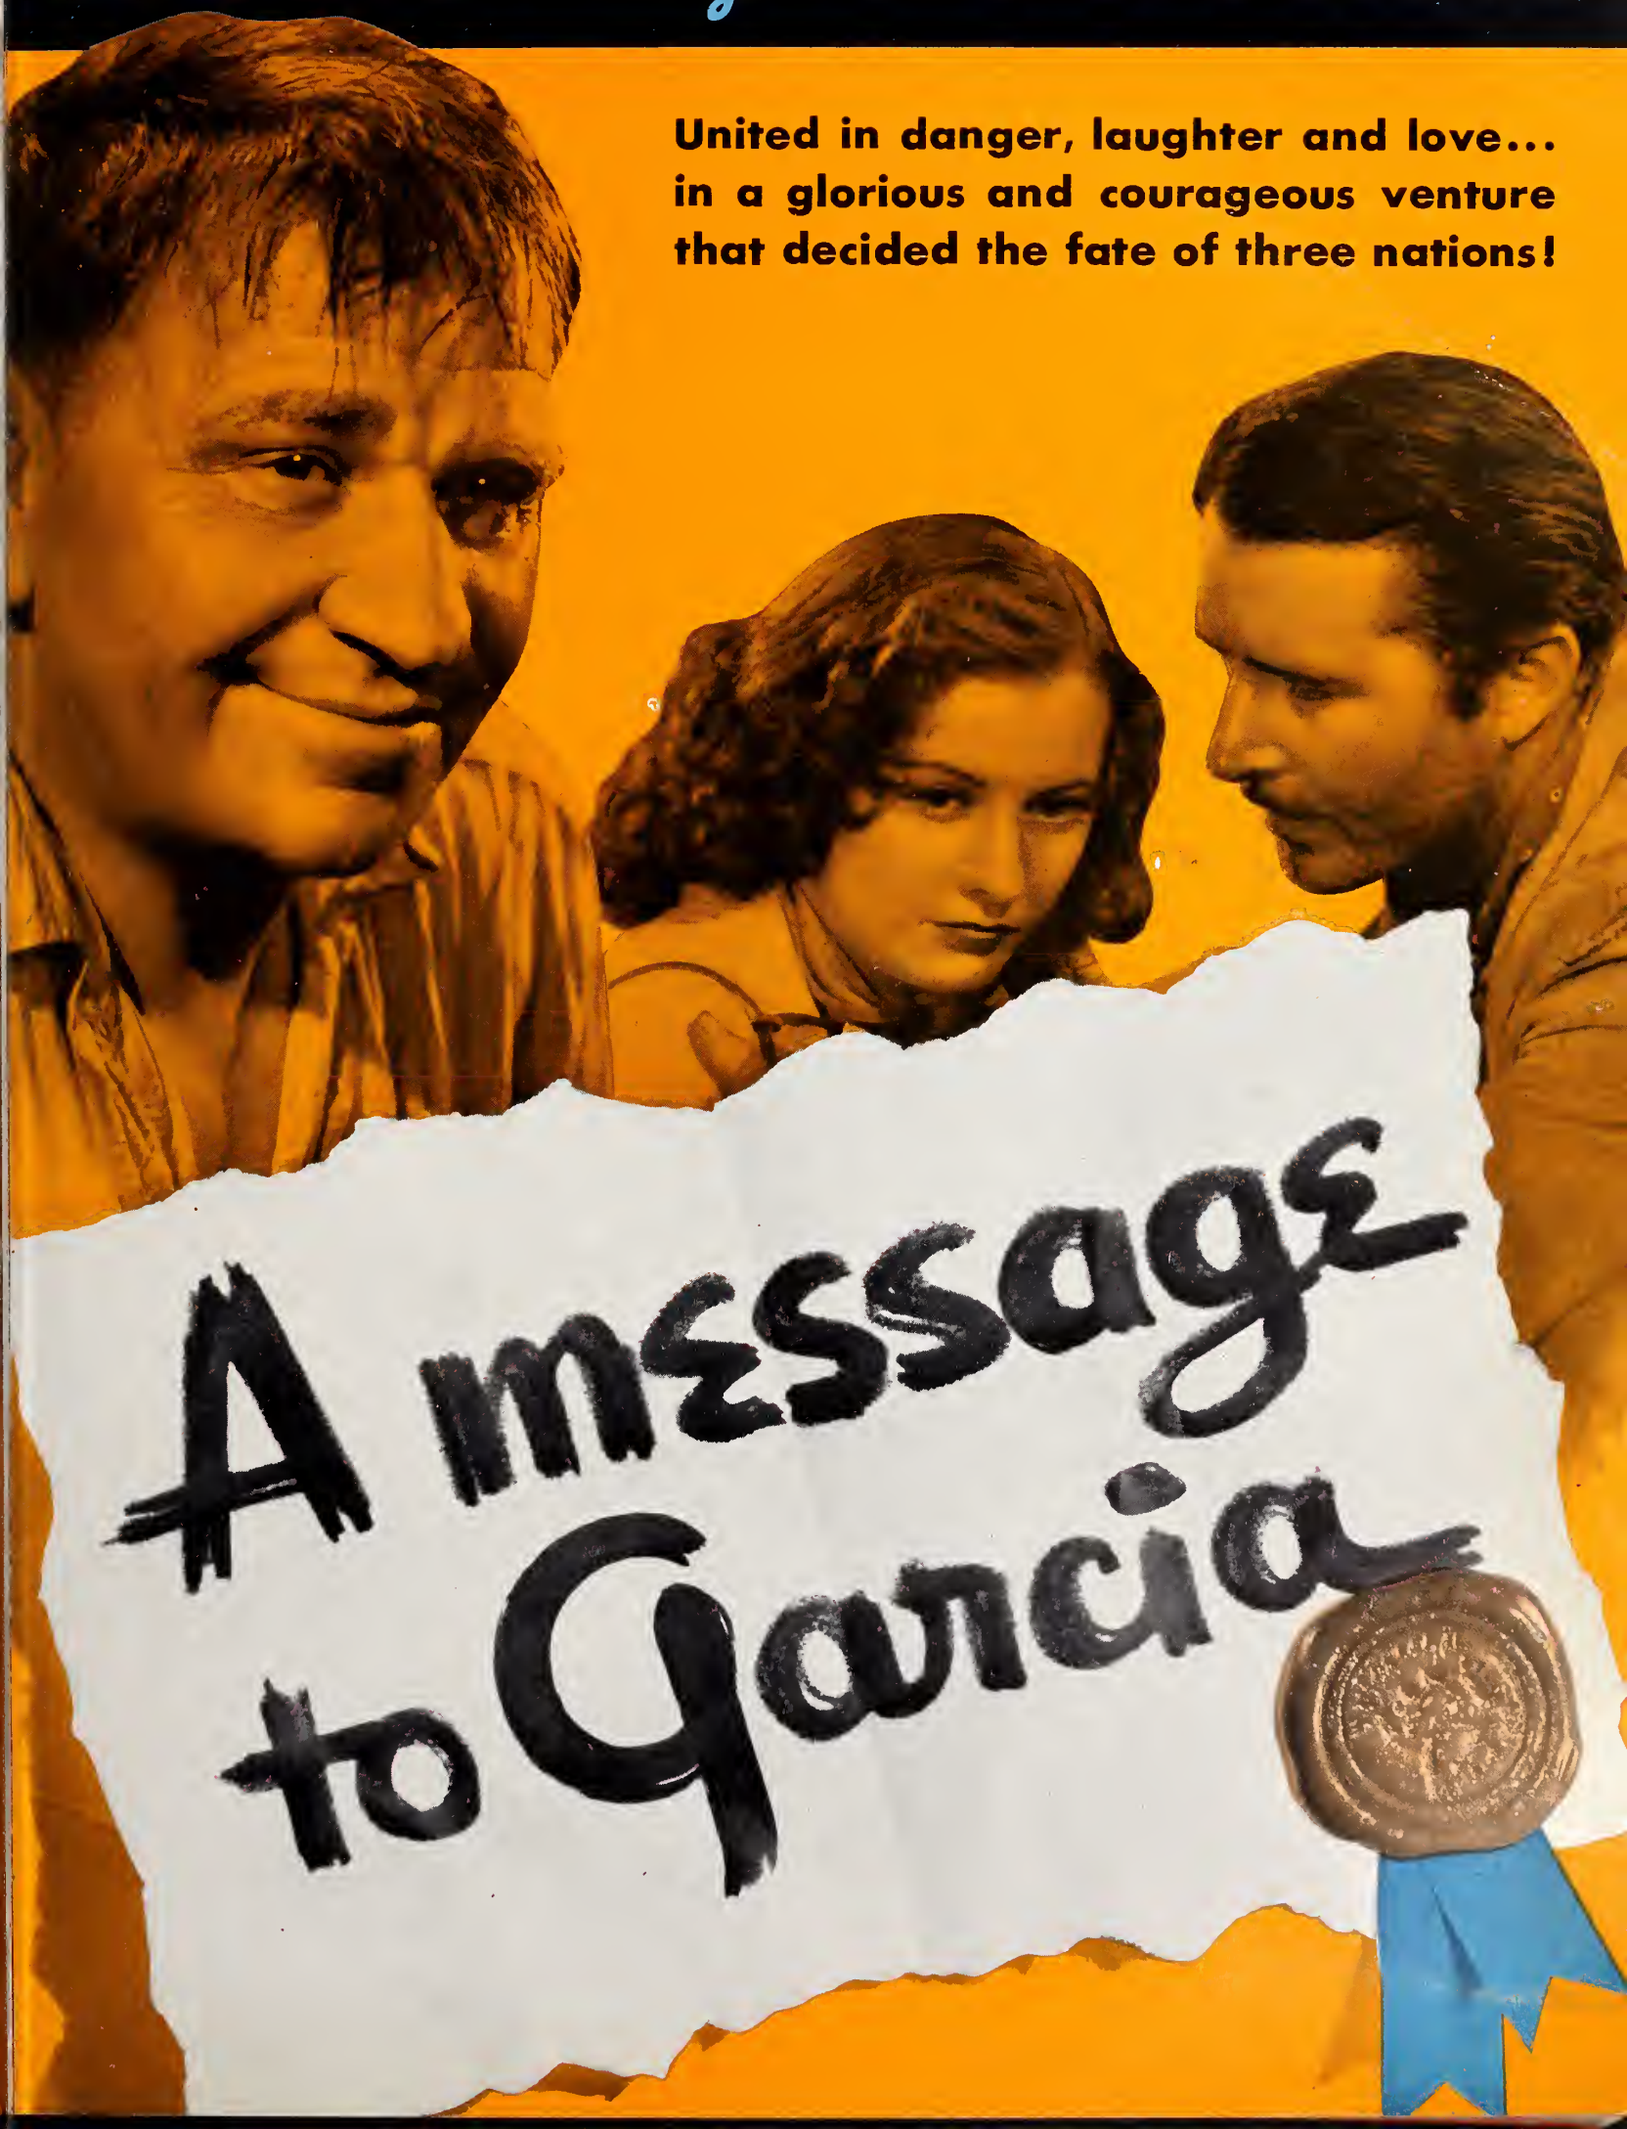
It boils down to a situation absolutely different from anything that the title might suggest when the convicts demand an unconditional pardon from the governor and the ranch owner, to gloss over his own intentions and avert possible repercussions upon himself, encourages them in their demands. The situation is potentially promising of a welter of adventure, action, romance, laughs, intrigue, drama and thrills.

As they will appear, the cast presents Lionell Atwill as the ranch owner and Irene Hervey as the secretary. The convicts are Wallace Ford and Bernardine Haynes. Raymond Walburn is the governor and Stuart Erwin the newspaper reporter. The role of the broken down film star is played by Louis Hayward, and Ann Loring is accompanying him. The others to be seen include J. Carrol Naish, William Newall, Robert Livingston, Edwin Maxwell, Harvey Stephens, Kitty McHugh and Charles Trowbridge.

Being directed by George B. Seitz, who has accounted for several of MGM's recent thrill action pictures, the production concentrates on that quality, building to a whole host of unanticipated situations and surprising thrills. The intent is to provide a vivid adventure feature, counterbalanced by romance, drama and thrills to make entertainment appealing to showmen and public alike.

The Road to Glory

(20th Century - Fox)



Drama

In the opinion of the producers this picture will prove the most sensational feature to have come to the screen since "All Quiet on the Western Front." It is a war story, told against the background of the World War, and, like "All Quiet," seeks to picturize all the horror, cruelty and injustice of war in all its grim and grisly ferocity. Further, it is the dramatic and intimate story of a girl's love for two men. Additionally it is the human interesting story of the great affection existing between an old veteran and his young officer son, a bond that impels them willingly to make the supreme sacrifice for the glory of their country.

It will present Warner Baxter, currently in "Prisoner of Shark Island" and "Robin Hood of El Dorado," Fredric March, Lionel Barrymore and June Lang in the principal roles. It will feature Gregory Ratoff, Victor Kilian, Paul Stanton, John Qualen, Julius Tannen and Theodore Von Eltz. The picture is being directed by Howard Hawks, who numbers among his credits "Scarface," "Viva Villa," "Ceiling Zero" and many other thrill pictures.

Being produced so that realism is the keynote of its conflicting love interest theme as well as marking the father-son relation, and particularly qualifying the nerve-shocking martial background, the film is making no concession to forced or artificial illusion. It is aiming to take its auditors actually under the shock of war as it authentically depicts the way soldiers must live and love, the soul searing experiences they must undergo and the sacrifices they must make in the name of patriotism. It does so to the tune of trench raids, enemy air bombardments, advances under barrages, and against the panorama of a great major offensive.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

M. N. Hillyer, operating the Strand theatre, at Creston, Iowa, is perplexed. The cause of his consternation is a nightgown. "In MGM's splendid 'Rose Marie,'" he writes, "Nelson Eddy, as the Mountie, realizes Jeanette MacDonald's true identity and rushes back to the hotel. He is met in the hallway by the proprietor in a long, flowing nightgown which reaches to the floor, and has wide stripes in horizontal lines around the bottom. The proprietor is pulling on an ordinary coat as the two enter Marie's room. When they pass through the door the coat is on, but under it the long striped nightie has miraculously changed to a white muslin nightshirt reaching only below the knees, and split at the sides in the manner those 'horse-and-buggy' garments are traditionally assumed to have been tailored."

Ed Levy, Connecticut MPTO lawyer, told us the other day of a case in which he was defending a client on charges of speeding on an open road at the rate of 45 miles per hour. "And in conclusion, your honor," spoke Levy to the judge, "the condition of the road is so terrible that a motorist could not possibly drive 45 miles an hour."

"Fined $25 for contempt of court," the justice bellowed to Lawyer Levy, who remained astonished for days until he discovered the reason for the contempt fine. Seems that the presiding judge who listened to the derogatory remarks about the condition of the roads was also a state commissioner of highways, and as such he felt that Mr. Levy had insulted him.

Motion picture theatre owners agree that music hath charms to soothe the savage breast, always provided that it does not belong to the business agent of a musicians' union.

IN DAYS OF OLD, WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD

Staff members of a Federal Writers' Project, in Ohio, working on the compilation of a national and state theatre guide, came upon the following set of rules and regulations, dated May 1, 1830, posted throughout the abandoned Columbia Street theatre in Cincinnati:

Gentlemen in boxes and the pit must please be particular in not disturbing the audience by loud talking in the barroom.

The cracking of nuts will be avoided while the curtain is up.

Gentlemen in boxes must remove their hats, refrain from sitting on the railings, and not lean forward from the side boxes during the performance.

Persons on the upper floors will be careful to avoid the custom of throwing nuts at persons on the lower floors, and those on the lower floors will refrain from climbing up the box rails during the performance.

Persons in the gallery are cautioned against striking the seats with sticks.

Spectators will not be permitted on the stage during the performance, as their presence distracts the manager.

A MIKE VOGEL, vociferous chairman of our Managers' Round Table Club, is at the moment recuperating from the task of submitting to New York's biggest executives a mountain of exploitation stunts and publicity freaks that had been sent in by theatre managers for the annual Quigley Awards judging.

The campaigns were virtually all of high standard, but Vogel bemoans the lack of old-fashioned publicity hoaxes, a la Harry Reichenbach, which brought first-page publicity and frequently the wrath of city editors when they became aware that they had been victimized by a smart press agent from Broadway. The wrath of a city editor is not to be invited, of course, but then, Reichenbach, as head of the old school, was frequently rewarded for his synthetic news efforts. Such as the time when he duped New York with "The Virgin of Stamboul," for Universal Pictures, some 16 years ago. He set the police dragging a lake in Central Park for the "virgin's body," and maintained a mysterious "official" Turkish high commission at a downtown hotel. The Turkish notables concerned were recruited from East Side New York coffee houses and sequestered in the Hotel Navarre while being trained in their parts. The largest item of expense in this campaign was $400 for French pastry served the Turks.

However, the net result in the press was worth thousands in free space, but the State of New York passed a law forbidding the giving of false information to the press. Reichenbach retaliated with a circular to the Legislature threatening to prosecute the members under the act for broken campaign promises.

The only one of several dozens of players, technicians, assistants, production and directorial creators and whoeverelse was not given credit in the opening advertisement for "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Apollo theatre in Kansas City was Mr. William Shakespeare. Where is that guy's agent?

Bob Levy, assistant manager of Kansas City's Mainstreet theatre, is a sensitive soul. For that reason the recent engagement of Fred Astaire in "Follow the Fleet" was a daily agony to him, despite the box office attendance.

Bob, in his leisure moments, is a musical comedy composer—perhaps not a musical comedy composer of note, but nevertheless a musical comedy composer. He worked hard on the score of a play that was presented some weeks ago at the Center theatre in his town, and, justifiably or not, was proud of the result. Even today Bob Levy looks on that brainchild as something untouchable. He had been waiting for hourly offers from Broadway.

Imagine, therefore, his consternation when, on the opening night of "Follow the Fleet," he heard a player, enacting the role of a theatrical mogul, crack from the screen: "We had a show called 'Mum's the Word' that folded in four days."

Bob's play, you see, was "Mum's the Word," and played exactly four days, too. Now he's wondering who's taking a shot at him from Hollywood.

This is the story of Precious Betsy and of two gentlemen of Hollywood's motion picture colony who went to the races.

It all started when Director Eddie Cline passed along a "hot tip" to Director Ray McCarey and Bill Thomas when they were taking off for some innocent fun at Santa Anita racetrack.

Precious Betsy is money in the bank," said Mr. Cline. "You fellows are chumps if you don't play her. She's all set."

So Mr. McCarey and Mr. Thomas, never fellows to fail a tipster friend, laid $45 between them across the board on Precious Betsy—and Precious Betsy ran a bang-up last.

Messrs. McCarey and Thomas left Santa Anita, slightly burned. "It wasn't the $45, mind you, but the principle of the thing," they bromoed, deciding on the spot that something should be done to warn Eddie Cline against further irresponsible sponsoring of temperamental nags. They rented for $7 a sway-backed, spavined, knock-kneed nag that all too obviously had bogged down under many hard winters. That prize antique they tied on the back of Eddie's car. Lest there be room for reasonable doubt, they painted "Precious Betsy" in large letters upon the protruding ribs of the old horse.

Then they retired to ambush.

It was a good idea. The only trouble was that, in the excitement, the horse was tied to a stranger's sedan, and the stranger rode off into the night without discovering his four-legged trailer, which was lost forever to the pranksters. McCarey and Thomas had to pay the animal's owner $70 more for losing Precious Betsy.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

The Singing Kid

(Warner)

Musical Comedy Drama

There's much that's entertaining in this picture. Most of it is new; funny comedy, catchy, oddly devised music, eye-thrilling spectacle, intriguing love interest, a compensating bit of drama and a couple of traces of vivid villainy. The show, not discounting the value of star—and the name Al Jolson takes on a new significance here as he's always a first water entertainer—and the worth of supporting personalities, is its own selling argument. Not much that any exhibitor could want, no matter what kind of a theatre he has or what kind of audience, has been omitted.

The story isn't a great one, but it's a satisfactory vehicle for the exhibitions of personal talents, specialty features, spectacle contrast and accompanying music, dialogue and action. It tells of a topnotch stage performer, a grand guy, everybody's friend, whose many kindnesses are rewarded with evil when his manager swipes his dough, runs off with his girl and leaves him alone to fight an income tax case that impoverishes him. As a result of all his trouble, he loses his only real possession, his voice, and is forced to retire from the stage.

Recouping in the country, he falls in love with a nice girl. She's writing a play and it's terrible. His efforts to sell it meet with ridicule. He buys it himself, though making it seem that a producer is the purchaser. Small town gossip wises the girl up to the situation. The bounced benefactor, returning to New York after recovering his voice, is in no mood for stage work without the inspiration of the girl. When she comes to him, he goes on to score a great triumph.

Embellishing that story, in which Jolson appears to better advantage than in any of his recent appearances and newcomer Beverly Roberts gives promise of amounting to something, is a colorful comedy contrast. It has the Yacht Club Boys in a specialty number that's a riot of frothy fun. It teams them with Jolson in a musical chase sequence that's surprisingly different. With Mitchell and Durant contributing their bust-'em-around foolishness, it also has the comedy standbys Edward Everett Horton and Allen Jenkins performing in characteristic fashion. Lyle Talbot and Claire Dodd are the conniving double-crossing pair who, in temporarily wrecking Jolson's career, supply the melodrama.

For spectacle it has plenty girl adorned backstage musical show atmosphere. With the Jolson-Yacht Club Boys musical chase feature, in which modern rhythm comes into conflict with the Mammy theme and succumbs to it after a whole city dances, there's an interpolated semi-spiritual sequence with Negro chorus, "Save Me Sister," featuring the star, Winifred Shaw and Cab Calloway and his band. Supplementing this is an unusual opening which presents Jolson in a revival medley of his greatest stage and picture song hits.

Novelty in every phase is the tune to which the show spins. As such it is unique entertainment. Clean and entertaining, it would be wise, if possible, to see the picture in advance of playing, to get ideas on how best to publicize it.

Captain January

(20th Century-Fox)

Light Drama

When Shirley Temple is featured, the picture's entertainment appeal and exploitation quality is pretty much fore-acknowledged. In this light drama of down east fisherfolk, there's all the Shirley that anyone could desire. Singing, dancing, acting and in her specialty features, she's ample guarantee that the attraction should prove highly satisfactory to both exhibitors and the public.

Basically it's a story of a little sea waif and the great affection that exists between her and the old lighthouse keeper, Captain January, who, after rescuing her, takes her to live with him. This angle, always deeply human interesting, is light, gay and cheerful, sparkling with that quality that brings smiles and laughs. It is the occasion for Shirley's singing "Early Bird" and "At the Codfish Ball." Also it is the background for the performance of several of her dance numbers.

The show takes a dramatic twist when the new truant officer, Agatha Morgan, decides that the child is not being brought up in the proper atmosphere, that her education is being neglected and that she should be placed in an institution. The friendly enemies January and Captain Nazro plan how they can outwit the menacing Agatha. Tenseness of the drama is eased by a comedy stiuation in which Shirley outsmarts Agatha's pet, Cyril, in an examination. The triumph of that thrilling January and his waif-ward, tragedy comes when he learns that the government is installing automatic lights and he will lose his job. It takes a further heart touching twist when Nazro announces that he has found Shirley's relatives, Mr. and Mrs. John Mason.

Claiming the little girl, they take her to Boston. But all the luxuries, toys and good times they can provide for her can never wipe out the memories of her happiness with January and Nazro. Not until they give her a big yacht and she finds that January is the skipper and Nazro the first mate does Shirley become the gay light-hearted little miss she was while living in the lighthouse with Captain January.

Running the full scale of theatrical entertainment elements, blending drama with comedy, contrasting both by a pair of light love interest situations and embellishing all with nicely spotted music and dancing, the attention stimulating quality of the attraction is evident. It is more significant when Shirley Temple is the star.

Previewed in Westwood Village Theatre to a laughing, smiling, sometimes sobbing audience. The enthusiastic favorable reaction is just a sample of what to expect wherever the picture is played.

The Country Doctor

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama

Unquestionably the first thing an exhibitor should do toward selling this picture to his public is to see it. It is distinctly unlikely that by any other means he can equip himself adequately for the promotion job to which a firsthand knowledge of the production's content and character will prompt him. Nothing quite like it has come from the camera in a decade, if ever, and possibly no subject in the annals of showmanship has possessed such a wealth of plain, wholesome human appeal. All of the honest, homespun, powerful adjectives and advertising assurances abused and abandoned in a generation of exploitation best described as high-powered may be taken down from the top shelf, dusted off and applied without reservation by as many means and media as are or can be made available.

The suggestion that exhibitors first see the picture is based on a belief that they, like the patrons they must appeal to in their exploitation, have read and heard so much about the Dionne quintuplets and the details of filming them for the picture that it will be difficult to conceive of the production as other than merely a vehicle for their commercial presentation. Promotion planned and executed in this frame of mind would fall far short of merited caliber and work injustice upon the feature, the exhibitor, his box office and his public. Seeing the picture automatically will safeguard any and every exhibitor against this experience.

The appeal of "The Country Doctor" is directly to the human emotions, the unchanged and unchangeable ones which no amount of sophistication, radical doctrine or pagan practice has touched or can. There is tragedy in an early sequence, there is an especially effective kind of comedy throughout, and a steadily maintained, consistent dramatic interest. Save for the quintuplet birth, which is treated in the picture much as it took place in fact, no incident is in itself extraordinary or unduly emphasized. Much or most of the story material is drawn from routine record of life and death in the north country. Motivation is logical, stemming from simple problems and processes of plain people, and effect follows cause with the calm, undeviating regularity of daily events in commonplace lives.

In the story Jean Hersholt is cast as Dr. John Luke, for thirty-five years the only physician serving a lumber community in northern Canada. Diphtheria strikes when the community is snowed in for the winter. Aided by Katherine Kennedy (Dorothy Peterson), the company nurse who has worked with him for years, Dr. Luke strives to cope with the epidemic. When his supply of serum is about exhausted, with all regular means of transportation and communication put out of commission by the storm, he is able to communicate with his brother, Dr. Paul Luke, fashionable physician in charge of a Montreal hospital, by means of an amateur short wave set built by a crippled lumberjack, urging him to have the lumber company plane bring serum at once.

Sir Basil Crawford, head of the company, hesitates, whereupon Paul Luke, son of Dr. Paul, flies his own plane into the blizzard and arrives with the needed supplies, damaging his plane so that he must stay until spring, which affords him time to fall in love with Mary MacKenzie, daughter of the company boss, who resents Dr. Luke's popularity in the community.

When spring comes Dr. Luke goes to Montreal to plead with the lumber company to establish a hospital in his area. Sir Basil declines to do so. Dr. Luke finds, on his return, that MacKenzie, the local boss, has brought in a young company doctor to take over his practice and instructed employees not to talk to Dr. Luke in the future. Later on, the young doctor discovers that Dr. Luke never has taken out a license to practice, whereupon Constable Jim Ogden, Dr. Luke's old friend, is sent to inform him that he must leave the community.

As the doctor is about to leave by boat, Asa Wyatt, lumberman, comes to inform him of an interesting event impending at his home. Dr. Luke goes to attend the mother. Constable Ogden follows. Mrs. Wyatt gives birth to quintuplets. The news flashes around the world, gifts and guests arrive in profusion, and the Governor General arrives ultimately to dedicate the long-needed hospital and present to Dr. Luke the Order of the British Empire.—WEAVER, New York.

Screen play by Sonya Levien. Photographed under technical supervision of Dr. Allan Ray Dafoe. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1976. Running time, 94 minutes. Release date, March 8. Snowed Under

Farce Comedy

Farce comedy, this majors in ingredients that ordinarily make customers laugh. The humor is sometimes broad, sometimes subtle, yet always it has the power to attain its objective. To get over the complete spirit of fun, the producers have included plenty typically modern in action, dialogue and situation. At the same time they have not been hesitant to revert to the old slapstick school.

Because playwright Alan Tanner has lost his magic touch and a necessary third act is not forthcoming, producer Arthur Layton, whose dough is at stake, bundles him off to a Connecticut farmhouse in the dead of winter to do something about it. At the same time he takes the precaution to send ex-wife number one, Alice, in whose companionship the writer has done his best work, along to act as an inspirational secretary. But things happen to take Tanner's mind off his work. The first episode brings a lovesick hero-worshiping girl, Pat Quinn, in an attempt to force her attention upon the bewildered playwright. She makes things hot, and they become hotter with the appearance of ex-wife number two, Daisy Lowell, accompanied by lawyer McBride and the local sheriff, Orlando and a jug of applejack.

Daisy is determined to collect back alimony and she's there with her retinue to see that Tanner works. Tanner doesn't get much opportunity to finish the show, but audiences get plenty to laugh at, what with three women, a lawyer and a sheriff yapping at the man's heels. On top of that there's a welter of slapstick stuff, highlighted by a series of snow slides which bury individuals and entire groups at the most appropriate moments. In the end Tanner has finished his play. He's also found out that he still loves Alice. Pat is pretty much taken by lawyer McBride, and between her jug and Orlando, Daisy does pretty well for herself.

Fast moving, not bothering with inconsequentials but devoting itself solely to the purpose of being nonsensicallv amusing, the show has plenty to interest the comedy fans.

Previewed in Warner's Hollywood Theatre, deluxe first-run. Quickly grasping the picture's comedy spirit, the audience found that its laughter drowned out ensuing dialogue and sound effects.

13 Hours by Air

(Paramount-Sheldon)

Melodrama

All having definite showmanship significance, the entertainment ingredients of this picture cover a wide range. Basically it's an air-action-adventure-melodrama. This quality is embellished by appealing love interest, a very different comedy contrast, definite tinges of gangsterism, enough heroism and villainy to suit anybody, and the whole is held together by an effective thread of suspense that conceals what is going to happen until the very end.

A transcontinental plane starts west from Newark, carrying an odd assortment of passengers. Identities and characters being clearly established, romance begins to develop almost immediately between pilot Gordon and passenger Felice Rollins. There is something sinister about Palmer and Dr. Evarts, but the antics of juvenile Waldemar and his governess Miss Harkins account only for comedy. At Chicago another passenger, Gregorie Stephani, boards the plane. Upon his arrival, it is evident to Gordon that all the passengers have something to hide from one other and that Palmer and Stephanie are watching Felice closely.

Suspense building rigidly, a storm forces the plane down in the Rockies. Then the action hits a fast and furious pace. It develops that Palmer and Stephanie are a pair of gangsters intent upon snatching Waldemar and Felice. When it is revealed that Evarts is a detective trailing the pair. Palmer wounds him and co-pilot Scott. When it looks as though Palmer will attain command of the situation, young Waldemar, who heretofore has been quite a pest to all, comes to the aid of Gordon to overpower Palmer and Stephanie. The desperadoes safely tucked away, the plane takes off for its destination and consummation of the Gordon-Felice romance upon its arrival.

Fast moving, blending its qualities of romance, melodrama, comedy, excitement, thrill and intrigue so that there are no letdowns in the actual or implied action, the show is very different from the formula air adventure thriller. Opportunities for unusual interest creating showmanship are present in adequate quantities to suit almost any kind of commercial requirements.

Previewed in Alexander Theatre, Glendale, Cal. Audience reaction indicated that the picture should have little difficulty in creating and holding the interest of audiences appreciating a combination of thrill action, comedy and romance.

Comedy

A comedy with a light but exciting dramatic contrast, this modernized adaptation of George M. Cohen's stage play, "The Hometowners," provides abundance of fun out of a melange of erroneous opinions and an old friend's mistakes while thinking that he's acting only for his pal's best interests. In other words, it's pretty much a comedy of errors and as such provides the elements of highly satisfactory entertainment appeal for any kind of program.

Vic Arnold comes out of the west to make a killing in Wall Street. He falls in love with night club star, Beth Calhoun. Firmly established in business, he stuns his serious minded board of directors, who look upon the new financial wizard as a flash in the pan, by announcing that he's going to marry the girl. To make the affair complete he summons his chum P. H. Bancroft and his wife to the event, with the intention that P. H. shall be the best man.

The complexion of the picture changes when P. H., after taking a few looks at Beth and her family, becomes convinced that they're a bunch of chiselers, primarily interested in getting a stranglehold on Vic's money. Refusing to have anything to do with the ceremony, he becomes a trial and tribulation to Vic and a plain pain in the neck to the Calhouns. However, after Vic, with the assistance of his valet-trainer, Casey, manages to convince the recalcitrant P. H. that the Calhouns are themselves wealthy, the stormy petrel becomes contrite. Beth, as the result of P. H.'s antics being now cold to Vic, P. H. is completely persona non grata to the Calhouns. To get around the situation, P. H., thinking it clever, steals a bracelet which Beth returned to Vic. The disappearance results in all sorts of excitement, but it manages to permit P. H. to get the whole menage together, whereupon, after he has made proper apologies all around, Vic and Beth resume their romance.

Continually light and gay and all the time threatening to explode into a welter of trouble, the show moves fast and builds its situations so that the element of surprise occupies an unusual importance. While there are fairly good names to use for primary interest stimulating purposes, a campaign that sells the story of the whole show and what it means for those who like fast and furious fun should be productive of best results.

Previewed in Warners' Downtown Theatre. In a Broadway first-run drop-in house, the audience, which didn't expect it would see a preview, was quickly swept into the picture's mood and apparently, as indicated by the laughter and applause, enjoyed it greatly.

Petticoat Fever

Farce Comedy

Fervid farce comedy romance in the snowfields of the frozen north is the tune to which this gay rollicking feature spins. It sparkles with laugh provoking quality in action, situations and dialogue. Practically all the dialogue is of exceedingly smart quality. It's the foundation for the accompanying actions and reactions. Fast moving, well acted and directed, production values being all that anyone expects from this producing company's efforts, the show has a punch for the most discriminate. Teaming the long absent Robert Montgomery with Myrna Loy in the leading roles and supporting them principally with Reginald Owen, the show provides name values that should prove highly beneficial in interesting audiences in its comedy entertainment value.

Wireless operator Dinsmore has been stranded on a bleak northland coast for a couple of years. During all that time he hasn't seen a white woman. His only ambition is to get back to civilization. Then, out of the skies, drops an airplane. The passengers are heart-thrilling Irene Campion and the fuddy, duddy old codger to whom she is engaged, Sir James Felton. Immediately the young folk fall in love; a sort of spatting, quarreling on-again-off-again affairs that has them both and Sir James at their wit's end. The situation becomes complicated when, via whale ship, Dinsmore's erstwhile fiancee lands.

That's too much for Irene, but it's great for Sir James, who sees it as the solution of all his troubles. As he takes off with Irene over the dogsled route, it is revealed that Dinsmore's old flame has learned that he has come into the inheritance of vast British estates and a proud title and that she only wants to ride along for the wealth and social position that Dinsmore's windfall will give her. Now comes a chase which culminates when Dinsmore catches up with Irene and befuddled Sir James learns that no one and nothing can stand in the way of young love.

Not entirely novel, the show has an airy refreshing character for any kind of audience. Additionally there are many suggestions for attention stimulating showmanship. Dialogue lines easily can be transposed to catchy selling copy.

Previewed in Ritz Theatre, Los Angeles first-run neighborhood house. Audience laughter many times drowned out the following conversation.

French Drama

Charles Boyer, featured in a number of recent American productions, plays a similarly moody, melancholy role in this French version of a stage play by Henry Bernstein. English titles are superimposed. Reaction of a matinee audience at the Cinema de Paree, New York, where patron comment was in French as flowing as that of the players, supported an independently arrived at and largely optical impression rating the importation well above par for its kind.

Presented in an area where the French compose an important box office factor, box office appeal is ready made. Elsewhere the name of Boyer probably offers the best advertising material, although the story is of a kind with direct appeal to the more thoughtful type of audience. Naturally, all advertising matter should emphasize the French dialogue and the English titles.

In the story Boyer is cast as Phillipe, a brooding, radical artist who draws for a newspaper publisher a caricature of Clara Stuart, a cinema star, whom he comes to regard as a personification of the worship of material things. Determining to focus public thought upon the error of such idolatry, he shoots the star as she leaves her theatre, wounding her slightly, and is arrested. She recovers and, facing him, falls in love with him and determines to seek his acquittal.

While trial of the case is pending, her manager arranges for her to produce a picture based on the attempt on her life. At the trial she pleads for the prisoner's release, is denounced by him for making what he declares to be a commercial bid for publicity, but succeeds, nevertheless, in getting his sentence cut down to six months. When he is released from prison she meets him with her car, convinces him of her sincerity, and they establish a relationship in which he is to duplicate the position vacated, through divorce, by her husband.

At this point word comes from the studio that retakes are necessary for a portion of the picture and, following her, he learns the nature of the story and decides that the star is deluding him and encouraging his love only to commercialize it as story content. She denies it but they separate, tearfully, and passage of time and production of other pictures proves that this, intentionally or not, is the case.—Weaver, New York.

Living Dangerously

(Associated British Pictures)

Problem Drama

Directed by Herbert Brenon, and with Otto Kruger in the lead, this Elstree production has American values which are accentuated by the fact that the opening and closing scenes are set in New York, the story proper being presented as a narration. This inset story has a London background and, apart from considerable dramatic values, offers a realistic reconstruction of a sitting of the General Medical Council. The arraignment of the doctor hero for unprofessional conduct, before this formidable body of venerable British medicos, is both dramatically and pictorially a high spot.

Generally, story values are popular and well presented. The two male leads are doctors and they are in love with the same woman. This complication is intensified by the background of hospital and consulting room.

The climax, effectively presented, at the same time possibly raises a problem of censorship. The hero, in New York, has succeeded in enlisting the sympathy of the district attorney by his explanation of why he killed a blackmailer. To clear him of suspicion, the lawyer fires a shot, from the dead man's pistol, which causes only a flesh wound but provides conclusive circumstantial evidence that the killing was done in self-defense.

In the New York apartment of Dr. Stanley, heart specialist, a shot is heard, and immediately afterward Stanley rings the neighboring apartment of his friend Gale, district attorney, and asks him to come down. Gale finds the body of a man in Stanley's room. He riddles the doctor's story of an attempt to hold him up, and forces him to tell the true story:

Many years before, Stanley was Dr. Norton, practicing in Harley Street, London, in partnership with Dr. Henry Pryor. A gambler and roué, Pryor has attempted to get himself out of a financial jam by supplying morphine to drug addicts. Norton gives him notice of a termination of partnership. In revenge, Pryor has Norton charges with unprofessional conduct by the alienation of Mrs. Pryor's affections. Actually, though they love each other, the relations of the two have been innocent, but a lie by Pryor's secretary-paramour is believed and Norton is "struck off the rolls." Pryor is later found guilty of drug trafficking and sent to prison.

Norton and Mrs. Pryor—whom he cannot marry because Pryor refuses to divorce her—come to America and, after years, Norton obtains his American degree under the name of Stanley, and eventually becomes a heart specialist in New York. Pryor has tracked him down and, refusing money, has demanded that he be taken into partnership and given refuge in Stanley's apartment. As the only solution Stanley has shot him. The story ends as already described.

There is plenty to sell in this picture and many an opportunity for originality in the doing of it. Those old problems of the doctor who is also a man, of the clash of passion and professional duty can all be restated. What happens when a medical man goes crooked and employs his scientific knowledge and special immunities for criminal purposes is

Italian Comedy

Although presented in America without the customarily superimposed English titles, this Italian production is of a character in which action is so predominant that the story contour may be comprehended by eye alone. From audience manifestations noted at the World Theatre, New York, there is much of quiet and a little of lusty humor in the dialogue. The action, which starts slowly and mounts steadily to a whirlwind finish, is closely enough related to the Keystone school so that there can be no misunderstanding as to what's going on.

The story relates the modernization of young, backward Professor Jack, who has been reared in seclusion by an old-fashioned aunt. While he is fishing on a stream, a parachute drops young, wealthy, beautiful and modern Dora into the water nearby. He takes her to his home. A party of her gay friends arrives and, in a sequence of events in which he seeks to acquire their sophistication, he learns that he is in love with Dora. Various misadventures mark his efforts to become a man of the world. A nobleman, whose engagement to Dora is predicated on her wealth, takes her to the altar, but Professor Jack, throwing off restraint, commandeers a passenger bus, scatters boulevard traffic in a headlong drive, and arrives in time to carry her away.—WEAVER, New York.

Hell-Ship Morgan

(Columbia)

Action Drama

All the familiar action that pleases fans who like their heroes tough and their action hard and fast has been incorporated into this latest version of "Hell-Ship Morgan." Showmen are entirely familiar with this type of film and know the treatment it requires in their individual situations, for its hero is tough, always ready to get his way by using his fists, yet with a heart that can be reached.

George Bancroft is the Morgan this time, and portrays him with gusto. Ann Sothern is the girl and Victor Jory the other man who eventually winds up with Miss Sothern as Bancroft makes the supreme sacrifice. And thus is name value provided.

Director D. Ross Lederman, showing a familiarity with this kind of plot, keeps it moving at a rapid pace, interspersing enough hand-to-hand fighting, both by men among themselves and combined against the elements, to satisfy the most exacting of action loving audiences.

The picture opens with Bancroft, skipper of a tuna boat out of a Pacific port, and known along the California coast as being the toughest and best skipper as well as its prime woman hater, throwing in his lot with derelict Jory.

As the friendship of the two grows, with both men sailing the same boat and Jory working for his master's papers, Miss Sothern enters their lives. Bancroft finds himself again taking a woman seriously and trusting her, while to Jory she is just another female.

Bancroft and Miss Sothern finally marry and sail away on the boat on their honeymoon. But the inevitable happens, and Jory and Miss Sothern find their love for each other is too strong to deny. A scheming member of the crew tells Bancroft and again he finds himself duped by a woman.

As matters come to a head, a terrific storm breaks and the boat is in danger of being lost as the mast is carried away. Jory swims out in the raging sea to cut the spars loose and is trapped. This leaves the way for Bancroft to realize his wife's happiness means more to him than anything else, so he rescues Jory, though his back is broken in doing so. The lovers are united as the real hero, "Hell-Ship Morgan," gives his life that those dearest to him might find happiness.

The film is packed with fast moving sequences all the way through, and even though it is no pretentious production by any means, showmen can sell it as an action drama and handle it in the manner best suited for their situations.—BAEHLER, New York.

ATTACK ON FILMS IS INJECTED INTO FEDERAL THEATRE PROJECT

Soviet Pictures Praised in Comparison with "Tripe They Grind Out of Hollywood" in Lines of "Class of '29"

An attack upon American motion pictures in the lines of a Federal Theatre Project play coupled with charges that the taxpayers' money was being used to further Red propaganda added more turmoil this week to the Government's $7,000,000 theatre program. Actors, patriotic organizations, newspapers and citizens protested "Triple-A Plowed Under," a WPA production in New York.

Representative Robert L. Bacon, Republican, of New York, charged that the WPA theatre in New York was being used as a propaganda agency, and assailed the production for what he called an attack on the supreme court, in connection with its invalidation of the AAA.

As a protest against what was termed a Communistic scene in the show, 150 war veterans employed in federal theatre projects marched on the Biltmore theatre. A large police detachment prevented the demonstrators from storming the house. Two men were arrested inside the theatre for calling on the audience to sing the national anthem, and a third, a stage manager of the production who protested, also was taken in custody. They later were released.

On the heels of this disturbance came charges that a projected WPA production, "Class of '29," was rank Communistic propaganda, and an investigation was demanded of Harry L. Hopkins, national relief administrator. Chief protestants were members of the Federal Theatre Veterans League.

A portion of the script of the play, which was slated for production at the Manhattan theatre, had one of the characters say that "a Soviet poster compared with an American advertising lithograph is like a Soviet film compared with the stuff they grind out of Hollywood."

And a few lines later came this: "I still remember the ones (films) I saw during the Hoover administration. You don't mean they've changed them." A second character answers: "Only the revolution will change that tripe."

Meanwhile relief officials gravely questioned whether the play would be put on the boards, although it has been in rehearsal 13 weeks.

Philip W. Barber, regional director of the project, denied the existence of Communistic propaganda in the two shows under fire. He insisted "Triple-A Plowed Under" is a factual presentation, "in which the material in every scene is taken from newspaper accounts." He deplored newspaper publication of lines taken from the context of "Class of '29," describing them as "words of adolescents spoken in jesting mood."

Willis Browne, stage manager for "Triple-A Plowed Under," whose suspension figured in the stormy opening on Saturday night at the Biltmore, remained suspended.

A resolution denouncing Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national director, for "substituting Communism" for American principles of the stage was adopted by the Federal Theatre Workers League, and charges are to be filed with Mr. Hopkins against her and Mr. Barber.

Boston also has its WPA theatre troubles. There an investigation is being made into the activities which disrupted the federal theatre program in Massachusetts, resulting in the suspension of Hiram Motherwell, regional director, and Laurence Hanson, state director. Leonard L. Gallagher of New York was appointed acting state director.

Albany, N. Y., will have no federal theatre unit because of the dearth of professional theatre folk who are qualified to enroll in the project.

Two units opened in Chicago last week. "A Texas Steer" was the attraction at the Blackstone and "An Enemy of the People" at the Great Northern. Prices ranged from 25 cents to 75 cents top. Business was described as "fair," and newspaper comment was considered favorable.

U. S. THEATRE PROJECT ADDING A RADIO UNIT

The Government's federal theatre program is "taking to the air."

Philip W. Barber, New York regional director of the WPA theatre project, revealed this week the addition of a radio unit to its activities. It will be known as "The Federal Theatre of the Air," and broadcasting will be over WNYC, the municipally owned station.

The objectives of the radio unit, said Mr. Barber, will be to provide substantial entertainment programs and to create radio employment for theatre folk. It is hoped that the air shows will bring new talent, particularly vaudevile actors, to the attention of commercial sponsors. The artists will be paid the regular WPA salary of $103.40 a month.

No date has been set for the first program, nor has it been decided how often the broadcasts will take place.

Consolidated Dividend

The net of Consolidated Film Industries for the year ended December 31, 1935, amounted to $1,077,450, equal to 53 cents a share on the common stock, against $917,160 or 22 cents a share the year before.

Dramatists Stand Pat on Agreement

Despite demands and resolutions of the Broadway producing managers that the new playwright-manager agreement be changed to give the manager a larger share of the money derived from play sales to motion pictures, the Council of the Dramatists' Guild indicated this week that the matter is closed and that it has no intention of opening negotiations with the managers in the matter.

"The futility of such negotiations has been amply demonstrated in the past," said Sidney Howard, president of the Guild. He added, however, that the managers' recommendations would be given "prompt and serious" consideration.

The managers, however, declared it was a "fight to a finish," and that one of the results would be that Broadway production would be reduced to a minimum. They anticipate that by fall, when production really starts, the agreement will be changed.

The Guild Council received an invitation Wednesday from the League of New York Theatres to negotiate a new minimum basic agreement. The Guild said only five or six producers have signed. The Authors' Guild adopted the agreement to cover book dramatizing.

The managers made a decisive move late last week when the members of the League of New York Theatres voted to seek a conciliatory or arbitration of their differencies with the Guild, and, failing this, to set up their own form of contract and stick to it.

All this was set forth in a resolution providing:

1. The producing managers' contract committee is authorized to seek reconciliation and negotiate a "fair agreement."

2. If the managers refuse to yield, then the contract committee shall be an arbitration committee to offer the Guild arbitration of the dispute under the rules of the American Arbitration Association.

3. If the playwrights won't arbitrate, the committee will draw up its own manager-author agreement, and the managers will be expected to sign a promise that they will use it exclusively. In that event a producer who has signed the pledge will boycott any playwright who insists on the Dramatists' Guild terms.

This agreement is to provide enforcement of its provisions on the signatories through injunction or otherwise. Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive advisor to the League, informed members that the decisions show "a determination and united front," and that "they represent a constructive goal and sound strategy."

The resolutions were the work of the younger managers in the League, who had threatened to withdraw if the League rejected these suggestions. Their objection is not so much against reduced participation in film rights but that the new agreement vests complete control of the plays in the authors, with no voice to the producing managers.

Members of the League's contract committee, which is seking reconciliation with Guild are Brock Pemberton, chairman; James R. Ullman, who heads the group of younger managers; Dwight Deere Wiman, Lee Shubert, Max Gordon, Marcus Heiman, Alfred de Liagre, Martin Beck, Warren P. Munsell, Gilbert Miller.

More than 700 in the business of the motion picture participated in the fun at the Naked Truth Dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Hotel Astor in New York Saturday night. Topping the entertainment were a travesty on a producer and his publicity man, climaxed by an exploitation parade, and a newsreel of the party. Ralph Rolan, March of Time vice-president in charge of public relations, produced the play, which was directed by Charlie Williams, who with Marcy Klauber had written it. Charles Curran conceived the parade, Frank Ventre was musical director, and Chris Bente was stage manager. A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News, had charge of the newsreel making. Bill Park, makeup editor, helped with the editing, William Clements and Nate Wolinsky were at the cameras.

Gordon S. White, president of the AMPA, presided at the "20th anniversary studio party." On the general committee, with Paul Benjamin, chairman, Marvin Kirsch, vice-chairman, and Milton Silver, were Alex Gottlieb, Jack Harrower, Ralph E. Lund, G. R. O'Neill, Edward McNamee, "Hap" Hadley, Edward F. Finney, Tom Waller, Monroe Greenthal, Ray Gallagher, S. Barret McCormick, Silas F. Seadler, Bert Adler, L. F. Guimond, Charles Curran, W. R. SEC Report Shows Shifts in Stocks

According to the semi-monthly report of the Securities and Exchange Commission released last week, Jack L. Warner acquired 3,000 shares of Warner common in January, giving him a total of 88,060, and sold 33,000 six per cent convertible debentures, leaving his holdings at 1,823,000.

Jack Cohn of Columbia is shown in the report to have acquired, through a stock dividend, 813 voting trust certificates, bringing his total to 33,357.

The report also showed that Sidney Towell of New York disposed of 275 shares of Twentieth Century-Fox common, leaving him 34 shares, and 550 shares of $1.50 cumulative preferred, leaving 67. Ontario Exempts All Shows for Charities

Premier M. F. Hepburn of Ontario, who reconsidered his decision to retire last November, has granted another concession under the Amusements Tax Act which became effective last June. After wiping out the levy on children's tickets and reducing the tax on low-priced admissions for adults, he has provided an exemption of taxation on performances held under the auspices of religious or educational organizations or for charity.

Under this third amendment, no tax is levied when the net proceeds are used as specified because, Premier Hepburn stated, of the splendid work which is being done to assist the Provincial Government in dealing with relief and various other social problems.

The entertainment committee consisted of Hal Horne, chairman; Edward McNamee, Arnold Van Leer, Irwin Zeltner, Morris Kinzer, W. R. Ferguson, Phil DeAngelis, Hazel Flynn, Tess Michaels, Patricia Reis, Bessie Mack, Mabel Drew, Kay Kamen, Leon Bamberger, R. R. O'Neill, and Josef Zimanich.

In charge of dinner arrangements were Marvin Kirsch and Paul Benjamin. Mr. Benjamin also handled the tickets.

On the reception committee were Bert Adler, James P. Cunningham, Ben Atwell, Tess Michaels, Hortense Schorr, Ruth Weisberg, Raymond Gallagher, Tom Hamlin, and Bruce Gallup.

The souvenir program was in charge of Milton Silver, editor; Paul Benjamin, business manager; Red Kann, James P. Cunningham, Edward McNamee, John Flynn, Martin Starr, Jack Harrower, Herbert S. Australian Production Grows Due to New Film Quota Act

Immediate expansion of motion picture production in Australia is planned as a result of the recent passage of the Film Quota Act in New South Wales, according to a report to the Commerce Department from its trade commissioner at Sydney. The National Studios, about six miles from Sydney, already have commenced preliminary work on two feature productions. The Cinesound Productions, Ltd., important producing company in the Commonwealth, is planning to produce 14 pictures in the coming year. Production of the first picture has already begun, with an American actress assigned to the leading role, the report said.

According to the announced schedule, Cinesound will make three other productions for world release, two "super productions" for two major American distributors, four outdoor dramas of Australian life and four special art study romances. In addition 52 issues of the weekly Cinesound Review are to be made. To make room for this expansion Cinesound intends enlarging its studio at Rushcitters Bay.

Chaplin and "Forest" Win February Awards

The performance of Charles Chaplin in "Modern Times" was voted the best acting in February by the membership of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood last weekend. First honorable mention went to Humphrey Bogart for his work in "The Petrified Forest" and second to Leslie Howard for his work in the same film.

Charles Kenyon and Delmar Daves wrote the screen play for "The Petrified Forest," which was named the best screen play of the month by vote of the Screen Writers' Guild. It won by only one vote over "The Ghost Goes West," given first honorable mention.

Danish and Philippine Attendance Improves

Reports to the Department of Commerce this week from Denmark and the Philippines showed increased popularity of motion pictures, as reflected in attendance.

Eighty per cent of paid attendances to all theatres in Copenhagen in the first seven months of the past year were to motion picture houses. Sixty per cent of pictures shown were American, with German second and British third. At the same time Danish sound productions were considered an important factor in the favorable year in the theatres. There are 300 theatres wired for sound.

Improved business conditions in the Philippines in the opening of the 1,020-seat air-conditioned State theatres in Manila. This brought to 313 the total of theatres in the islands, or one theatre for each 43,000 inhabitants.

BROADCASTERS CHARGE MUSIC TAX MONOPOLY

Baldwin Launches Fight Against Composers' Society; Buck Accuses Exhibitors of Evasion

Charges that the method of paying music taxes imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers amounts to "the exercise of a monopolistic power which denies us the right of bargaining" were made by James W. Baldwin, managing director of the National Association of Broadcasters, before the House patents committee in Washington on Tuesday.

With Sydney M. Kaye, New York copyright attorney also representing the broadcasters, Mr. Baldwin launched the fight of opponents of ASCAP for enactment of the Duffy bill as the hearings on copyright revision entered their fourth week, with prospects that the sessions would extend to mid-April.

The broadcasters wound up their presentation Wednesday, and the testimony of the motion picture industry and hotel interests was scheduled to follow.

The committee had before it this week a voluminous brief submitted by Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, in which he charged exhibitors with attempting to evade the responsibility of paying for music by seeking inclusion in the new legislation of a clause merging with the right to produce the right to exhibit, and with sponsoring elimination of the statutory $250 minimum damage clause in order to beat down the music tax.

Questions Society's Figures

Charging that ASCAP, instead of representing 44,000 members as it claims, has an actual membership of 1,082 American authors and composers, alive and dead, and 108 publishers with 128 subsidiaries, Mr. Kaye told the committee that the existing copyright act was obsolete, outmoded by the development of films and radio, and asserted that the provisions of the 1909 act "intended as a shield are being used as a sword."

Assailing ASCAP's methods, the Broadcasters' counsel declared that a consumer can take out four or five licenses and still be in danger. The "power trust" which, Mr. Buck said, had dictated the Duffy bill, also has an interest in music business through control of Associated Music Publishers, a subsidiary of the North American Company, which is interested in wired radio, Mr. Kaye charged.

The attorney urged the Duffy bill, pointing out that it contains adequate remedies to protect the composers against infringements, and said: "I am convinced it will not cost ASCAP a penny and is quite likely to give them additional benefits."

$2,995,000 Paid by Radio

The radio industry last year paid $2,995,000 to the Society for use of its copyrights, Mr. Baldwin told the committee. He said the industry's gross receipts for 1935 were $87,523,848. While attacking the method of collecting the royalty, he added, however, that he had no quarrel over the amount paid, explaining the complaint is against discrimination and compulsion used in licensing radio.

Music costs, he pointed out, cannot be passed on to the advertiser because of the method employed in fixing the license charges. It was brought out at the hearing that the radio industry pays advertising agencies about $13,000,000 annually in commissions and spends about $9,000,000 for talent.

Mr. Buck in his brief attacked the radio companies for the use of "free shows," operating, it was declared, in competition with stage and film productions on which "copyright royalty was paid."

Charges "Shallow Pretext"

He charged that the provisions in the Duffy bill that the right to produce a film should grant the right to exhibit it is an attempt to settle a long-standing dispute between producers and distributors as to who shall pay the music tax. He termed "a shallow pretext" the claim that this amendment would prevent an author from debarring a film producer from exhibiting a picture after he had been paid for his story, and declared that it would prevent a composer from taking advantage of the best opportunity to dispose of his work in legitimate attractions for reproduction in films.

Further, Mr. Buck said that this amendment "is not for the benefit of the film producer but the exhibitor,"

Meanwhile in New York the reelection of Mr. Buck and other ASCAP officials by the directors is anticipated prior to the Society's annual membership meeting next Thursday.

Warner Brother pressed its campaign of litigation against unlicensed music users with the filing over the weekend of 15 additional infringement suits against New York hotels, restaurants and night clubs, and one in Philadelphia. All seek an injunction and $250 damages, plus an accounting of profits, for each song allegedly performed without a license. Also, 10 more actions have been brought against radio stations in various sections of the country.

The score of litigation on Wednesday stood at 133 infringement suits filed by Warner, 107 of which are against radio stations and 26 against hotels and cafes.

As last week's hearings wound up on Thursday, there appeared the possibility of Congressional action to fix the license fees to be paid by the film industry, broadcasting stations and other users of copyright music.

The suggestion was made by Representative Kramer of California after Representative Daly of Pennsylvania had criticized the attitude of Senator Duffy and had precipitated an argument among committee members.

Senator Kramer's inquiry whether music taxes could not be fixed by statute came during the questioning of Dr. Wallace McClure, State Department member of the interdepartmental committee which wrote the measure. Mr. McClure replied that "such information as we have as to the attitudes of other countries toward Government control is along that line."

Representative Colden of California declared that some way should be developed to fix the royalty, suggesting that in the case of broadcasting stations it could be based on audience and similar factors and that in the case of the film industry it could be based on admissions, "so that the copyright owner may benefit in proportion to the use of his material."

Mr. McClure observed that this proposition did not face any undue difficulty from a drafting point of view. Representative Kramer suggested that an amendment be incorporated in the Duffy bill that before any exhibitor, or any other music user, may be charged with any penalty fixed by the act, he shall be given notice in writing by the copyright owner that he is infringing, and until such notice there shall be no charge of violation.

Admitting that is an important question, Mr. McClure suggested, however, that it might be considered as putting an undue burden upon the copyright owner.

Mr. McClure devoted much of his testimony to a discussion of the $250 minimum damage clause, eliminated in the Duffy bill, which he said was unjust, and declared that the interests of no one would be adversely affected by provisions giving courts broad discretion in the fixing of infringement penalties.

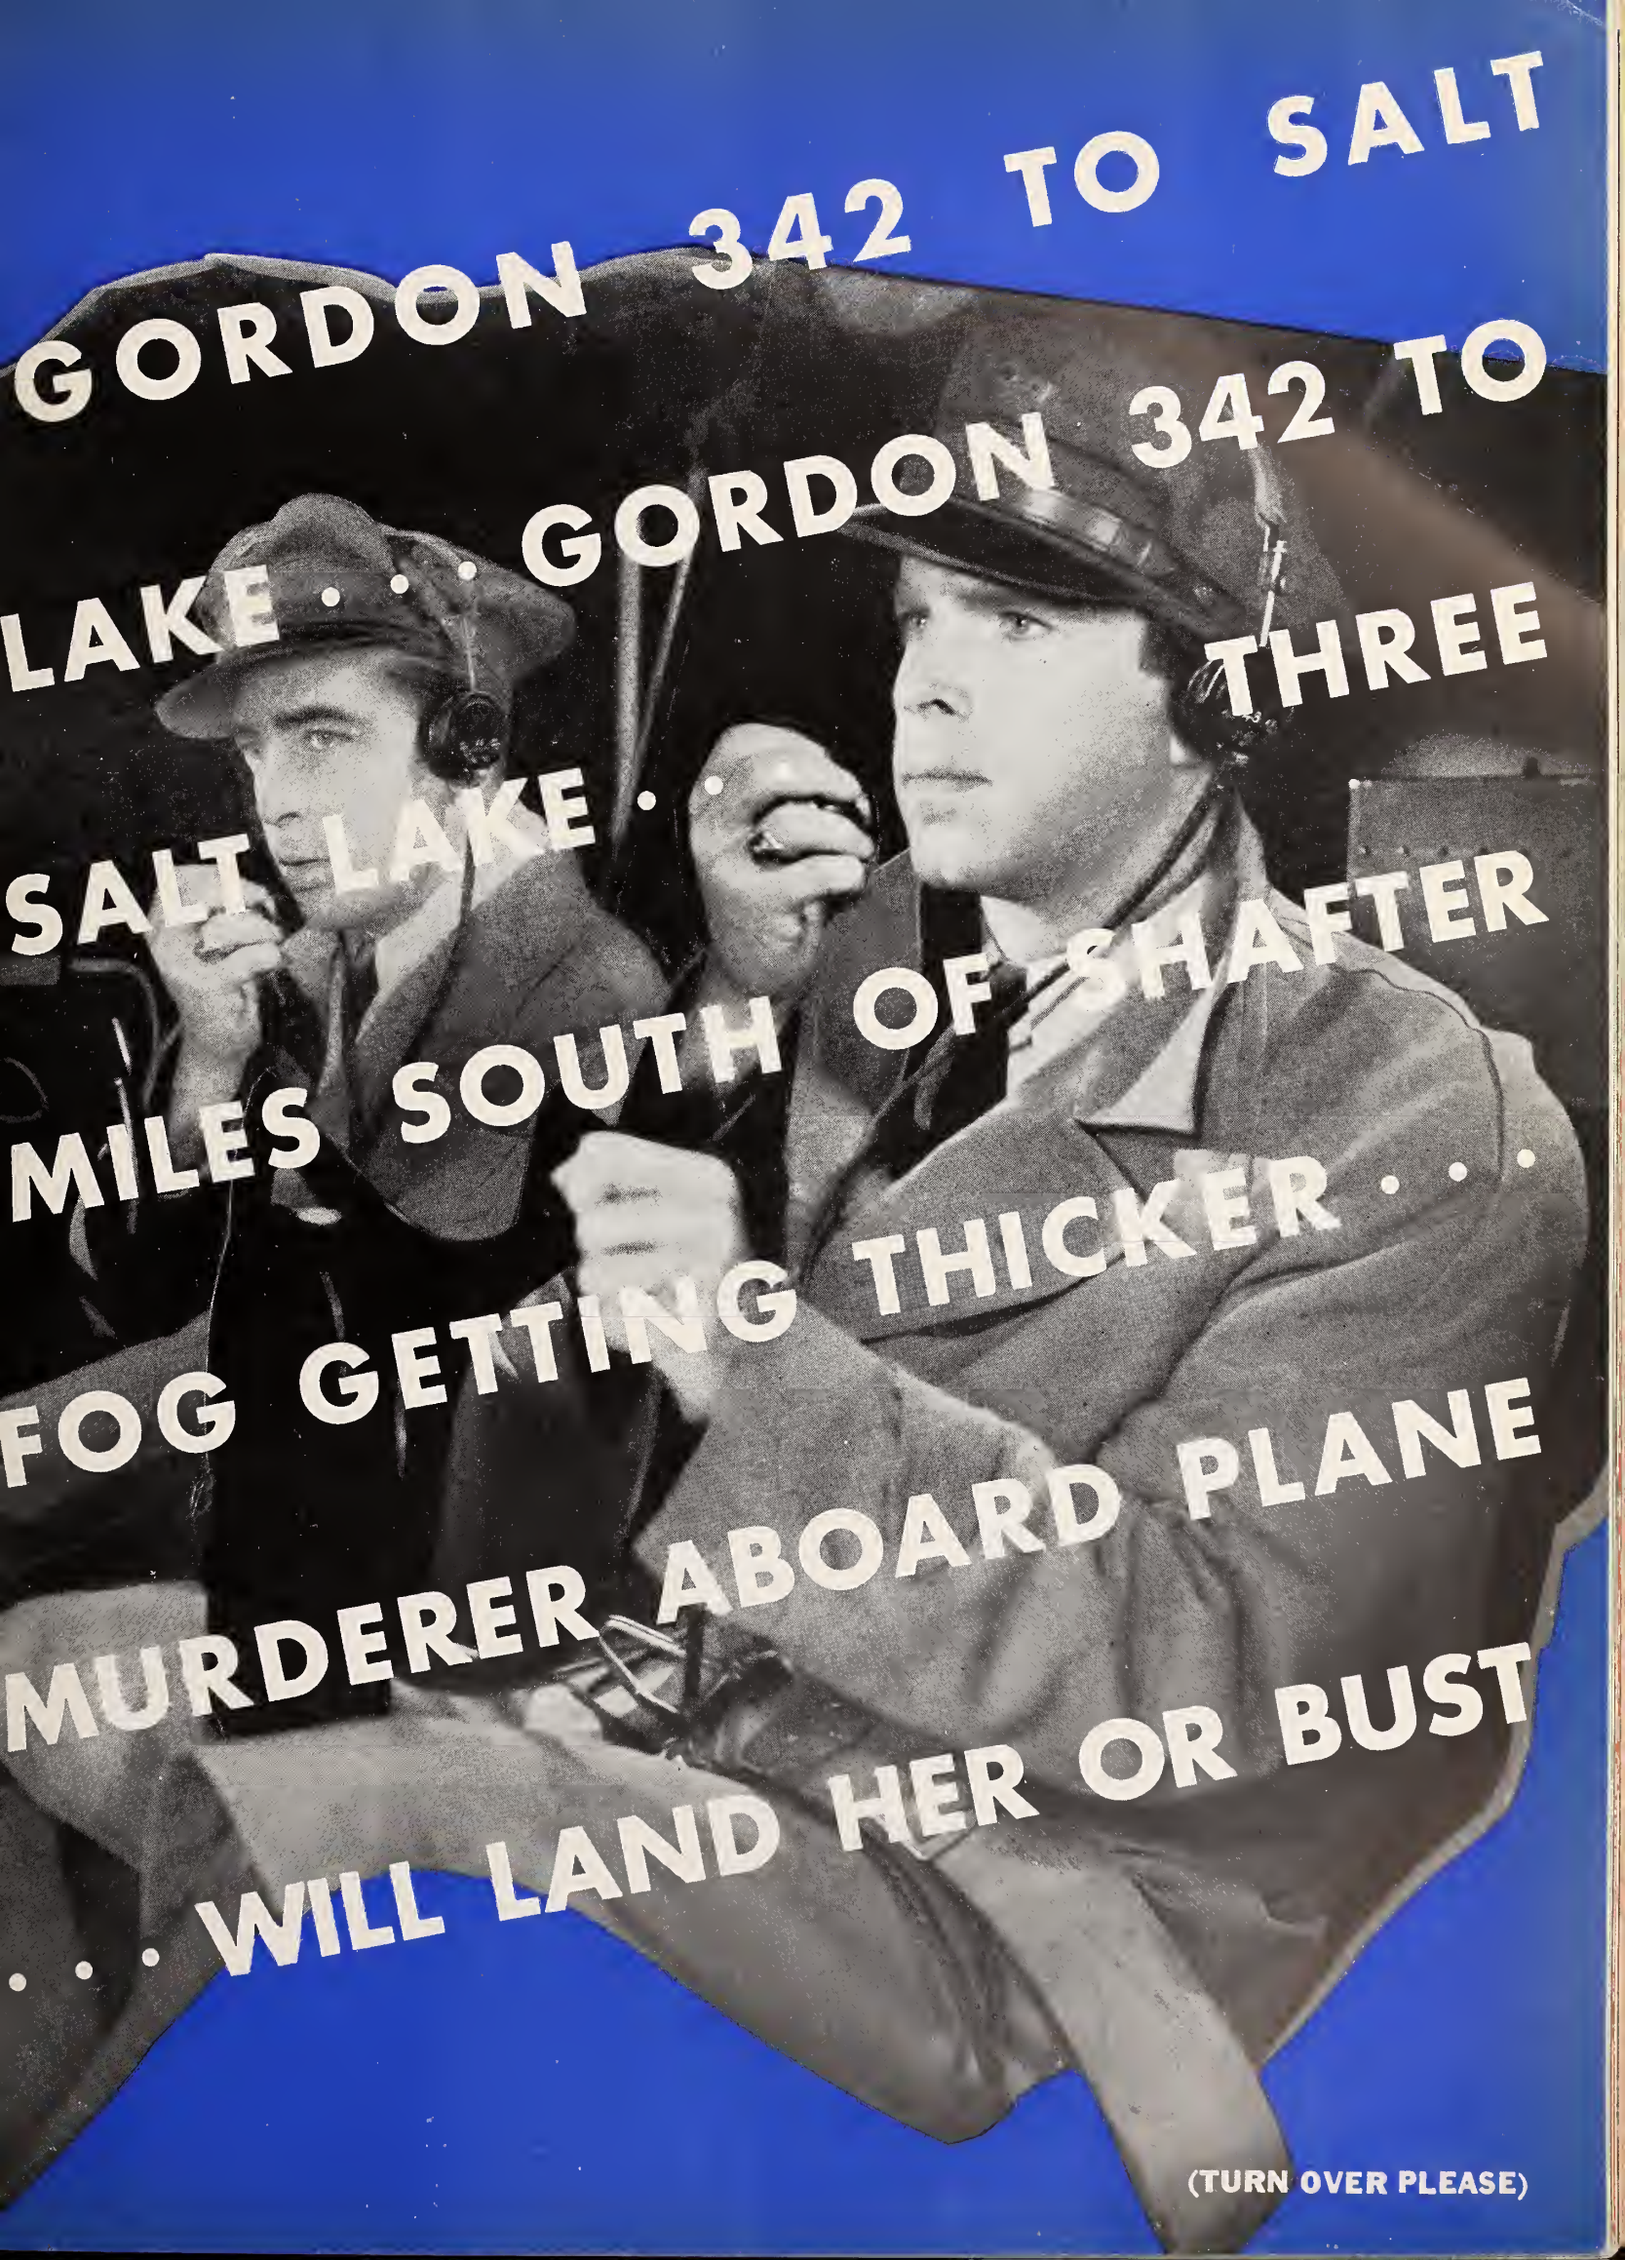
Members of the committee were reminded sharply by Mr. McClure of their responsibility to legislate for the country as a whole rather than for any special interests. The fundamental question, he said, was "whether tens of thousands of persons," or ASCAP, should be the principal beneficiaries.

"We cannot permit in the law a provision that causes such great inconvenience and results in injustice when applied to characteristic cases," he declared.

Mr. McClure criticized members of the patents committee who have consistently voiced approval of ASCAP, and declared the present copyright law inadequate. While ASCAP was admitted by the State Department official to fill a "real need," he said that in the formation of the present law the need of the individual copyright owner transcended that of the people but that at the present time the latter should be protected against exploitation by the former.

Contending that elimination of the $250 damage penalty would not destroy ASCAP, as charged, he pointed out that the testimony of the Society's own officials showed performing rights societies in foreign countries are doing "very well although there is no minimum fee in those countries or anything analogous."

COULDN'T BROADCAST HIS OWN MELODY



International complications involved Warner Brothers in the war with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers when Ray Noble, English band leader, was prevented from broadcasting his own song, "The Very Thought of You," because in America it is controled by a Warner subsidiary, M. Witmark and Sons.

Mr. Noble, however, demonstrated to Columbia Broadcasting System that the performing rights are held by the Performing Right Society, Ltd., on behalf of the English publisher and composer.

The American copyright, he contended, is subject to the rights of the English company, which is an affiliate of ASCAP. Because of the Anglo-American reciprocal arrangement between performing rights societies, the song finally was considered to be in the clear.

PARAMOUNT RENTALS UP 10%, THEATRE INCOME 25% HIGHER THAN IN 1935

Film Rentals $1,000,000 a Week, Highest Since 1931, Otterson Is Quoted by Financial News Press

John Edward Otterson, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, paused this week for an hour from post-reorganization procedure and management conduct to chat informally with the financial news press to explain the financial functionings and earnings status of the corporation's vast producing, distributing and exhibiting enterprises. It was unusual procedure, this personal invitation extended by Mr. Otterson to financial editors for purposes of depicting the financial position of a large motion picture corporation, and out of the tete-a-tete came from the Paramount head the following disclosures, as subsequently reported in the financial press of Wall Street:

The company's operations were in the black in the final quarter of last year. However, due to the excess cost of certain films during the year, consideration is being given to setting up a special reserve to amortize these films.

Film rentals so far this year have been around $1,000,000 a week, 10 per cent over 1935 and the highest since 1931. Theatre income is running 25 to 30 per cent ahead of a year ago. Economies made by the management have reduced average cost of films in the current production program about 33⅓ per cent.

Due to the high cost of films previously made, it is expected that earnings will be affected in the first six months of this year.

Cash position is strong, with over $18,000,000 on hand.

Net profit of Paramount in the third quarter of last year, available for preferred dividends, was $737,191, bringing net profit for the nine months to $3,005,791. While no official estimate has been made, it is probable that operating net in the final period of last year was considerably less than in the third quarter.

Represented at the informal conference with Paramount's president were Associated Press, Wall Street Journal and the following New York newspapers: American, Evening Journal, Herald-Tribune, and Times. Their representatives were understood to have been requested by Mr. Otterson not to use the actual figures divulged by him, which, it was explained, were set forth for their publication value. But, within an hour their publication value. But, within a hour of the noontime interview, held last Friday, in Paramount's home office at Times Square, the Dow-Jones financial news ticker flashed the figures throughout Wall Street and several of the press representatives attending the meeting, witnessing the Dow-Jones treatment, immediately included them in their news accounts.

The figures already mentioned in this account were published on Saturday morning in Dow-Jones Wall Street Journal, and were augmented by the following observations:

"Paramount started 1935 with a profitable list of films so that earnings in the first half of the year were substantial. Since last summer, however, due to the unsettlement resulting from reorganization, and changes made in studio personnel, cost of certain films released in the last half of the year, but made in the first half, was unduly high in proportion to their drawing power. The result of this situation is now being shown in current income. During recent months an extensive reorganization of studio operating policies and personnel has taken place, with the purpose of reducing film costs. Average cost of films recently made is about a third less than a year ago. The effects of economies that have been made, however, will probably not show in the company's operating income until after the first half of this year.

"In any event it seems unlikely that any action may be taken on preferred dividends until the fall."

Cites Financial Position

Basing his conclusion on present earnings, Mr. Otterson was said to have expressed the opinion that Paramount today is in a better financial position than any company in the industry.

Paramount owns approximately 700 theatres outright, and an additional 300 in which it has at least 50 per cent interest are operated under partnership arrangements, the financial reporters were advised.

The company's management, it was said, is very much in favor of partnership operation of theatres and has been supported in this policy by the board. Options to repurchase the 50 per cent partnership interest in the A. H. Blank and Karl Hoblitzelle's Texas Consolidated Theatres expire April 1 and 4, respectively, and probably will be disposed of at the next meeting of the Paramount board, on March 26. Thereafter, no other important buy-back options will come up for action for nearly two years.

William LeBaron's contract was extended for a year recently, and now has two years and nine months to run as a result, it was related. Cecil B. DeMille has one picture to make on his contract and no decision has been made yet on a new one.

No changes in the Paramount board are anticipated now, it was said, and no negotiations for the sale of the company's British subsidiary are under way. The immediate importance to the industry of color and television was minimized by Mr. Otterson.

Zirn Threatens New Suit

Meanwhile an echo was heard from another front on the reorganization proceedings of last year. Contempt of court action against former Paramount creditor banks and members of the bank group committee formed under the company's reorganization proceedings will be instituted in the appellate division of the New York supreme court by Samuel Zirn, attorney for petitioning minority bondholders in the Paramount reorganization, Mr. Zirn said on Saturday.

Mr. Zirn had actions pending against the banks in the state court when the Paramount reorganization plan, which provided for the discontinuance of all litigation against creditors whose claims were treated in the plan, was approved in the United States district court. The bank creditors obtained an order from Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe directing Mr. Zirn to discontinue his actions against them or be held in contempt of court. The United States Circuit court of appeals dismissed an appeal by Zirn from this order and recently denied his motion for reargument.

The appellate division of the state court ruled in Zirn's favor in his bank actions more than a year ago. His contempt proceedings will be based on this and the banks' subsequent procedure in the federal court, he said.

CLERGYMAN DEFENDS HOLLYWOOD MORALS

Hollywood morals are not as bad as they are made to appear, Dr. Burris Jenkins, pastor of the Community Church in Kansas City and long a defender of pictures as a cultural influence, told his congregation in his sermon last Sunday. Dr. Jenkins had just returned from a trip to California.

Blind denunciation of members of the film colony on moral grounds reminds Dr. Jenkins of the attacks on theatrical people which prevailed in the old days.

"We know now that stage personalities measured up to the level of character of most of the rest of us," he said, "and some were far above the average."

Dr. Jenkins said he does not believe film folk indulge in any more wild frivolity than "social sets" and other very well-to-do people in any of the country's large cities.

MAJORS GET EXTENSION IN CONSPIRACY ACTION

Thirty Days Allowed for Counsel to Study Complaints and Confer with the Defendants

Judge Murray Hulbert on Tuesday upheld Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe's order granting Warner Brothers, Paramount, RKO-Radio and individual defendants an additional 30 days in which to prepare for the Government's prosecution of a civil suit charging conspiracy to withhold films from the Ambassador, Missouri and New Grand Central theatres in St. Louis.

Russell Hardy, in charge of the prosecution for the government, had moved to vacate the Coxe order on grounds that the passage of time allowed would work injury upon complaining parties, "increase the losses of Fanchon and Marco," operators of the theatres named in the period covered by the suit, "and probably result in their extinction, help make a success of the conspiracy and turn the case into a post mortem." After the court declined to grant the motion to vacate the order, the prosecuting attorney sought to have the extension reduced to twenty days. This the court also declined to consider.

Frederick H. Wood, who defended the Warners in the criminal and civil actions brought by the Government in St. Louis, told Judge Hulbert that preoccupation with the preparation of documents bearing on the constitutionality of the Duffy Coal Act had prevented him from having an opportunity to examine the complaint until Tuesday and that service on Harry and Albert Warner had not been obtained until Monday. He added that preliminary study of the papers indicated that they were extremely complicated and would require various motions for clarification before answers could be filed.

Questions Hardy's Motive

Mr. Wood declared he could not understand Attorney Hardy's motive in seeking to thwart the purpose of Judge Coxe's order, arguing that "it seems idle for the Government to suggest an emergency in view of the past proceedings" and that the film companies tried to have the civil action tried first in St. Louis.

Louis Nizer, of Phillips and Nizer, who said he had been retained by George J. Schaefer, Sam Dembow and Ralph Kohn, defendants, told the court he had not had sufficient time to familiarize himself with the issues and to determine whether his clients were defendants under the law. He said he expects to make a motion, following further study of the case, to dismiss the complaint against them. They are former Paramount executives.

Louis Comick, of Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett, a newcomer to the defense legal staff, said he had not participated in the previous trials and had had no opportunity to confer with officials of the three Paramount companies he will represent. For this reason, he said, it would be impossible for him to file answers within the prescribed time.

William Mallard, general counsel for RKO-Radio, told the court that most of the defendants he represents have been out of the city and he had not adequate opportunity to confer with them. He added that Ned E. Depinet and Jules Levy had been served by a marshal who left papers at their homes in their absence.

15 New Witnesses

Prosecuting Attorney Hardy informed Judge Hulbert that several defendants had not yet accepted service and the court asked defense counsel if they would appear for their clients. Attorney Wood said he would accept responsibility for Abel Cary Thomas and Attorney Comick said he would do likewise for Neil F. Agnew.

Fifteen or more new witnesses will be summoned, Mr. Hardy said, adding that he intends to bring in all the St. Louis exchange managers who testified in the civil case in that city.

In Kansas City, hearing on a temporary injunction to restrain major distributors from continuing zoning set up last fall was set for March 27th before Judge Merrill E. Otis in the federal district court. Ten independent exhibitors representing 13 theatres filed suit February 25th against Fox Midwest, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, Universal, MGM, Columbia, United Artists and Vitagraph, charging restraint of trade.

In Atlanta major distributors were given until April 9th to file answers in an anti-trust action brought against them and the Sparks circuit in the federal court by R. E. Gore and the Broadway theatre.

221 Chinese Lose Lives In Theatre Fire Panic

At least 221 persons died Tuesday night in a theatre fire at Tuliuchen, China, the Associated Press reported from Tientsin.

Most of the victims perished in a panic-stricken jam at the exits. Many, with their clothes on fire, jumped into an adjacent creek and were drowned, the dispatch said.

Supply Company Files Suit

Suit for damages amounting to $60,000 has been filed in the Federal court at San Francisco by Pacific Coast Theatre Supply Company against National Carbon Company, Walter G. Preddy Company, B. F. Shearer Company, Western Theatrical Equipment Company and National Theatre Supply Company. The plaintiff charges the defendants with conspiracy to monopolize the business in projection machine carbons in violation of federal anti-trust laws.

William J. Clark Resigns

William J. Clark, long associated with the Stanley Company of America and Warners as film buyer in the theatre department, has resigned, effective April 4. His successor will be named in the near future by Clayton Bond, head of the film buying department.

F. C. C. Starts Investigation of Am. Tel. & Tel.

Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, took the stand Tuesday in the opening session of the Federal Communications Commission's investigation of the structure and ramifications of the company, admitted that it is a virtual monopoly, owning more than 85 per cent of the telephone equipment of the nation and that his salary as president is $206,000 a year. On interrogation as to whether he had taken a cut, he said he had, that prior to the reduction his salary had been $250,000.

Samuel Becker, counsel for the commission, conducted the examination. In discussing Western Electric the president of A. T. & T. said it was 99.2 per cent owned by the Bell Telephone company, a subsidiary. He testified, "The reason for this is so that the company can have a source of supply for highly standardized equipment."

Asked whether it was true that the company had acquired two film studios, Mr. Gifford replied that the concern had come into possession of them through non-payment of debts.

His interrogator also inquired whether the company had helped William Fox finance the acquisition of Loew's stock some years ago, but the witness replied that he did not know.

Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric, was the first witness called.

London Studio Fire Delays Production

Fire of unknown origin damaged one of three stages in construction at the Denham studios, London, on Tuesday. MPTOA MOVES FOR TRADE SESSION; NEW YORK GROUPS NEAR MERGER

Committee of Exhibitors To Meet with Companies' Executives to Work Out Approved Set of Practices

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with Ed Kuykendall reelected president, finally took steps this week to work out with distributors, at a round-table, a program of approved trade practices as the instrument for ending the perennial disputes between buyer and seller. The MPTOA immediately will organize a subcommittee of its best exhibitor minds to effect a meeting with the distributors.

While the MPTOA was awaiting the end of the Pettengill anti-block booking and the Duffy copyright bill hearings at Washington, New York's two independent exhibitor organizations were proceeding with merger discussions, Aaron Saperstein was reelected president of Allied in Illinois, New England's Allied scored MGM for its percentage demands, and Harry Lavietes was elected president of the new MPTO in Connecticut.

A master committee of the MPTOA will be designated soon to meet with company heads and sales executives in an effort to work out a complete program of approved trade practices, Mr. Kuykendall said on his return to New York from Miami where the national directors of his organization had met. It was at this meeting that Mr. Kuykendall was authorized to make arrangements for the conferences and to designate either a special committee or the executive committee of the MPTOA to work with him. Mr. Kuykendall said that an active special committee would be named comprising representative exhibitors who would be able to attend the New York meetings with distribution officials at any time.

Await End of Washington Hearings

Present indications are that no attempt will be made to open the meetings until the current block booking and copyright legislation hearings now in progress at Washington have been concluded.

Mr. Kuykendall emphasized that the committee to be named would not be a "grievance committee," but would be a representative group of the national exhibitor organization which would be prepared to "make suggestions" and seek solutions for major problems affecting both distributor and exhibitor.

In Manhattan, a merger of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatre Owners Association moved a step nearer as 32 leading independent circuit heads met at the Hotel Astor and advocated a solidification of all local theatre operators.

Charles L. O'Reilly, head of the TOCC; Harry Brandt, president of the ITOA; Maurice Fleischman, Si Fabian, Sam Strausberg and Louis Frisch spoke on the necessity for grouping all theatres into a strong organization. Following the talks, a committee of three exhibitors, not affiliated with either association, was named to work out ways and means for uniting the organizations. Additional meetings were set for Wednesday.

On the committee are Sam Rosen, Herman Becker and Mr. Strausberg. They will contact exhibitors for support.

Saperstein Reelected

In Chicago, Aaron Saperstein was reelected president, to serve his seventh term as head of Allied of Illinois, at its seventh annual election held at the Commodore hotel last weekend.

In addition to Mr. Saperstein, the officers elected were: Van Nomikos, vice-president; Harry Lasker, secretary; Joe Stern, treasurer, and Harry Nipo, sergeant-at-arms. The board of directors picked included Ludwig Sussman, Tippy Harrison, Samuel Roberts, Verne Langdon, Benjamin Bartelstein, Benjamin Lasker, B. Charuhas, Abe Gumbiner, Charles Nelson, Richard Salkin and Jack Rose. Louis L. Abramson again was named recording secretary.

Protests MGM Percentages

In Boston, Allied of New England, headed by Nathan Yamins, national Allied president, scored Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's percentage demands in a bulletin to members. The statement lists salaries said to be paid to MGM and Loew officials and continues:

"We have no quarrel with any man's income or earnings, but we do feel that exhibitors might bear them in mind when Metro has the nerve to ask the signing of riders permitting the transfer of high percentages from undelivered '34-'35 product to '35-'36 pictures. If Metro thinks its '34-'35 pictures still undelivered are unworthy of percentage rates, can't they afford to be men enough to forget the prohibitive rentals they demanded for undelivered 'masterpieces' without trying to grab their high rentals for pictures they do not choose to deliver? Is all sense of fairness and decency dead in this business?"

Further south, in New Haven, Harry Lavietes of the Pequot theatre was elected president of the newly-organized Independent MPTO of Connecticut. Forty independent theatres were represented at the election.

Other officers picked are: A. Fishman, treasurer; William Brennan, first vice-president; Joseph A. Davis, executive secretary, and Jack Post, recording secretary. Directors include the officers and Dr. J. B. Fishman, Charles Levine, Harry Gale, Morris Bailey, Ralph Pascho, Joseph Shulman, Dave Maglena, George Comden and Jack Schwartz.

FILMS RESOLD INSTEAD OF SCRAPPED, SAYS PATHE

Charges Emile Snyder, Silver Refiner, Diverted Product to Non-Theatrical and States Right Market

Pathe Exchange, Inc., is proceeding in the United States courts to retrieve some 198 motion pictures that are alleged to have been illegally diverted to the non-theatrical and states right markets for distribution as reissues, instead of having been scrapped by the silver refiners to whom the prints were sold. The pictures were produced and distributed by Pathe when it was actively engaged in the making and selling of films, prior to the sale of its assets to the FBO-RKO interests, in 1930.

The case now at issue, in the United States circuit court of appeals, third circuit, in New Jersey, is an odd one.

Pathe, for many years, had disposed of its "scrap" or "junk" film to a refiner of precious metal, Emile Snyder, the defendant, who, it is alleged, "conspired" in 1929 to deprive Pathe of its copyrights to the 198 films, by having "vended and caused to be vended" said films for exhibition. Defendant Snyder denied the charges, and, further, held that "when said films were delivered by the plaintiff (Pathe) to the defendant (Snyder), the whole right of property in said films passed to the said defendant Snyder and it had the right either to make use of said films for its own purposes or to resell said films in such a manner as it saw fit." Pathe denies the defendant has any such right.

The question at law is one of copyright infringement, Pathe complaining that its copyrights to the 198 pictures were infringed by the Snyder interests when they were vended for exhibition, instead of having been junked for the refinement of the silver in the film.

Pathe in its complaint also alleges that Snyder, Inc., sold some of the pictures to Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, Inc., of Newark, N. J., an independent distributor active in the non-theatrical market. Apollo Film Supply, in New York, also purchased some prints, it is alleged.

Judge William Clark, in New Jersey, dismissed Pathe's bill of complaint against the Snyder interests, on June 27, 1935, and Pathe now seeks an appeal in the United States circuit court.

RKO Claim Hearing Off; Theatres' Affairs Closed

A hearing of exceptions to the allowance of Rockefeller Center's lease claims against RKO at $9,100,000, which was scheduled for Tuesday before Federal Judge William Bondy, was postponed to March 24. Efforts to effect a compromise or settlement of the claims are still being made. A final meeting of creditors of RKO Theatre Operating Corporation, a bankrupt subsidiary of RKO, was held last week to wind up the administration of the company and to submit final accounts to Referee Irwin Kurtz.

Applications for interim fees totaling $150,000 for services in the RKO reorganization proceedings were taken under advisement Tuesday by Judge Bondy. The applications were filed by Irving Trust Company, trustee of RKO, which asks $65,000, and by Donovan, Leisure, Newton and Lumbard, counsel to the trustee, who asks $85,000. The annual stockholders' meeting of Keith-Albee-Orpheum will be held April 8. At that time 13 directors will be elected.

Roxy Memorial Grove Planned for Palestine

The Roxy Memorial Grove, planned as an evergreen expression of the late Samuel Rothafel's artistic and humanitarian contributions, will be planted on the hills of Nazareth, in the Plain of Esdraelon, Palestine, the site of the George Washington Memorial Forest. The land has been made available for the purpose by the Keren Kayemeth Le Israel, the agency for the reclamation and reforestation of the Holy Land. An arrangement to this effect has been entered into between the Keren Kayemeth Le Israel and the Roxy Memorial Committee, of which Mr. Louis Nizer, attorney for the New York Film Board of Trade is chairman, and Harry Hershfield is honorary chairman.

Among the members of the Roxy Memorial Committee are: Edward G. Robinson, William S. Paley, M. H. Aylesworth, Gene Buck, Fanny Hurst, George S. Kaufman, Erno Rapee, Irving Caesar, Alfred M. McCosker, Harry M. Warner, Louis K. Sidney, Donald Flamm, Nick A. Kenny and Nathan Burkan.

Henry C. Lomb Dies In New York Home

Henry C. Lomb, son of Henry Lomb, one of the founders of Bausch and Lomb, Rochester optical company, died at his home in New York last Sunday. He was 64. His widow, a son, three daughters and his mother survive.

For some years Mr. Lomb was connected with the optical company, but following his father's death he left Rochester, coming to New York and establishing Standard Scientific Corporation, for the manufacture of scientific instruments. At the time of his death, Mr. Lomb was president of the Waverly Novelty Company, Jersey City, which manufactured musical instrument parts.

"Ariane" Barred in Ohio

The Ohio censors have banned "Ariane" from that state because of the nature of the story. The picture, which has been booked in several Ohio spots, stars Elisabeth Bergner. It was produced by Pathe-Cinema in London and Paris and was directed by Paul Czinner. Blue Ribbon Photoplays distribute the picture.

Tax Protest May Shut Paris Houses

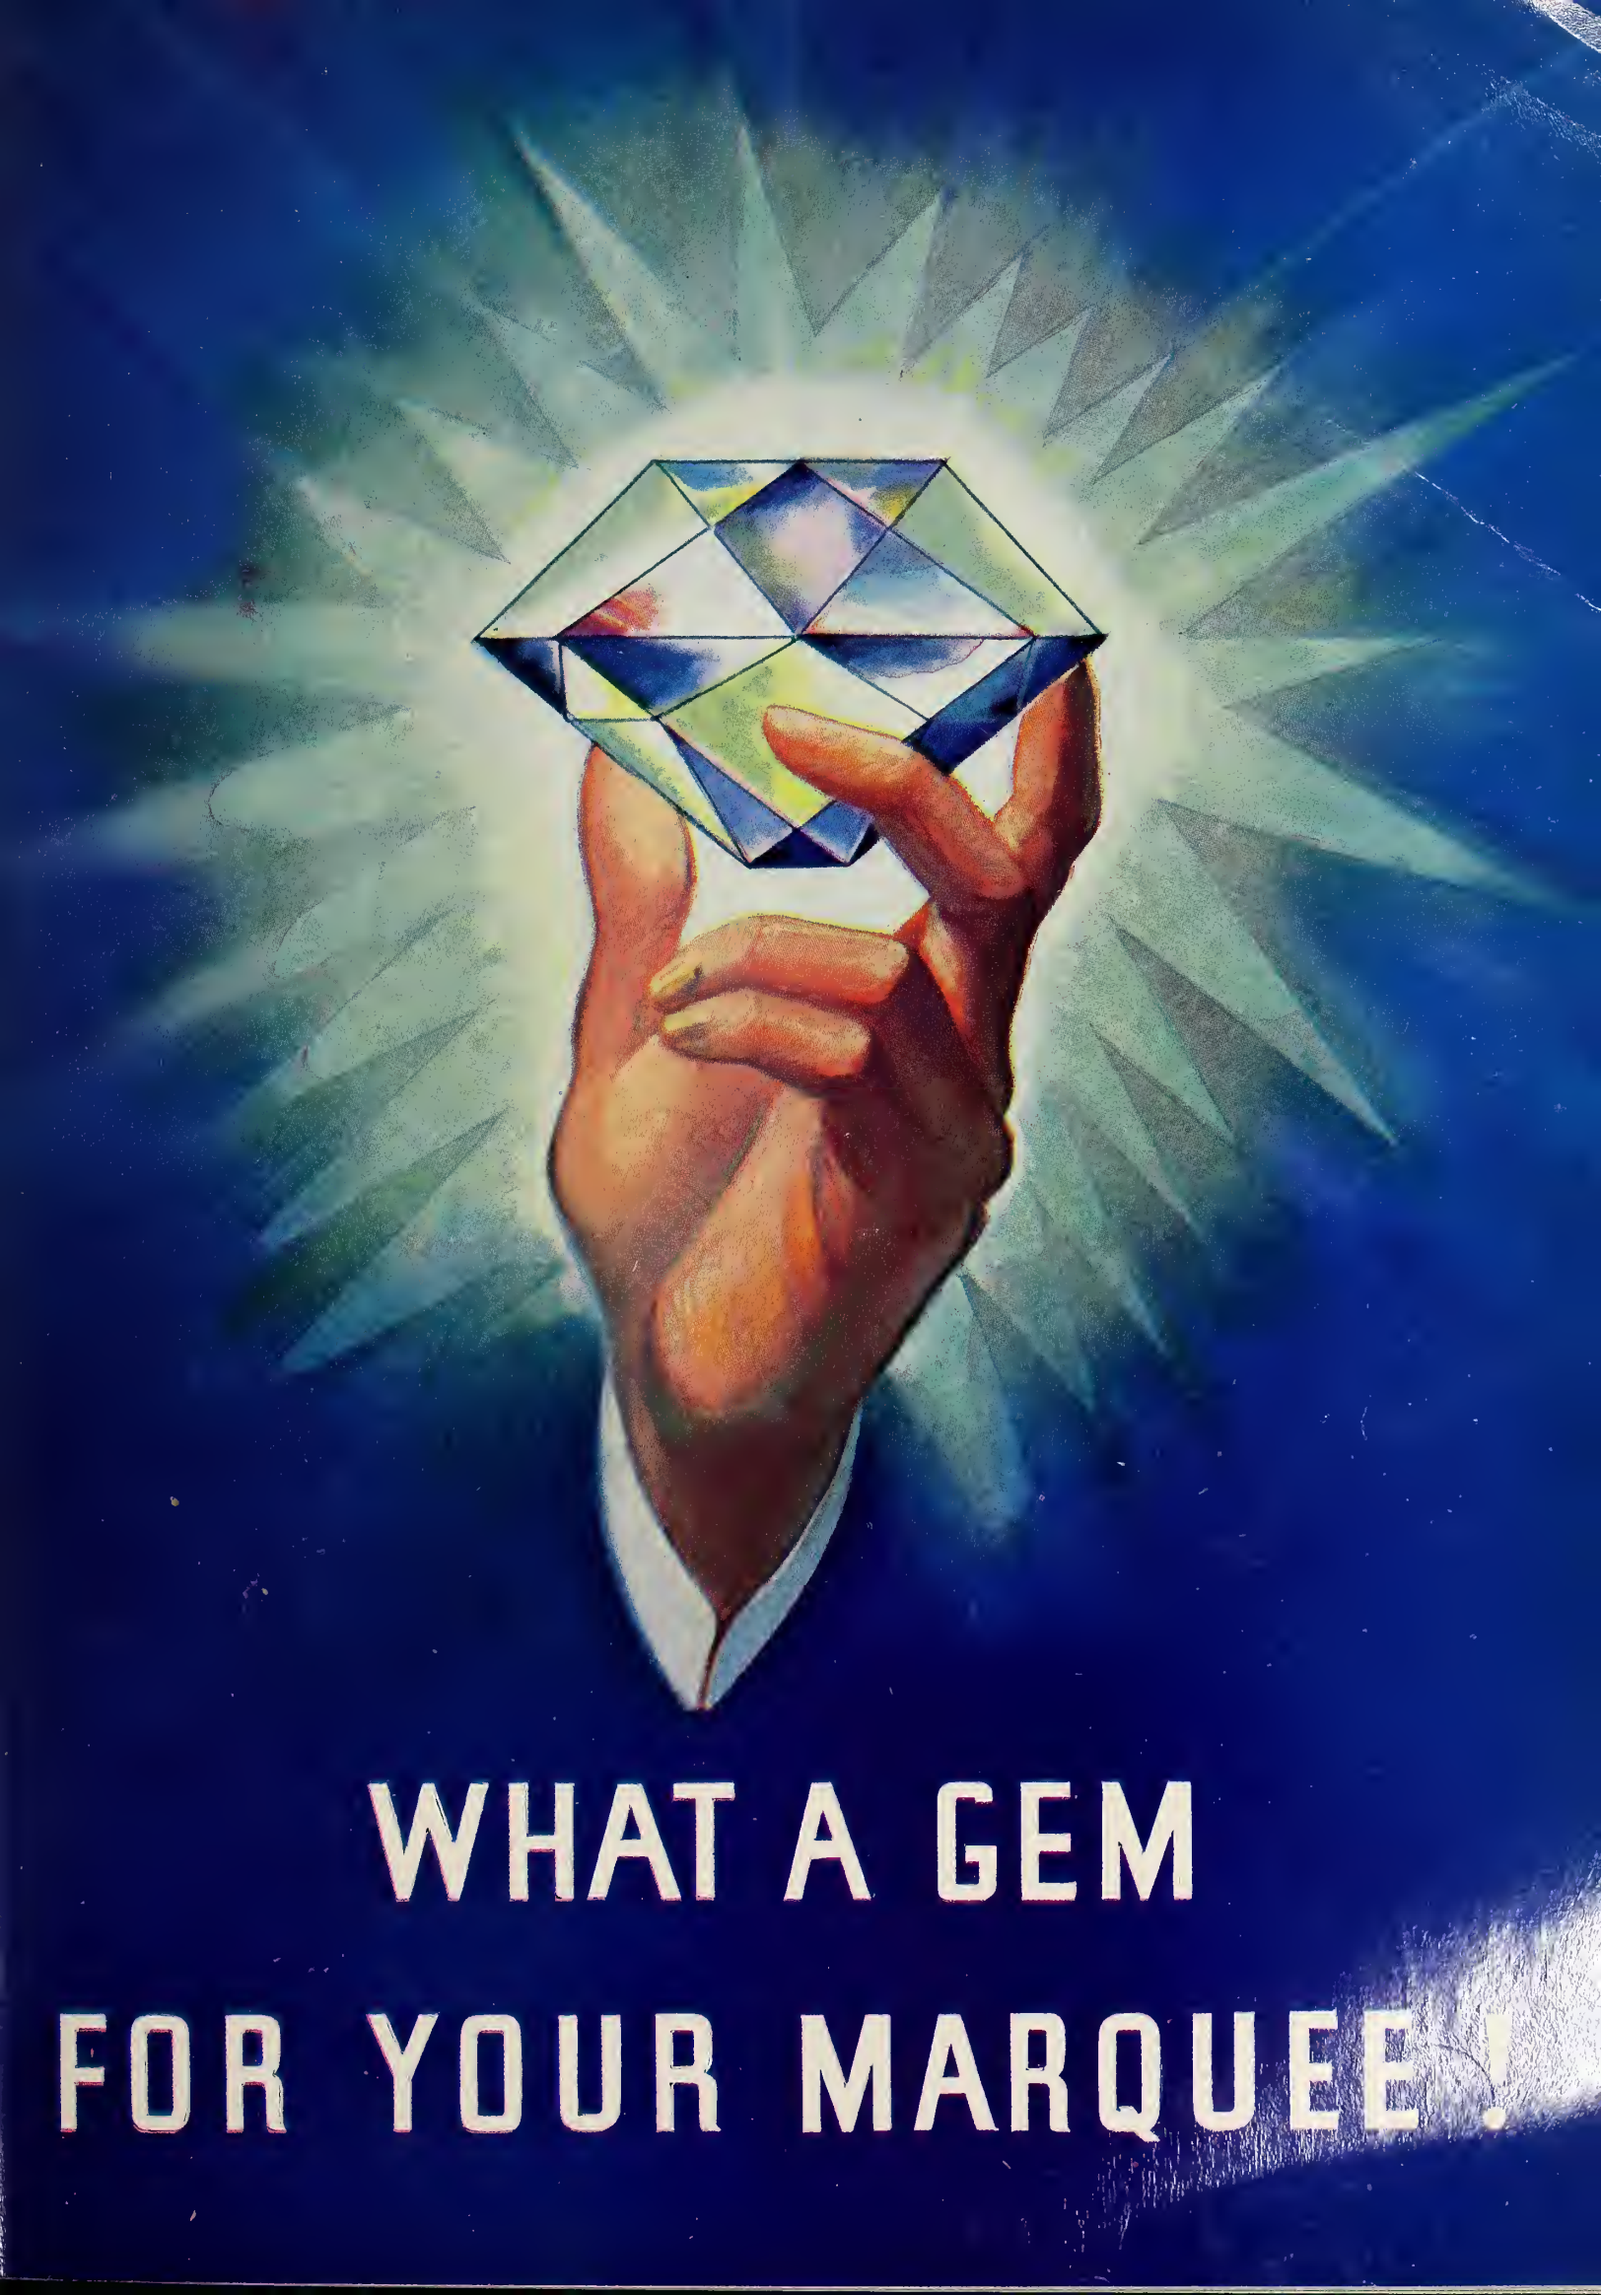
Exhibitors, at a general meeting held in Paris last week, decided to close all theatres in the French capitol on March 20, if the 10 per cent pauper tax on gross receipts is not rescinded or greatly reduced before that date. A similar threat, which was not materialized, was made some time ago. When the tax was passed last July, town councils were given the option of canceling the tax if they could find another to replace it.

Thus far, Paris exhibitors have received only promises in their efforts to gain relief. Distributors have promised to cooperate with the local theatres in the matter of contracts. At the present time exhibitors are paying taxes amounting to almost 25 per cent of their gross receipts. They believe that the threat of complete closing will force the Paris Town Council to take action.

Theatre business in the country has suffered severely through the depression. The total of taxes collected from all amusement houses in France for January, 1936, was approximately $550,000, which compares with a total of approximately $700,000 for January, 1935, a reduction of about 20 per cent. The revenue for the entire year 1935 from special taxes on amusements was 15 per cent less than in 1934.

Census Check Using Elaborate System

Rapid progress in the work of taking the new national amusement census as part of the business census undertaking of the Department of Commerce is reported at the Bureau's headquarters in Philadelphia.



In the amusement industry as in certain others the census will classify establishments or organizations as independent and individually operated, units of a branch system or units of a corporate chain system. Reports will cover operating revenues, operating expenses and employment data. However, no figures for any business classification will be published unless enough individual reports are included to make it impossible to distinguish the facts about any particular individual firm or corporation, according to census headquarters.

Bulletin on New Sound System Is Issued

An account of the MGM research and engineering investigation of theatre loudspeakers resulting in development of the Shearer Two-Way Horn System is contained in a bulletin issued by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Research Council last week. John K. Hilliard, associated with Douglas Shearer in the engineering of the new system, and Harry R. Kimball, of the MGM Studio Sound department, are authors of papers contained in the bulletin.

Variety Club Delegates

BARRING OF TWO AMERICAN FILMS BY POLAND'S CENSORS BRINGS FIGHT

Both Warner and MGM Rest Cases with Attorney; Germany Making Headway in Move to Retrieve Market

by JOSEPH FRYD
Warsaw Special Correspondent

Outright refusal of Poland's censors to permit the showing of two American features—Warner's "G-Men" and MGM's "Public Hero No. 1"—has brought an outburst of argument in Warsaw.

In Poland there exist two bodies for the censoring of films, one, known as the Central Film Board, is in the Ministry of the Interior, the other, called the Superior Board, is a commission headed by the Director of the Administrative Department.

The fate of these two films now is dependent on the Superior Board, for the Central Film Board definitely has refused approval.

When the censors in the Ministry of the Interior turned its thumbs down it gave the following reasons:

The pictures are directed toward sensationalism.

They would have a demoralizing influence.

They reveal the undercover methods of police in search for clues.

As a last recourse in the fight to get the Superior Board's approval, the cases have been given into the hands of attorneys, for MGM and Warner have no intention of shelving such box-office productions. But the chances of victory are reported slight.

At the moment of writing, Columbia's "The Whole Town's Talking," another picture dealing with gangsters, is being shown in one of the Warsaw film houses, the Majestic. This picture has received the classification of "artistic," a listing greatly desirable for it means a lower tax levy. Furthermore, the production has been approved for showing to young folk as well as adults.

In justifying this designation, the censors said that the picture has been artistically produced and done in a humorous sort of way.

In any event, the cases demonstrate how difficult it is to forecast the direction of censorship action on an imported picture.

Writing of films which have struck snags with the censors, it is worthwhile to mention the troubles of the Soviet production, "Love of Maxim," now appearing here under the caption of "The Struggle with the Tsar." Though it was banned in several states in the U. S. and in spite of the strong unofficial anti-soviet current here, it managed to pass the censor.

Perhaps the change of title was a factor. The "Struggle with the Tsar" sounds well and goes in hand with the national policy. Regardless of a good title and crammed with exciting scenes (the plot being built on revolutionary incidents of 1905 when many Poles took part) "Love of Maxim" has not turned out to be the box-office success expected. It is the second time that a Soviet film of the kind has failed to click.

Germany Returns to Market

Germany, at one time sole competitor of the American industry in Poland, is making headway in its efforts to retrieve this market. On February 1st Ufa came into possession of the Filharmonja, one of the largest cinemas in Warsaw. Only German product will be shown there.

Germany had been almost completely shut out of the Polish market. The majority of exhibitors and distributors being Jewish, German productions had been boycotted in return for the Nazi attitude toward non-Aryans. A special committee kept this boycott effective even after the group officially had been dissolved for political reasons. The committee of course has worked in secret, and in some of the instances of breaking of the boycott the results were decidedly not pleasant for the individual.

Not so long ago an exhibitor who had dared to show a picture made in Germany, starring Jan Kiepura, was forced to remove it from the screen. The name of Kiepura did not save him. At different times stench bombs were thrown by unknown persons and patrons, leaving in a hurry, were given handbills carrying a black, wide border and characterizing the exhibitor as a renegade dead to the Jewish nation.

Under such conditions it was difficult for the German producer to think of expansion, but on the other hand the regaining of the Polish market was a vital affair.

One method adopted was the socalled "mixed production." For example, a well-known German actor, Paul Wegener, has taken over direction of "August the Saxon." Several Polish actors have been engaged for production in Berlin. The story is woven about the reign of August the Saxon, when he was king of Poland.

This strategy of the Germans is very clear. They hope in this way to make productions in Germany, handling Polish themes, using Polish actors, and thereby winning back the Polish film market.

At the same time there is a great amount of propaganda work to break down any hostile attitude among the Polish public against German films.

Knowing the perseverance of the Germans, we may expect further attempts to take over the entire Polish market. They are gambling for a great stake. It is a matter of recovering the money which they have been losing for several years. If the Germans reach their goal, the American industry would suffer a severe setback.

AMERICANS HIT BY TAX IN POLAND

Representatives of American exchanges in Warsaw, Poland, have indicated they will be forced to curtail their activities and perhaps withdraw from the country if a proposed tax is passed by the government. The levy, which would amount to about six cents a foot on films submitted to the censors, is to supply funds for subsidizing domestic producers.

Since American product totals more than 50 per cent of all films shown in the country, United States companies would bear the brunt of the new levy. It is also understood that the government has decided that, effective April 1, 10 per cent of all features shown must be of domestic origin, and that the entertainment tax rebate for films of educational merit will be discontinued.

Local 306 and Allied Merger Progressing

Plans to merge Local 306 of New York and Allied Motion Picture Operators are progressing rapidly and a deal is expected to be concluded within the next few weeks. Three meetings were held last week, the final one on Saturday, attended by a number of exhibitors as well as union officials and the sessions were continued this week.

Among those attending Saturday's session were: Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, Bert Popkin, Joe Kelbin, Maurice Fleischman, Harry Brandt, Stanley Lawton and Irving Renner. Empire was not present at the sessions, but it is anticipated that this organization will join the merger shortly after details are cleared up.

Shea Joins Paramount

Joe Shea has joined Paramount studios in Hollywood as assistant to Gabe Yorke. Pat Patterson and Mel Riddle also became members of Yorke's staff at the same time. All three were in Yorke's department when he was at Fox.

Garmes Will Direct

Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur have signed Lee Garmes for the dual post of director and cameraman for their next production, "The Monster," which will be produced in New York at the Eastern Service Studio for Paramount release.

Westland Reopens Four

The Westland Theatre Corporation, Denver, will reopen the Liberty in Denver, the Pueblo and Chief at Pueblo and the Mesa at Grand Junction this month.

CAGNEY WINS HIS SUIT; COW-MILKING IRKS STAR

Grace Moore Upsets Columbia Bucket; Warner To Appeal; Dietrich, Paramount Agree

Hollywood producers' troubles with a few discontented stars, who presently are engaged in a series of outbursts, appear to be only just beginning:

Grace Moore, "song bird," this week flew the Columbia Studio coop, walking out on her contract because "they made me sing all day and milk a cow in the bargain." Her return to Broadway was marked by a series of interviews to the press services along the route.

James Cagney won a victory in the courts over Warner Brothers in his public battle to end his contract. Warner will appeal.

Marlene Dietrich patched up differences with Paramount. She, too, had "walked out," but in the midst of production plans.

The series of star-studio difficulties has embroiled George Raft, Miss Dietrich and Mae West at Paramount; Ann Dvorak, Pat O'Brien and Mr. Cagney at Warner, and Miss Moore at Columbia.

Mr. Raft objected to the cameraman assigned him and was suspended, but later he went back to work on another picture.

Miss West's contractual relations with Paramount were severed two weeks ago.

Miss Dvorak and Warner Brothers both won and lost a court fight over her contractual status, and she remains with the company.

Mr. O'Brien objected to his next story and to the billing given him in previous releases, and is still out. Indications are, however, that he will return to work next Monday with his difficulties with his employers all straightened out. He has been given no definite assignment, and Warren William is being used in "Stage Struck" in his place.

Appealing to State Supreme Court

That Warner Bros. will appeal the case of James Cagney to the supreme court of California was announced Wednesday in a statement issued in Hollywood by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production.

Mr. Warner said:

"The issues in this case were simple and clear-cut. The court in its decision has held that our contract with Mr. Cagney was not invalid and that he had no legal basis for his claim that the contract should be cancelled at this time because of any defect or irregularity in that contract. When Mr. Cagney declined in December of 1935 to render further services to us under his contract dated October 4th, 1932, he did so, as the court has held in effect, without legal justification. He was suspended by us at that time because of his refusal to work. His contract, including options, has a long time to run and we intend to protect our interests throughout.

"However, the court has likewise found that subsequent to the time when Mr. Cagney without legal reason refused to continue his services for us, he had been billed in advertising matter in connection with the picture, 'Ceiling Zero,' in a manner contrary to the billing clause in his contract. Our company contended that such errors in billing were entirely inadvertent and that our contract provided definitely that 'no casual or inadvertent' failures to comply with provisions of the contract regarding billing should constitute a breach thereof. Whether the error claimed to have been made in the advertising was a deliberate breach, or whether it was merely a minor incident, purely casual and inadvertent in its nature, is a question which will in due course be placed before the supreme court of the State of California, to which we intend to appeal.

"Whether the advertising matter concerning the picture 'Ceiling Zero' put out by certain local theatres under the particular circumstances disclosed in this case can be said to be a breach of the customary billing clause as it appears in Mr. Cagney's contract with us as the producer of the picture is a question of great importance to the entire motion picture industry.

"We are naturally disappointed in the present outcome of the case, but as a matter of conviction and principle intend to prosecute and appeal in due course to the highest court in the state."

The contract of Mr. Cagney was voided by Warner Bros., according to the judgment rendered Monday by Judge Charles I. Bogue in Los Angeles, who based his decision on the fact that Warner had given the actor subordinate rather than star billing in two pictures, "Ceiling Zero" and "Footlight Parade." The Warner claim that this billing was an error was of no avail.

The decision makes Mr. Cagney a free agent, but J. Ray Files, attorney for Warners, said he will file an appeal within a week, adding that any contractual move by the actor would be made at his own risk. Prior to the trial, however, Mr. Cagney and Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief of Twentieth Century-Fox, are reported to have held several conferences.

While passing through Detroit enroute to New York last weekend, Miss Moore told the press folk that greeted her at the railroad station that she was "walking out" on her motion picture contract until "Hollywood learns to treat me more like a human being and less like a machine."

Not a Milking Machine

"In the last picture I made in Hollywood," she said in an interview with The Detroit News, "they made me sing all day and milk a cow in the bargain. I don't mind milking a cow or two in the course of a day, but also to sing all day is something else again. I have another public besides that one out in Hollywood.

"Now they want me to return to Hollywood to make retakes and French and Spanish recordings of music in the pictures. I refuse to do this."

When informed of Miss Moore's decision to walk out on her contract, Columbia studio executives in Hollywood said it was all news to them.

"We had a communication from her two days ago," it was stated, "saying she would return within one week to make added scenes and French and Spanish recordings on the picture she has just finished."

Signed Another Contract

The film, "The King Steps Out," in which Franchot Tone is featured with Miss Moore, is nearly ready for release, according to Columbia officials. It was further stated that before the singer entrained for the East she had signed another contract with Columbia to make a picture which will go into production in May

Miss Dietrich apparently successfully waged her fight with Paramount, during which she refused to appear in the role picked for her in "I Loved a Soldier," and although she will remain with the company, she sails for London shortly to do one film for Alexander Korda. Meanwhile, the studio has borrowed Margaret Sullavan from Universal for Miss Dietrich's role in "I Loved a Soldier."

Theatres End Ad Fight

The long battle between the Journal and Star, Lincoln, Nebr., papers, on the one hand, and the Westland theatres on the other, has ended, with the theatres dropping their advertising in the local shopping guide and going over to the papers. In return, the daily papers are giving the theatres' product needed publicity which has been lacking for a long time.

Society Honors Fishman

Dr. J. B. Fishman, New Haven, of the Fishman Circuit and retiring head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, has been elected to membership in Sigma Xi, honorary scientific society. Dr. Fishman is a research fellow in the Yale School of Medicine and his admission to the society is on the basis of work in the physiological chemistry department.

Selznick To Do "Allah"

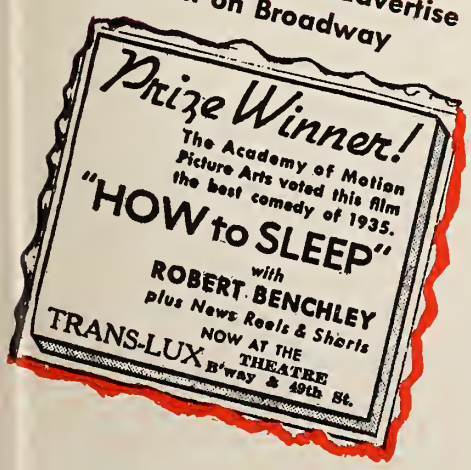
David O. Selznick will be affiliated with Pioneer in producing "The Garden of Allah," having taken over a contract with Technicolor for production of the picture which Pioneer was unable to produce because of the absence of Merian C. Cooper. John Hay Whitney will return to Hollywood in April following a trip abroad.

Erpi Moves Branch Office

The New Orleans office of Electrical Research Products, Inc., has moved from the Pere Marquette Building to the Canal Bank Building, one block nearer the film center. Walter E. Woodward, southeastern division sales manager for the company, is in charge of the branch.

Allied Gets "Custer"

Allied Film Exchange of Oklahoma City has signed with Robert Mintz, president of Stage and Screen Attractions, to handle the latter's serial, "Custer's Last Stand," in Oklahoma.



JUNIOR WINS, TOO!

The little rascal copped a statue! After Momma and Poppa Leo brought home the big Academy Award with "Mutiny on the Bounty" there was such excitement in the family when Junior showed up with the Prize for the Year's Best Comedy Short — "How to Sleep" — featuring Robert Benchley. The Prize Committee always has a tough time picking out the winning M-G-M Short because Leo, Jr., is awful smart at making snappy short subjects. It's hard to choose among Shorts like M-G-M's "Audioscopiks" and Chic Sale's "Perfect Tribute" and those wonderful Harman-Ising Happy Harmonies Color Cartoons and Pete Smith's fun films, etc. Exhibitors solve the problem by getting them all, which pleases us of course and ditto exhibitors!

P. S. By the way, M-G-M won several other Academy Awards for Best Sound Recording, Best Dance Direction, Special Award for Technical Achievement and what not . . . sure we're proud!

MGM Tilt with Spanish Exhibitor Is Up to Arbiters

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
Barcelona Correspondent

While differences between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and local exhibitors have been placed before an arbitration board and a settlement is expected within a few days, Jacques Edelstein, MGM branch manager, has asked police protection following receipt of three telephone calls and two letters threatening death, called the work of cranks.

The difference arose when Mr. Edelstein started criminal proceedings against Francisco Fernandez, one of the firm of Fernandez and Lehman, exercising proprietorship of the Principal and Select Cinemas, charging sub-letting of the picture "Anna Karenina" to the Cine Mundial and other theatres without contractual authority. Eight managers of theatre circuits aggregating 38 houses cabled the MGM home office in New York, following this move by Mr. Edelstein, that unless he were removed from office in 48 hours they would boycott all the company's product.

The submarine "round-robin" had employed the phrase "representative of Barcelona exhibitors," whereupon rumors rapidly had spread about Spain's Hollywood that the Asociacion de Impresarios de Catalunya, the official body of the exhibitors of this region, was the actual complainant. The association disavowed any participation in the cabled protest.

Columbia Releases 27

Columbia Films, S. A. E., organized May 14, 1935, with headquarters in Barcelona, but inaugurating its distribution program in October last, already has to its credit 37 releases of Columbia pictures, with seven dubbed in Spanish, and two successful "Spanish shot" pictures acquired for distribution in the Spanish Americas. These latter were "Agua en el Suelo," filmed by the Estudios C. E. A., Madrid, and "Vidas Rotas," by the Inca Films.

"Crime and Punishment," the latest Columbia release, beat the French version of the Dostoiewsky classic by one week in both Barcelona and Madrid and obtained more runs in provincial capitals and important industrial centers. It had a fortnight's run at the Capitol in this city and the Palacio de la Musica in Madrid.

"One Night of Love," featuring Grace Moore, established an enviable record, with three weeks at the Avenida in Madrid, four weeks in a second-run house, the Progresso, four weeks at the Royalty and a fourth run at the Opera. A second picture featuring the star has completed three weeks at the Madrid Avenida.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS CLAIM VICTORY IN 40% MAXIMUM RENTAL DEMAND

Prices Reduced in Many Districts, Says Association, Citing Increase of Number of Films Offered as a Factor

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

That the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association declaration for 40 per cent as a maximum film rental had been effective in reducing prices in many districts, and that "a gratifying increase in the number of films on offer" had assisted this tendency, was noted in the annual report of the association, just issued.

The Report conceded that "attempts to enforce rules by penalties and deposits revealed that they were unenforceable under a Trade Union constitution" but declared that figures had been prepared which showed that "nine men controlled the booking of 652 first-run situations, which represent about half the first-runs, and these in turn more or less dominate the booking situation.

"These men," added the report, "do not ask the association to solve their film rental problems."

The general conclusion of this part of the survey is that "outide the areas of excessive competition, the supply of films is in process of overtaking the demand."

The nine key bookers of the United Kingdom are not identified by the CEA, but it is easy to compile a list of individuals and circuits controlling approximately the number of first-runs indicated:

A. W. Jarratt, Gaumont-British.
John Maxwell, ABP.
Oscar Deutsch, Odeon.
C. J. Donada, County.
Fred. Bernhard, Union.
H. D. Moorhouse.
Alex King.
Earle St. John.
Phil and Syd. Hyams.

These would all certainly appear in a list of this type.

Americans and the Quota

Discussing the booking problems which have arisen since the exhibition quota of British films became 20 per cent in October last, it was pointed out in the report that:

"If the quality of British films handled by the American controlled companies was comparable with their American product, there would be relatively little in the quota that would be troublesome to exhibitors. The problem . . . is to devise some method whereby the American companies could be induced to display a similar enthusiasm in regard to their British quota films to that which they so enthusiastically manifest, with justification, concerning their native production."

Exhibitors' views on the quota were summarized in the statement that "in the absence of effective amendment of the Cinematograph Films Act by the Government to eliminate the considerable number of unusable British films, . . . the quota on exhibitors should be reduced to 10 per cent," but the report recognized the existence of considerable exhibitor opinion that artificial assistance to British production is no longer needed, and a counter-opinion that statutory British films are a safeguard against monopoly.

The problem of Films Act revision "will be of major importance during the present year," said the report. This is a reading of the situation confirmed by the announcement that the Board of Trade is considering appointment of a committee to investigate the problem and study the various suggestions put forward for its solution. The latest news is that the committee is likely to be strictly official in composition, without any members drawn from the industry.

111 New Theatres in 1935

Discussing overbuilding, the report declared that 111 new theatres were opened in 1935 and 19 closed, giving a net increase of 65 independent and 27 circuit halls. "With the steady building which is in proceeding to be taken into account, it is obvious that the industry has approached an extremely critical stage.

While, it was asserted, purely speculative building has disappeared as a result of the efforts of the CEA, "circuits . . . introduce a variation of the original problem, inasmuch as their purchasing power disturbs the equilibrium of the distribution of films which has hitherto prevailed among the existing cinemas. If this process continues at the present rapid rate it will probably mark the last stage towards the goal of the super-saturation point."

The CEA regretted that steps to control new building by trade action were impossible "principally on account of the unwillingness of the renting section to face its complexities by cooperation with exhibitors," but recorded success for the policy of opposing "redundant" licenses before the local authorities, which has insured some regard being paid to local needs before permits for new buildings are issued.

20th Century-Fox in England

Plans of Twentieth Century-Fox for big production in England, first announced by Joseph Schenck on his visit last year, take definite shape in the announcement here of the formation of New World Productions, under the control of Robert T. Kane.

Four big features are planned in the first year, with a total production budget of $2,500,000. Twentieth Century-Fox will handle world release, including the United States. Authors lined up include J. B. Priestley, A. E. W. Mason, Frederick Lonsdale, Mary Borden and Donn Byrne. An early feature will be made in Technicolor.

London Films studio at Denham will be used.

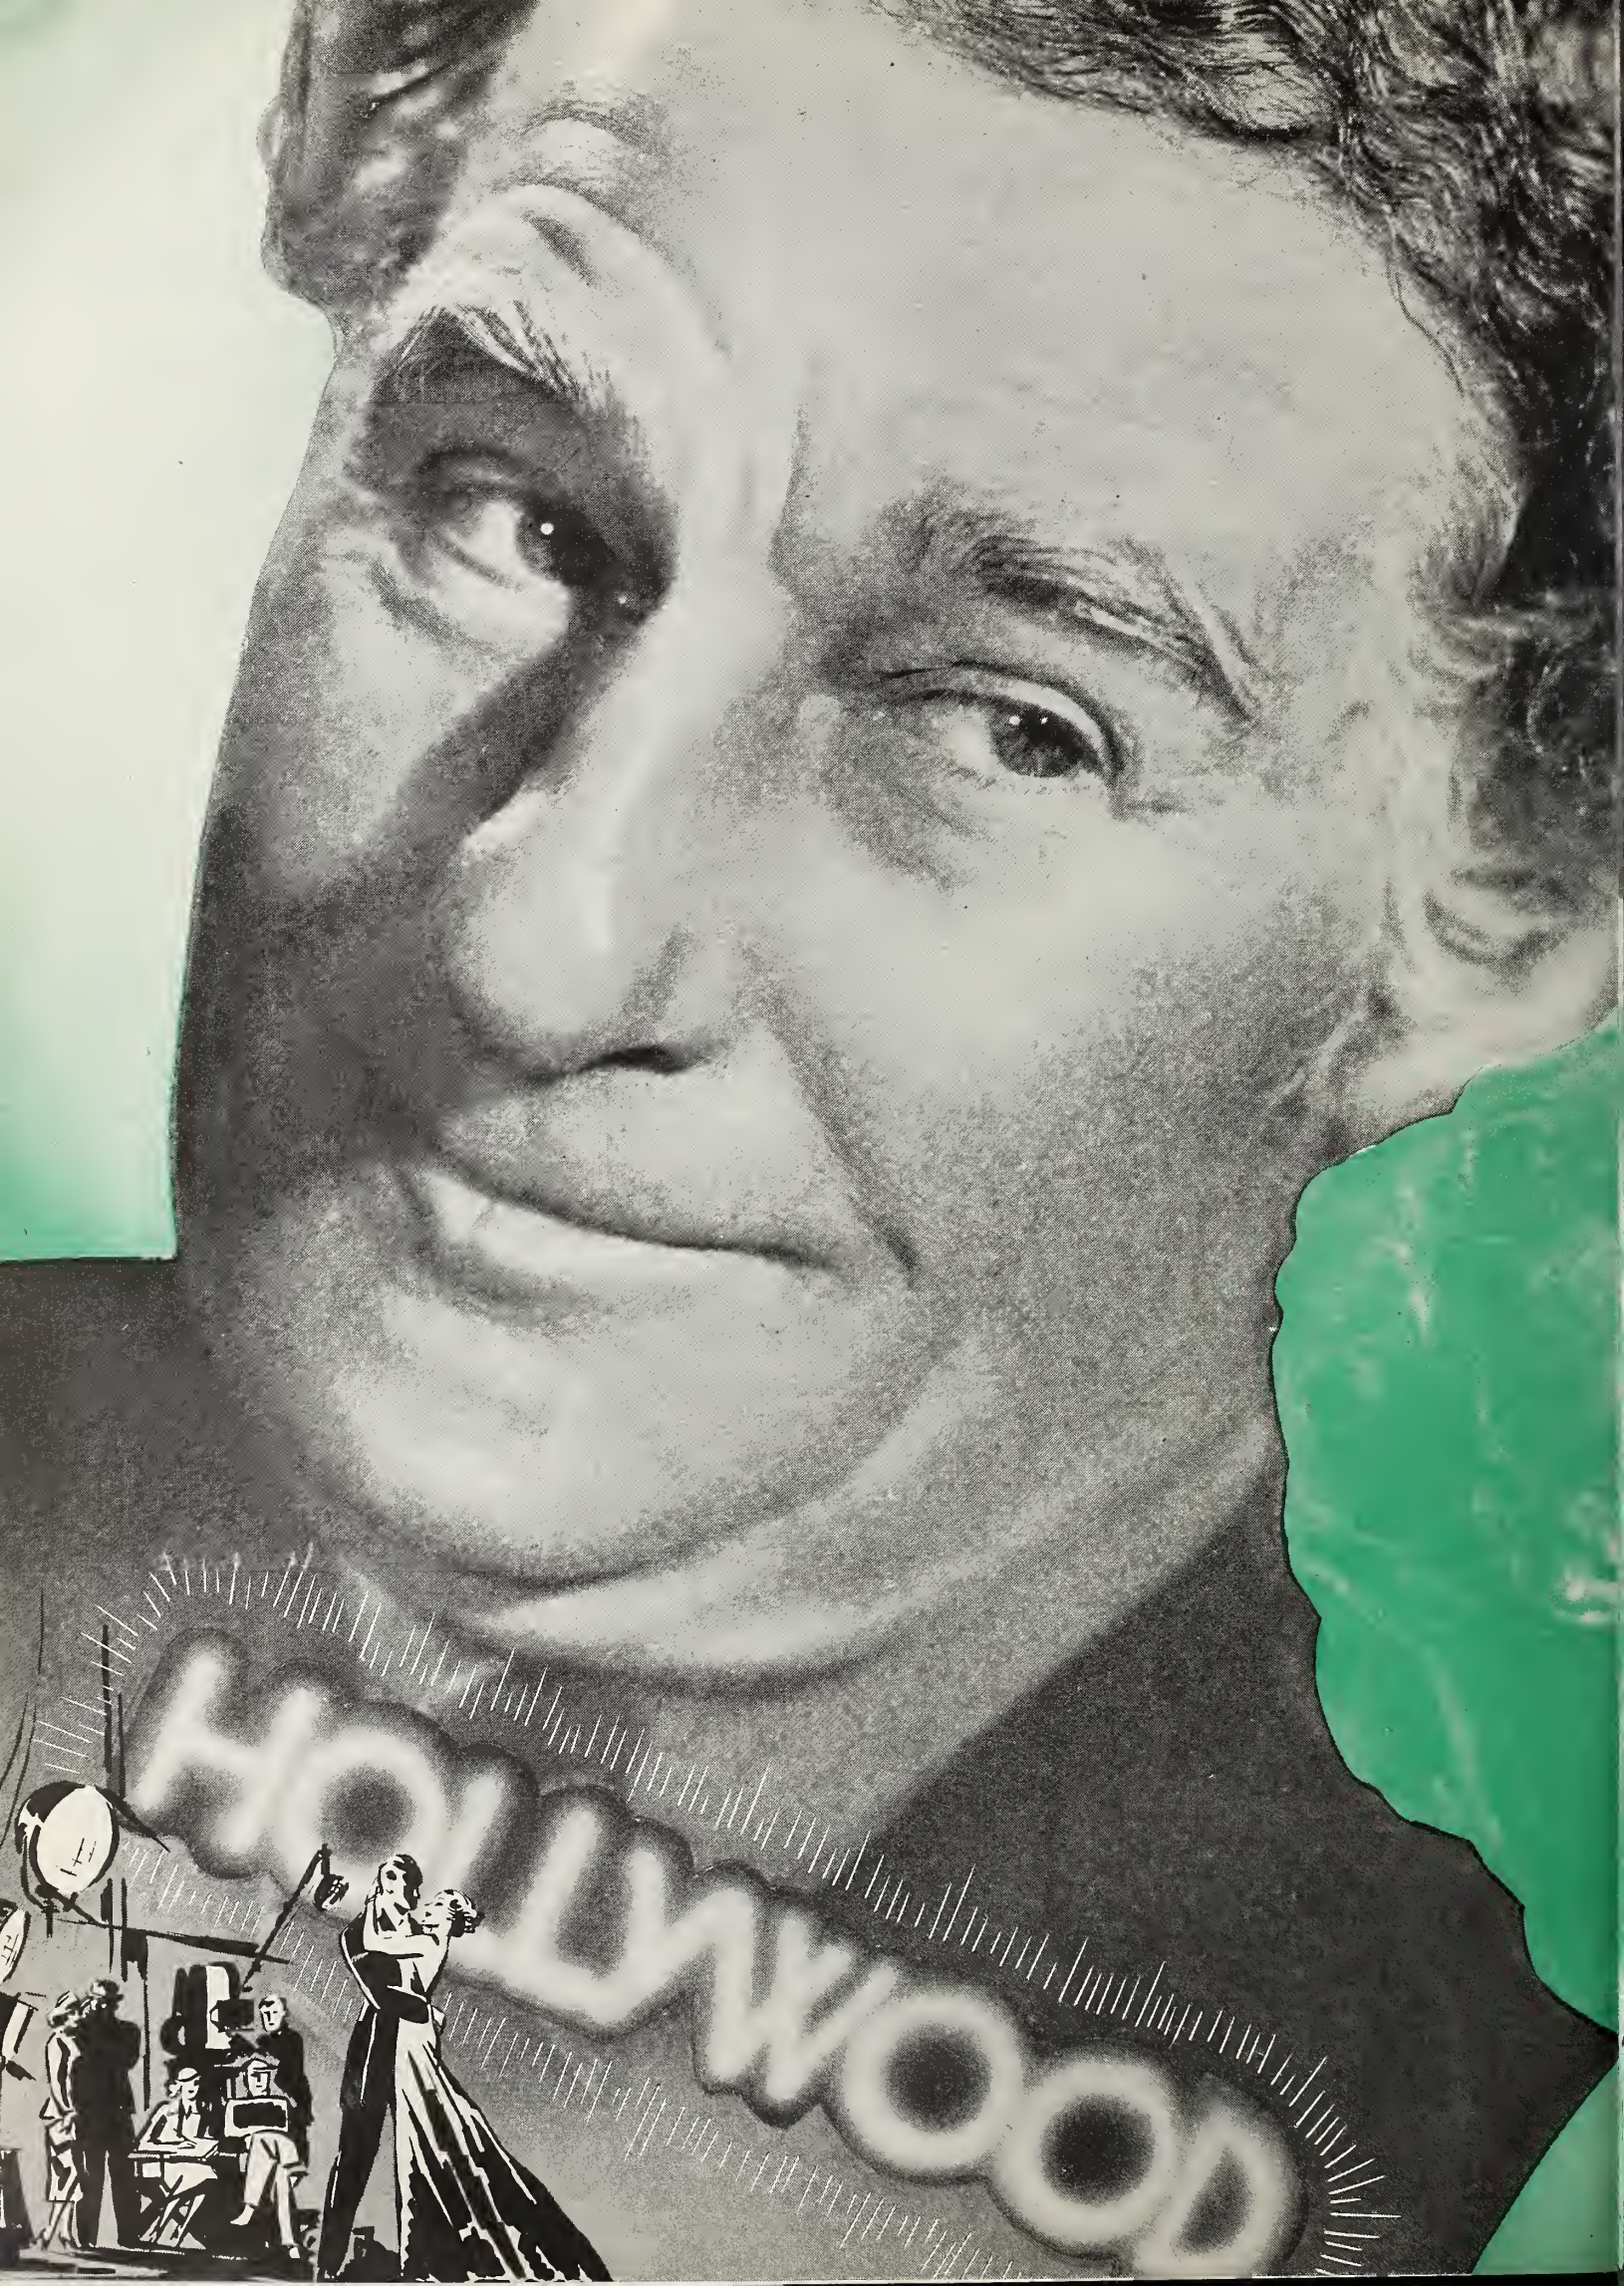
Defeat New Bills In Two States

The winding up of state legislative sessions was in full swing this week, although Missouri took up the study of new taxation at a special session that may yet be called. In Mississippi, a censorship bill was defeated; New Jersey legislators were still trying to tax admissions, while in New York a second anti-standing measure was submitted for consideration.

In Jackson, Mississippi, the censorship bill introduced in the state legislature died in committee. It is said that no further attempts will be made for a time at least to foist a censorship measure on theatre owners.

In New Jersey, however, undismayed by four defeats administered to various theatre tax bills introduced in the legislature at Trenton, proponents of the latest four per cent admission levy are striving to bring the bill up again for consideration, having gained one vote with the return of Mrs. C. W. Hand from Florida. Likelihood of passage, however, is regarded as slim since the extra vote will still leave the bill's sponsors one vote short of the necessary 31. The measure received 29 votes at last Saturday's session, which was not adjourned until 6 o'clock Sunday morning. The present bill calls for a levy of four per cent on gross receipts, with all admissions of 10 cents or under exempted.

In Albany another bill to prohibit the sale of admissions unless there is a seat available was filed in the Senate this week by Rae L. Egbert. According to Mr. Egbert's bill, standees would be admitted to a marked space provided, and aisles and fire exits must be kept open.



In Missouri, it appears there will be called a special session of the legislature to make more appropriations for old age pensions, which now average $10.50 per person per month. Sentiment seems to be crystalized around a three per cent sales tax as a solution to the fiscal problem.

Kelly Going To Mexico

Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president of United Artists in charge of foreign sales, exclusive of England and the Continent, has left for Mexico City on the first lap of a six-month tour of branches under his supervision. From Mexico City he will go to Panama and then Havana. Walter Gould, who recently returned from a seven-month trip to South America, will accompany Mr. Kelly.

Permit Sunday Films

The City Council of Ocala, Fla., has approved full-time Sunday films for the convenience of the 3,000 workers on the $146,000,000 Gulf-Atlantic ship canal construction project. The change was effective March 8th.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 13.—(A) What is Polarity? (B) Is the light from the arc tail flame of any value in illuminating the screen? (C) How does the illumination value of an electric arc crater compare with its brilliancy and its area?

Answer to Question No. 8

Bluebook School Question No. 8 was: (A) Does a stack (copper disc) rectifier require attention after its installation? (B) Name the points in favor of and the objections to mercury arc rectifiers. (C) What will be the results if too little or too uneven pressure be applied in making a film splice? (D) Just what is a "link" fuse?

The following are deserving of credit for their answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; B. Vietti; W. C. Brown; J. R. Prater; G. Thompson; H. Polies; H. C. Goodman and N. N. Gray; W. (A) W. C. Brown says, "After installation, the copper oxide type of rectifier requires no attention except dusting and inspection of connections and switches at intervals to avoid possibility of oxidized connections or poor contact in switches. The cooling fan should also be inspected as an added precaution. The aging taps should be changed after a specified time of operation."

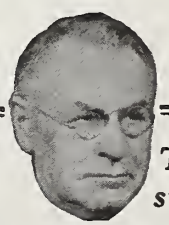
D. Danielson says, "The only attention required by the stack rectifier is an occasional inspection of contacts, keeping it clean and testing for possible over temperature. Too high temperature is very disastrous to this type of rectifier."

B. Devietti replies, "The only attention required for stack rectifiers is periodic checks of its electrical connections to insure proper contacts and, along with the rest of the projection room equipment, it should be kept scrupulously clean."

H. Polies says, "Yes, copper oxide rectifiers do require attention after installation. Ten days thereafter the holding bolts running through the stacks should be checked for tightness. If the least bit of looseness has developed this should be checked again a few days later and inspection continued until no further looseness develops. It probably will settle down within ten days, however. This item thereafter should be tested once each month as long as the rectifier is used. Keeping all dust off these rectifiers causes them to operate at lower temperatures and to prolong their useful life. It also is a good idea to test tightness of the bolts that hold the stacks of the transformer, as any looseness adds to both the heat and vibration."

(B) H. C. Goodman and N. N. Gray answer, "The points in favor of the mercury arc rectifier are (1) less heavy than motor-generator sets, (2) relatively low in cost, (3) high in efficiency. The points against them are (1) life of the tubes very uncertain, (2) will not stand over-load, (3) tubes hum, give off weak illumination and break easily, (4) possible high up-keep cost, dependent largely upon tube failure or breakage."

J. R. Prater replies, "Points in favor of mercury arc rectifiers are (a) relatively low initial cost and light weight as compared with motor-generator set, (b) high efficiency due to very little power absorption loss and to the use of transformers to reduce the initial impressed voltage. Objection to use of these recifiers in projection work are (a) limited capacity, as well as inability to withstand even temporary overload, (b) tubes are expensive, cumbersome to ship and handle, easily broken and highly uncertain as to length of life in service, (c) when in operation the tubes give off considerable heat, plus a harsh, flickering blue light and a loud hum, all of which is annoying if the rectifier be located in the projection room. This hum also is readily picked up by sound equipment through the d.c. lamp leads, even though the rectifier be some distance away; and (d) the d.c. supplied by them is to some extent unsteady to an extent that is noticeable upon the screen."



(C) A. L. Cooper says, "Lack of sufficient pressure when making a film splice will result in an imperfect and therefore a weak splice. In making splices too even a pressure cannot be applied."

J. J. Cuddy replies, "When little or uneven pressure is applied in the making of a film splice, the splice will be so weak that when rewinding occurs the ends may work loose or the splice shift so that the sprocket holes will be mismatched. [That last could hardly be, Brother Prater, as the cement would then be dried and slippage could not occur.—F. H. R.] A splice made thus may and probably will cause a break sooner or later, or may cause serious damage to the film in event it causes the film to climb the sprocket."

E. Toedte says, "A splice to which too little or uneven pressure is applied in its making will be weak and may pull apart at any time. Unevenly applied pressure will cause portions of the splice surface to be well cemented and other parts to be poorly cemented or not cemented at all. Such a splice is dangerous. It adds to the fire hazard, as it may pull apart between the aperture and intermittent sprocket. It may break in a way that will compel the stoppage of the show. There is no possible excuse for making such a splice. Too much evenly applied pressure does no manner of harm."

(D) L. Limmroth says, "A link fuse is a wire of fusable metal having a copper clip attached to each end."

Hundreds say essentially the same thing. Barney DeVietti adds this to his answer: "The more I use my new Bluebook, the more I am convinced it would have been cheap—in fact, very cheap indeed—at three or four times the price I paid for it. Believe me, Dad, I honestly mean that had I paid three or four times what I did I would still have considered myself lucky to get the book—and I'm not very 'flush' either!

THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH

H. N. SWANSON

Ace Redbook Critic, Catches New Capra Production at Sneak Preview and Writes Double-barreled Rave!

"Any time FRANK CAPRA makes a picture it's news! MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN, his very latest one, DESERVES ALL THE ADJECTIVES WE HAVE BEEN SAVING FOR JUST SUCH AN OCCASION AS THIS!

The script was done with a dash by Robert Riskin, Columbia's ace scenarist, from Clarence Budington Kelland's story. Easy laughs are combined with swift story progression in a smooth-as-silk manner. Enriched by the cream of Hollywood's character actors, the picture emerges as GARY COOPER'S BIGGEST VEHICLE IN A LONG TIME, and certainly JEAN ARTHUR'S BEST TO DATE!

Capra's sure and nimble touches are lavishly displayed in every single scene! I can't guess what its chances will be of snaring the ACADEMY AWARD THIS YEAR, but let me tell you, IT VERY DEFINITELY WILL BE A STRONG CONTENDER FOR THAT HONOR!"

UNION DIFFICULTIES ENDED: SAPERSTEIN

Chicago Allied Charges Distributors Act Unfairly on Delivery of Promised Product

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Allied Theatres of Illinois started its seventh year this week under the guidance of Aaron Saperstein, who was re-elected president. Others officers to be named were: Van Nomikos, vice-president; Harry H. Lasker, secretary; Joseph Stern, treasurer; Harry Nepo, sergeant-at-arms.

Directors named were Ludwig Sussman, Tippy Harrison, S. Roberts, Verne Langdon, Benjamin Lasker, B. Charuhas, Abe Gumbiner, Chas. Nelson, Richard Salkin, Benjamin Bartelstein and Jack Rose. Louis L. Abramson was reappointed recording secretary for the seventh time.

At the meeting which was held Thursday at the Congress Hotel, President Saperstein reported on the work of the organization for the past year. In his report Saperstein pointed out that the operators' union difficulties had been settled until the time for discussing a new contract comes up.

Other matters discussed included the reported attempt by MGM to substitute eight "B" pictures for 10 "A" pictures which the contracts called for, and the failure of Twentieth Century-Fox to deliver more than 38 pictures when it is understood that 52 were promised. Allied members pointed out that they felt the distributors were taking too much advantage on some of these deals and an attempt should be made to stop the alleged violations.

One other matter discussed was the booking of the Chaplin picture which B&K bought and which is playing with one extra week's clearance between the "C" houses and the first-week-of-release houses. Allied members are reported to be firmly opposed to buying the Chaplin picture and so far have ignored any deals for the product.

"Klondike Annie," the Mae West picture which has received such a deluge of publicity throughout the nation and which passed the local censor board with a "white" ticket after a special showing was given to break a tie vote, goes into the Chicago theatre this week for a two weeks' engagement.

The picture first was set for the Roosevelt theatre but after the violent editorial attack launched on the picture by the Hearst newspapers locally it was booked for the Chicago. Local theatre and exchange men feel that the results of business elsewhere on the picture, especially since the Hearst outburst, will warrant the two week engagement. Jan Garber and his orchestra, local favorites, will provide the stage attraction.

MGM will roadshow "The Great Ziegfeld" at the Erlanger theatre, opening Easter Sunday evening at $1.50 top. A special advertising campaign will be launched, with a three weeks engagement in this theatre slated.

At the Chicago theatre, "Petticoat Fever," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "Small Town Girl" are scheduled. The Oriental will play "Woman Trap" and then "Riff Raff," which played two weeks in the Apollo and is doing big business at neighborhood houses. The Roosevelt will show "Rose Marie," starting this week and will follow with "Country Doctor" and then "Wife vs. Secretary." At the United Artists theatre the Chaplin picture winds up a four-week engagement on Friday and "These Three" will follow, after which "Little Lord Fauntleroy" goes in for a run.

The Apollo theatre has currently the "Life of Dr. Louis Pasteur." This picture is playing to sensational business and will hold over at least a week. The Garrick will play "Petrified Forest," now at the Chicago, for the second Loop week.

Through a pooling arrangement with C. G. Lekander, Fred Anderson of the Anderson theatre circuit in Morris has closed his newly opened Barb theatre in DeKalb and will operate only the Egyptian theatre there. Lekander owns and operates the Fargo theatre there.

DeKalb, with a population of 8,500, has three theatres, the Egyptian, 1,600 seats, the Fargo 1,200, and the Barb 470 seats.

The Barb recently was remodeled and is one of the most modern small houses downstate.

Warner is planning to build a new theatre at Rhodes avenue and 79th street. The new house will be of modern design and will seat 1,500. Plans now call for an expenditure of $250,000 for the building of the theatre. The ground was bought from Mrs. Emma Mayer and is 149 feet long on Rhodes Avenue and 124 feet on 79th street. The land cost $30,000. The house will be opened about September 1, according to the present plans.

W. V. A. Mack, recently appointed Midwestern division manager for G-B Pictures, has been given five additional exchanges in this territory. Mack, who came here a few weeks ago to be in charge of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis exchanges, now has charge of the Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Omaha branches. He spent last week visiting these exchanges and conferring with George Weeks, general sales manager.

Since the choosing of Bette Davis as an Academy Award winner the pictures in which she appears have taken a spurt here. "Dangerous" at the Avalon, Century and Riviera theatres proved to be as big an attraction as "Captain Blood" which was in the big money class. "Petrified Forest" at the Chicago this week is also doing great business and largely through the attention showered upon Miss Davis whose timely arrival here this week for a stopover between trains gave the local newspapers some fresh copy.

James Winn, Warner sales executive, is in New York conferring with Grad Sears, general sales manager, on business matters. James Coston, Warner theatre executive, is also in New York conferring with the home office officials.

The father of Lou Lipstone, B&K executive, was buried Monday. Lipstone was away on a vacation and rushed here, but was too late to be with his parent before he passed away.

Felix Mendelssohn, MGM exchange manager, is on a West Indies cruise getting a much needed vacation.

Hal Olver, New York press agent, is out here to do some special exploitation on "Boy Meets Girl," which Warner will produce in film form.

Joe Abramson and Ann Orphan are the newest additions to Henri Elman's staff at Capitol Film exchange. Abramson is one of the bookers and Miss Orphan is the P. B. X-pert. Alice Roth, formerly at Capitol, is now with Gaumont-British.

The Screenoscope is the newest form of Screeno and is being released by J. S. Markstein on a national basis.

Attendance at the Palace theatre the first Saturday "Follow the Fleet" was shown was more than 13,000 paid admissions. This is a new record for the house, which played nine shows.

Arriving on the Santa Fe Chief and en route to New York, Mervyn LeRoy, his wife, and Jake Wilk stopped off at the Blackstone hotel to confer with local Warner officials. LeRoy said the most important task he ever undertook was reading of "Anthony Adverse" three times. The picture will be released in August.

Charging the reorganization plan of the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., is unfair, an independent bondholders' committee is asking debenture holders for authorization to act in the event approval of the plan is received by the higher court.

The committee is headed by M. A. Goldsmith of Chicago, and includes Vincent Curtis Baldwin, Ben Franklin Meyer and R. G. Sumner.

Film Row is mourning the tragic death of Irving Fehlberg, assistant manager of the Mid-West theatre, last Saturday. Fehlberg was shot and killed by Peter Krisoulas, 39, who was discovered annoying a 12-year-old girl patron, it was testified at the inquest Monday. Fehlberg had Krisoulas brought to the theatre office by two ushers and was calling police when Krisoulas pulled a gun and shot him, according to the charge. Fehlberg leaves a wife and 20-months-old baby. He had no insurance.

The MidWest theatre is a Schoenstadt house.

"Bounty" Model Winners Named as Contest Ends

Kelmel, Kansas City, won second prize, and C. P. Krupp, Akron, Ohio, third. There were also 10 honorable mentions. Thirty-nine of the 10,806 models entered in the contest were exhibited at the Hotel Astor in New York Wednesday for final judging by Lowell Thomas, Gordon Grant, marine illustrator, and Jack Wenner, ship's model expert.

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

It has been said that "forewarned is to be forearmed," and while we don't wish to appear as being pessimistic, yet we wish to repeat what we said in our last letter, and that is that you boys living down in the lower Mississippi and Missouri river countries had better have a flatboat ready, for when this snow starts to melt and run off, that is covering Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and Illinois to an average depth of two feet, not counting the drifts, you will think that the Atlantic ocean has changed its course, and it will make the Mississippi of former years appear as a spring brook. We wouldn't be surprised to see the steamboats dock at the foot of Main street here in this cow metropolis.

When we think of high water it makes us wonder if that boy we met at Beardstown, Illinois, some years ago is still operating the theatre there. When we called on him once he told us about the high water they had there. He said that the water backed up into the town until it covered his stage two feet deep, and he said, "You can believe it or not, Colonel, but I sat on a high stool on my stage with a fishpole and line and had a chunk of liver on the hook and I caught a fifteen-pound catfish right here on my stage." We said to him, "Say, did you say we could believe it or not?"

Then when we think of Beardstown we recall the little brick court house where Abe Lincoln defended, and cleared, a man prosecuted for murder once, and the little court house remained the same that day that it did in those days. Our curiosity got the better of us so we went up to the court room and sat down in the same chair that the judge sat in, and we picked up the same gavel he used and we rapped on the desk and said, "This court will be in order," just like he did, although we were the only person in the room. Beardstown, you know, is located right on the east bank of the Illinois river, and the Illinois river is going to get awfully wet, too. We hope that theatre boy down there will send us some catfish.

The other night we went to see "Man Hunt," gangster picture with a good cast and well directed, with Chic Sale doing quite a lot of the work. Whenever they put Chic in a picture and give him plenty to do they can be assured that they are going to please the average small town audience, unless we don't know small town audiences, and we think we do.

When we see Chic we remember the pleasant times we had at his home and when we had our picture taken with him. We also recall the picture wherein he took old Shep out in the woods to shoot him.

If Chic had shot that old dog that time we'd be off of him for life, but he didn't shoot him. He shot up in the air and he said to his wife, "I missed him." You boys had better get this picture.

We have just received a letter from Leonard Townson of Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia, Canada. Leonard says that Annapolis is the second oldest town on the American continent. Gee whiz, that's going back to the days of our Pilgrim Fathers and the Plymouth Rock roosters.

Leonard says the snow there is six or seven feet deep on the level and he advises us to come in the summer time, should we decide to visit Nova Scotia. He also says that the theatre boys there all read the HERALD and he assures us that none of them would shoot us if we would come and visit them. Gosh, but we'd like to.

We judge from his letter that he would be interested in buying a cheap theatre, and if some of you boys are interested you might write him.

Last night we went and saw "Whipsaw" with Spencer Tracy and Myrna Loy, and listen, boys, if your customers like gangster pictures they will undoubtedly like this one. Spencer Tracy is a natural, and we mean by "natural" that he acts just like Spencer would act under any and all circumstances. He doesn't try to put on any dog, but simply acts in a natural and his masterful way.

Myrna acts just like Myrna would if there weren't any persons within a mile. She acts just as natural as she would if she were helping her mother wash dishes, and that's what we call acting.

We'll betcha that Helena, Montana, is mighty proud of Myrna, and we'll betcha also that when she and Gary Cooper were living in Helena that they both played "Pussy wants a corner" and "Ring around Rosa" when they were kids in the high school, and we wouldn't be a bit surprised if Gary wanted to play those games right now, and maybe Myrna would like to also. Well, anyway, you better get this one.

We never saw Major Bowes, but from hearing him on the radio we will bet our last nickel (and that will just about clean us) that the Major is a very fine gentleman and is doing a most excellent work. Who wants to take the bet?

We want to congratulate you boys who are reporting to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. Reports will not all agree, of course, but then we are not all Republicans and we are not all Democrats, and each has a reason. A good report of a picture will help the producer just the same that a bad report will help the exhibitor. In either case the report should be honest and that will help both of them. The reports should always be from the audience viewpoint and not from an individual opinion.

We note considerable criticism of Father Coughlin's radio addresses. These criticisms come mainly from the boys up at the top. We don't know whether he is right or wrong, but we do know that he is not a candidate for any office and therefore doesn't have to kiss the babies or nail up any fences. We still have free speech in this country (maybe).

There now, the snow has started to melt and now we have got to go and get a pair of hip boots. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow. We wish we were down fishing in the Gulf for red fish with Bob Smith of Mission, Texas. And that makes us think of grapefruit too.

While you are thinking of Nebraska as the corn and hog state you want to remember that Nebraska has furnished Hollywood with considerable talent, such as Harold Lloyd, Hoot Gibson, Henry Fonda, Fred Astaire, Darryl Zanuck, Robert Young, Ruth Etting and a number of others that we can't recall at this time. Yes, we have something besides corn and hogs out here.

We saw a jazz orchestra in a one-reel picture the other night that made us feel like we had eaten a pickle when we had the mumps.

Yesterday the mercury went up to 45 and the snow started to go, and Ernie says it is time for us to go right now.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

GALLANT DEFENDER: Charles Starrett, Joan Perry—O. K. Western picture. Played February 27.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard—Good Maynard western. Tarzan pleases with his clever tricks.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—A very interesting comedy picture. Very funny and clean. Great work by Jean Arthur, also Herbert Marshall. The story made fine entertainment and satisfied them all. Played February 25.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RIDING WILD: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—A good Saturday picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—Excellent comedy feature with just enough gangster element to make it interesting. Drew only fair even first night. Somehow George Raft just does not get them. He pleases all that see his pictures but that is always very few. He needs another musical comedy story like "Rumba." Played March 2-3.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Good picture. Cold weather. Terrible business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—A wonderful picture. Great acting by the stars and all the cast. Very interesting story. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Some liked it better than the "Bounty" on account of the comedy relief. Played February 23-24.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Very interesting story of the air pilots. Most of the story is laid in an airport office. Holds interest every minute. Went great with the men, but the fair sex were not present. Played March 1-2.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A very good air picture with the cast giving it every thing they had. Pat O'Brien got the breaks in this one and June Travis did nice work as Tommy. All the audience had a good word for it and the main thing is that it had action. We see too little of Stu Erwin lately. Some of the folks said that with his slow drawl he reminded them of Will Rogers. Stu added about all there was to the comedy end of it. Isabel Jewell as Erwin's wife was good in her small role.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—One of the best flying pictures we ever played. A great cast, great direction. Drew well and satisfied all. Played March 8-9.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MAN OF IRON: Barton MacLane, Mary Astor—Warner Brothers-First National is starring this chap MacLane and he is not ready for it yet, for few know who he is. He is a good actor for the rough and ready types, but there was no outstanding name in the cast to help along so the picture did not do business. The picture is okay outside of the criticism above.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—Very good picture; good midweek business. Josephine Hutchinson won high praise from my patrons.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHIPMATES FOREVER: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—We played this picture several months ago but if you have not played it, do so. It should rate with the ten best of 1935. Drew fine in spite of the worst sleet storm of the year. Played December 27.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—This is one of the most inspiring and beautiful pictures that we have ever shown. It is the simple life story of one of humanity's greatest benefactors. It has practically no love interest, no sex problems, yet it is intensely absorbing and entertaining every minute. The production is flawless. William Dieterle's direction is masterful, and the acting of Muni and Hutchinson is superb. Warner Bros. deserve the thanks of all for having the courage to make this picture. They again blaze the trail, as they have done in the past. We have never presented a picture with more pride. Running time, 87 minutes. Played March 5-7.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. Dak. General patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—"The Story of Louis Pasteur" is a wow. Everybody enjoyed it immensely. Warner Brothers should be proud of it. Running time, 85 minutes.—Effingham Theatre, Effingham, Ill. Small town patronage.

G B Pictures

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Better than "Evergreen" and will get money wherever played. Feature the musical end. Jessie sings some swell songs and there are lots of laughs, throughout the picture. Did better than average business in spite of sub zero weather.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Olathe, Kansas. Rural and small town patronage.

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—George Arliss in a new role. Picture pleased fans of all types. Will get money in a small town.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Olathe, Kansas. Rural and small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Played this one Christmas week and did a better than average before Christmas business. Richard Dix plays a good part. Some people may not like him but I always have. Picture is suitable for small town.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Olathe, Kansas. Rural and small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Eric Linden—They seemed to like this 'way-back-when story. The only exception was the reaction of a little too much of the boy orator, Eric Linden.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BABY FACE HARRINGTON: Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—This was a fair picture, but as far as box office returns, it left us with a complete lack of funds. The one consolation was that we weren't in Ethiopia.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Maureen O'Sullivan, Norman Foster—A witty and pleasing comedy, perfectly acted, but the British dialogue was sometimes hard to get.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BISHOP MISBEHAVES, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan—Rogues talking Cockney out of the sides of their mouths. Played on a bargain night and most of the few that came walked out. Our patrons simply will not stand for foreign accent pictures. This feature was tiresome talk, talk, talk all the way through. Running time, 80 minutes.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936: Eleanor Powell, Jack Benny—Swell entertainment.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHINA SEAS: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery—Excellent picture which failed to draw the crowd it should. Played February 12-13.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala and Lotus Long—Metro spent a lot of money on this one. Of its type a very good picture, but for some reason it did not do normal business, whether this was because no well known names were in the cast or that the vogue for this type is on the wane. It is a fine production. The island scenes are beautiful.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—Ran this on a Friday-Saturday spot and did a fair business. A little deep for small towns but action suited all. Not a woman's picture but will please the men. Played up the men's angle and had more men than women. Good for any day in week. Running time, 130 minutes. Played March 6-7.—Ken Higgins, Capitol Theatres, Harrisville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone—Excellent characterizations by all the principals, but the big surprize of the picture was the unusually brilliant performance of Eddie Quillan as Seaman Ellison. The fact that this was Eddie Quillan's first dramatic endeavor makes it even more outstanding for him.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Nelson Eddy, Jeanette MacDonald—No one could say that this wasn't a first class picture, but blizzards and cold weather kept our crowds away. However, we enjoyed it ourselves, so we charged the loss to entertainment.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE OPERA, A: Marx Brothers—The first local appearance of the Marx Brothers, and from the looks of the business they mean little or nothing to this situation. Personally, I think this as good as anything they have ever turned out, but when you have seen one of their pictures, then you have seen them all. As far as our patrons are concerned, Kitty Carlisle and Allen Jones steal the show, with their singing of "Alone." Running time, 96 minutes. Played March 1-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—Due to extreme cold and blizzards, our patronage was almost nil, and it would have been better to close the show.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PURSUIT: Chester Morris, Sally Eilers—Lively action comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—A good picture that drew a nice crowd on the first night, but flopped on the second. William Powell does excellent work in this and is ably supported by Rosalind Russell, a real find. Played February 24-25.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—One of the best of this type picture. Tie up with the schools. Played February 23-24.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Credit must be given to direction and the work of Ronald Colman in this gripping story of the French Revolution. Blanche Yurka as the leader of the revolution is an unforgettable character. Grim, relentless, fanatical, she was all of that, and Ronald Colman was never better than in this role. Brought out a good many patrons that we only see on pictures such as this. A very great production, with no letdown through the picture. It grips all the way.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Ronald Colman turned in one of his usual excellent performances, but the most talked-about portrayal was given by Blanche Yurka as Madame De Farge.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Cecilia

Parker—Despite various reports praising this picture it doesn't look very good to me. The cash customers were about evenly divided in their opinions. Business just fair.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia—Splendid offering for weekend showing. Our patrons liked it immensely, but business suffered again from the low temperatures and measles kept the kids away. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 21-22.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—One of the really fine pictures of the season. Those who were able to reach the theatre through snow and ice felt well repaid for their efforts. Running time, 82 minutes. Played February 26-27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHIPSAW: Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy—Fairly good crook picture. However, there was nothing particularly new about the story. Business just fair.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL: Tom Brown, Sir Guy Standing—Mild weather brought out a good crowd, all comments about this offering being favorable. Sir Guy Standing was excellent. Played February 29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

BIG BROADCAST OF 1936, THE: Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti, Burns and Allen—A ten reel short; an excellent array of radio and vaudeville acts loosely strung together in something that resembles a plot. But don't get the impression that this detracts from the entertainment value of the film, for, everything considered, "Broadcast" furnishes a full supply of laughs, music, drama and name stars. Running time, 98 minutes. Played March 9.—J. A. Reynolds, Recreational Director, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—The screen's scrappiest lovers in another laugh provoking comedy that clicked nicely with the payees, in spite of cold weather competition. Running time, 83 minutes. Played February 12 13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Rohert Young—Excellent, yet not as good as "The Gilded Lily," "It Happened One Night" or "She Married Her Boss," the three previous Colbert pictures. Disappointed a numher of our patrons who had come to expect more. Not the fault of the players, though, for they are all grand troupers. Played February 23-24.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Robert Young—As usual, Claudette Colbert drew a good crowd and this one seemed to please better than any of her pictures. Played February 27-28.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Line, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—Right out in front. This one comes very close to being the best yet and the box office was back to normal after seven weeks of no business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

COLLEGIATE Jack Oakie, Joe Penner—Entertaining bit of this and that. If your patrons like Oakie and Penner, they will go for it. A nice musical number. Not that it has anything to do with the picture, but business was disappointing. Played February 28.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Jack Oakie, Joe Penner—An excellent musical comedy that hrought out the cash customers and sent them home happy, and what more could you ask of any picture? Have had numerous requests to repeat it. Main interest is in Penner-Oakie-Sparks and they provide enough humor for three ordinary pictures. Played February 23-24.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Kent Taylor, Arline Judge—Good mystery story; fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CORONADO: Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess—This was not intended to be a special hut as a light evening's entertainment it's fine. I think that primarily people go to a show to be entertained and to torget their troubles. not live through someone else's, and this picture with its light music, comedy and dancing doesn't strain the mind. Nor does it make you think it's a great picture, hut it does give you a very pleasant evening. Played March 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

CRUSADES, THE: Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon—Tied up with the schools and religious organizations on this and therefore made a little money. It seems that the big spectacle pictures have passed out now though, as far as making big money on them is concerned. Played February 24-25.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

MIDDLE WEST ADDS NEW CONTRIBUTORS

From Illinois and North Dakota come two new volunteer contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

Frisina Theatres Company, Effingham Theatre, Effingham, Ill.

Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D.

Returning to the picture reporting staff is:

J. O. Smith, Paramount and Fox theatres, Ashland, Ala.

Read the reports of these showmen in the department in this issue.

DRIFT FENCE: Tom Keene, Larry Crabbe—The hest western since "To the Last Man" and "Sunset Pass." Glad to see Tom Keene back after a long absence. He was one of our best drawing western stars. Randolph Scott was also very popular in the Zane Grey stories.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: Alice Faye, George Raft—Alice Faye, Frances Langford and George Raft in a very good picture. Alice Faye gets better with every picture. Played Decemher 23.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY: William Boyd—The first of Paramount's new Western series is good but "Bar 20 Rides Again" and "Eagle's Brood" are just fair.—J. O. Smith. Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith, Chic Sale—Story with a CCC Camp as a setting. An entertaining program picture. Played Fehruary 29.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GREAT LIFE: Joe Morrison, Rosalind Keith—Once in a blue moon we step out and huy a few pictures from one of the smaller companies. Most of them are cheaply made and directed. This picture reminded us of those small companies' products. Very, very cheap in all respects. Was far helow the Paramount standard, which has not been high for the past year but which, thank goodness, now begins to look up considerably. Running time, 63 minutes. Played February 26-27.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—One of the most exciting and entertaining of the underworld pictures. Holds interest all the way. Played Februaty 29.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Fair action story couldn't overcome the cold weather handicap.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NEVADA: Larry Crabbe, Kathleen Burke—Excellent Zane Grey picture. Should rate extra advertising.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Very good comedy, hut snow and cold weather killed business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—Would say John Boles may have been hetter in some other picture but I cannot remember when it was. He is superb in this. The girl, Gladys Swarthout, is excellent, quite pretty, can sing, and if she cares to will go a long ways in the movies. She brings a different personality to the screen, and will certainly reach the top in movies as she has in the theatre. Business fair.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO: John Boles, Gladys Swarthout—The higgest disappointment of the vear. Not even a good western and the music was nothing short of atrocious. Poorly recorded in spots, the dialogue was at times difficult to understand. The one bright spot was the acting of Willie Howard, but a one man performance is not a whole show. No business and no wonder the first nighters got in their deadly digs and the second night fell flatter than a flapjack. Running time, 82 minutes. Played February 28-29.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—One grand picture. It's hard to say whether it was Miss Sullavan, Randolph Scott or Walter Connolly that should get the acting honors in this. Drawing power excellent. We are hringing it hack in April. Played December 19-20.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatre, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

Republic

CRIME OF DOCTOR CRESPI, THE: Erich von Stroheim, Harriet Russell—One of those horror pictures that ought to be cut out for showing in theatres that depend upon family trade. The acting was great of the kind. Story horrible. Chased the kids away from the theatre. Good place to play this one is a hospital or morgue. But there were a few said it was great.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FORBIDDEN HEAVEN: Charles Farrell, Charlotte Henry—I cannot say much for this one. Taken in a fog and that is all that saved it. Could not see half of it. One thing sure, it did not give satisfaction here. The actors worked hard to make a picture out of the story but it was not there.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

FORCED LANDING: Esther Ralston, Onslow Stevens—A very good program picture. Good story and well acted by a fine bunch of actors. Played on a double bill and satisfied. Played on March 6-7.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LAWLESS RANGE: John Wayne, Sheila Mannors—A mighty good western picture. Story good and the stars and a lot of other good western actors made a fine picture. This man Wayne has everything to make this kind of picture interesting. He can ride, fight and isn't bad to look at. Played March 6-7.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

NEW FRONTIER, THE: John Wayne, Muriel Evans—John, the Sunday School boy, cleans up the town literally single handed while a church full of ahle-hodied men pray a few feet away. Should have advertised this as a comedy, for it sure handed the audience a lot of laughs. On a par with the Monogram Wayne pictures. Played February 28-29.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columhus, Montana. Rural patronage.

OREGON TRAIL, THE: John Wayne—Usual western with good scenery but not quite up to Renuhlic's standard for Wayne—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres. Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TROUBADOUR: Gene Autrey—Gene Autrey is fast becoming the hest western star. Every one of his westerns gets better and does not draw just the "Western fans" hut other patrons as well.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatre, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

RKO Radio

ANOTHER FACE: Wallace Ford, Phyllis Brooks—An unusual mixture of gangster-farce comedy. Picture carries drama, light farce comedy and ends with a real punch when the pseudo-movie actor is recognized as a dangerous gangster. A good program picture. Played Februarv 26-27.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix—Above average for western type picture. Pulled only fairly well against unusual cold spell. Pleased those who braved the weather. Running time, 75 minutes. Played February 14-15.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—Tiresome picture, poor business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BREAK OF HEARTS: Charles Bover, Katharine Hepburn—Hepburn's poorest picture. Brought a few tears and did some nice business the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This heats "Top Hat" a mile. Grossed better than Will Rogers and Shirley Temple. I ran it a week and did swell all the time. Town 3,500. Played week of March 1.—Ted Siler, Dickinson Theatre, Olathe, Kansas. Rural and small town patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen—The cognoscenti turned out for this one, but the regular fans walked out on it, calling it noisy, confusing and boresome.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen—This is not a small town picture. Although classed as one of the ten best pictures, it was one of the ten worst box office attractions.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

IN PERSON: George Brent, Ginger Rogers—Ginger has what it takes to pack 'em in. Best Thursday-Friday business in months. Give us small town exhibitors some more like this one and we can retire for life. Played February 27-28.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall, Margaret Lindsay—A shining example of how to kill the popularity of a movie star. Like an Alger book, poor, unhappy, don't deserve-it, self-sacrificing Ann Harding emotes through another picture like she has done in all her previous pictures. We recommend that RKO produce a picture with Ann cast as a human being who maybe would "consent" and she will become a real star. Played March 3-4.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

POWDER SMOKE RANGE: Hoot Gibson, Boots Mallory, Harry Carey, Bob Steele—This picture had a whole flock of good western stars and they made a very satisfactory western out of it. Those that liked westerns liked the show very much.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Good, but the locomotive ride was too long. It's a thriller for a Saturday crowd, but way below par for a Wheeler and Woolsey. Running time, 90 minutes. Played February 21-22.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—A normal sized audience found this offering satisfactory. Played February 15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

RETURN OF PETER GRIMM, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack—A very satisfactory program picture. Wonderful piece of acting by Lionel Barrymore and all the cast.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Hugh Herbert, Helen Broderick—Plain screwy, but preview patrons found plenty of laughs and seemed to enjoy it all. Running time, 67 minutes. Played February 21-22.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Hugh Herbert, Helen Broderick—A nice little picture, a bit silly at times but good for plenty of laughs. Business fine. Played February 22.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

WE'RE ONLY HUMAN: Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt—Exceptionally witty dialogue plus very capable direction, plus a pleasing love story, plus plenty of excitement make this picture stand out as one of the very best program pictures we have seen for many a moon. The title is unfortunate for it has no appeal and everyone attempting to tell others how good the picture was had difficulty in recalling the name. A darn good picture. Played March 4-5.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—That shopworn "Mother knows best" theme poorly done. If you don't have to play it you'd better skip it. Your customers may not walk out but you'll hide out after the second reel.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—A fair program offering which pleased generally on a preview showing. Running time, 56 minutes. Played February 28-29.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland, Rosina Lawrence—Just about like the rest, good mystery entertainment and bringing about the same patronage as in previous pictures. Running time, 71 minutes. Played February 28-29.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET: Warner Oland—The "Charlie Chan" series always draws and pleases. This one is no exception. Played March 4.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple—It's the tops. Good but don't let them build a 100 per cent contract around her. Shirley is not a Will Rogers as far as box office is concerned. Running time, 75 minutes. Played February 23-24.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

HARD ROCK HARRIGAN: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Good Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—Drew better than any other Rogers' pictures and they all drew fine. Twentieth Century should reissue his pictures, especially the older ones. The industry has lost its greatest star, but there are many people who want to see him yet. Played Christmas day.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

> "Running theatres without THE HERALD would be just like putting on a show without film."
> That is the conviction of J. O. Smith, operating the Paramount and Fox theatres, Ashland, Alabama.
> Writes Mr. Smith further to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department:
> "I am sending in some reports on pictures played recently. I have not contributed any to the 'What the Picture Did for Me' section for some time now, but have been reading every other exhibitor's report."

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—Just as good if not better than "Thanks a Million" from the same producers. Fox is just about perfect this year. This picture drew fairly well in spite of a ten inch snow. Alice Faye certainly deserves top billing and star billing in her next picture. She is the very "tops" for musical comedy stars. Played January 30-31.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Jack Holt—Plenty good entertainment, but not the best of this little star's offerings. Pulled fairly well in spite of cold weather and an epidemic of measles which kept the youngsters away. Running time, 73 minutes. Played February 16-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Best Shirley Temple to date. In addition to being the sweetest and cutest kid in pictures, she is developing into a grand little actress, expert dancer and singer. In addition to all of that she had two swell men in Boles and Holt and the story was the best ever given her. Running time, 73 minutes. Played March 1-3.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—The best Shirley ever made and, as for that, anyone else. This holds our all-time high gross and deserves it. It broke our all-time high record by over fifty dollars with below freezing weather every day of the run. We are waiting very impatiently for "Captain January." Jack Holt should gain a top place again after his part in this. Played January 22-24.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO, THE: Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett—Excellent picture. Drew fine first night but poor the second. Played January 6-7.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

MY MARRIAGE: Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor—Drew only a small crowd for Saturday midnight show but the picture rates a better spot on anybody's program. It is good. Played February 8.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—A nice little picture of program caliber, which pulled quite well on a midweek run and pleased to a fair degree. Plenty of points for criticism for those who are inclined to find fault. Running time, 72 minutes. Played February 19-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy, Ben Lyon—Very good program picture with good story and well balanced cast. Running time, 72 minutes. Played March 4-5.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—A good picture which pleased all who saw it., but not enough saw it to pay film rent. Weather to blame this time. Played February 17-18.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—A thriller of the kidnaping racket. Drew well and pleased. Rochelle Hudson is gaining popularity fast. Played January 16-17.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Patsy Kelly, Fred Allen—Yes, it's Thanks a Million, all right. Everything in the picture was O. K. Kelly's wisecracks nearly stole the show. Why, oh, why, can't the producers make a picture at least one out of every three that's really good. Running time, 87 minutes. Played March 1-2.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Fred Allen—One of the very best Powell pictures with more than usual story content. Has good music and a novel approach. Only, for Pete's sake, make Ann Dvorak drink malted milks or cocoa-malt. We Westerners like our women women, not toothpicks. Drew better than average business and pleased all. Played March 6-7.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers—Put Jane in tomboy stuff and she's OK, but keep her there. Jane at this age is running Shirley a close second. But another year and it's bye bye. No juvenile between the child actor and the adult went very far. But we hope miracles happen. Running time, 66 minutes. Played February 28-29.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

THIS IS THE LIFE: Jane Withers, John McGuire—Good picture with better than average drawing power, probably due partly to a Shirley Temple Doll as prize that night.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—Just what they like. Made to order for the small town audience.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Edward G. Robinson—Very good picture but no good at the box office. Played December 16-17.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—This picture was well produced and would be appreciated by the well educated class but it lost its significance at our box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—This picture is unique in that it successfully demonstrated that good acting can be so good that people in small towns appreciate it. It was commented upon favorably by all classes as the best acted, best directed picture they have ever seen. Drew above average. Played March 1-2.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatres, Absarokee and Columbus, Montana. Rural patronage.

ESCAPE ME NEVER: Elisabeth Bergner—Proved to be a sleeper for this situation. Don't know the answer, but every foreign picture we have played has been a grand flop. Running time, 105 minutes. Played February 14-15.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young, Cliff Edwards—Played to the lowest gross for a three-day run we have had in many months. This was partly due to a snowstorm, but even at that, those who did get out to see it were not too enthusiastic. Cliff Edwards proved the hit of the picture, but even he could not alone save it from being just fair entertainment. Running time, 78 minutes. Played February 23-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young—We played this in November in Ashland and it failed to draw when brand new. It also holds our all-time low when played this time, but just cannot understand it, because it is a swell picture. Played February 19-20.—J. O. Smith. Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

Universal

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—Good picture but poor business due to bad weather. Played February 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

DIAMOND JIM: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes—Good picture with an entirely different story, but somehow the public did not want to see it.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell—Story, cast and acting are fair; production is ragged.—Roy W.

Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GREAT IMPERSONATION: Edmund Lowe—Very good work in a dual role; pleased the Saturday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GREAT IMPERSONATION, THE: Edmund Lowe, Valerie Hobson—This is a good, strong picture. Acting great by Ed. Lowe and all the cast. Gave good satisfaction. Played March 3-5.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton—Horton gets better and better. Our patrons, after being house-bound by the snow for two weeks, came out in fairly good numbers, and all who saw "His Night Out" were pleased. Played February 8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert—If you haven't played this you have missed something. One of the very best, bar none. Claudette Colbert is at her best and Baby Jane and Aunt Delilah are very good. This picture will satisfy every audience. Many saw this picture twice. A truly wonderful production. Played February 28-29.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—One of the greatest pictures we ever played and the best I ever saw myself. Story great and the acting greater by both stars. I call it a 100 per cent entertainment. All satisfied. Some came back the second night and that is unusual these days. A picture you will not forget. Played March 1-3.—Bert Silver, New Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe—Saturday audience seemed to like it.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt—A very fine airplane picture that makes very good entertainment. Business only fair last three days of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

THROWBACK, THE: Buck Jones—Western fans found this to their satisfaction. Business normal. Played February 22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

Warner Bros.

BRIGHT LIGHTS: Joe E. Brown, Ann Dvorak—Did good Saturday business in spite of cold weather and deep snow. Now that Warners have got this out of their system I wish they would make that "Earthworm Tractor" story with Joe.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull, Frank McHugh—O. K. programmer with a college setting. Played February 25.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FRISCO KID: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Good picture with extra drawing power. Cagney and O'Brien are our second best drawing team. As "Frisco Kid" is without O'Brien, the drawing power is cut some.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

G MEN: James Cagney, Ann Dvorak—On a midweek date this overcame the zero weather and did good business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG SHOT: Sybil Jason, Robert Armstrong—Sybil Jason deserves a better story; she is as talented as they make 'em. With proper care she should develop into a real star. Business average. Played February 26.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Just another "star" western the likes of which we are not able ot crowd down our patrons' throats. Just don't seem to be able to put over these socalled "star western" pictures. The scenery and music, however, were very fine. Running time, 63 minutes. Played February 21-22.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran—This picture put new heart and courage in the exhibitor. This boy Dick Foran can sing. Too bad he cannot get a good break. We did above average weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PAGE MISS GLORY: Marion Davies, Dick Powell—Warners have produced better musicals than this one. It was a shame to have miscast Powell. We did only average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WIDOW FROM MONTE CARLO, THE: Dolores Del Rio, Warren William—A very good comedy drama above the average. Expert direction and excellent acting with a light but interesting story that pleased and held the attention of the greatest number of customers we have had in many weeks. Warners know best how to make trailers that pull and as a general rule their pictures please mass audiences. Running time, 60 minutes.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

ALIAS JOHN LAW: Bob Steele—Bob Steele is a very popular western star. One of the best for drawing power and he gets good breaks in his stories.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

LITTLE BLACK SAMBO: Comicolor Cartoons—A color cartoon which compares with any major company's. It is plenty good.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

Columbia

MEN IN BLACK: Three Stooges—Slapstik nonsense. If your patrons like the Stooges OK. They should have better material.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THREE LITTLE BEERS: Broadway Comedies—Another slapstick comedy with the Three Stooges. This one is even better than average.—J. O. Smith, Paramount-Fox Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town and CCC Camp patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AGAIN THEY ELECT

It is difficult to find proper expression or to translate into exact wording the excitement and enthusiasm engendered at the second annual convening of the Quigley Grand Awards Judging Committee to select the theatremen for 1935's highest exhibition honors—the Quigley Silver Grand Award and the Quigley Bronze Grand Award.

Full reports of the Honorable Judges' decisions are carried in the news section of this issue but type alone cannot project the earnestness of the 23 executives who left busy desks and affairs of state to pay homage to the boxoffice efforts of the man in the field.

To John Armstrong and also to Harry Goldberg, the spotlight and every bow to which they are entitled for being voted the Silver Grand Award and the Bronze Grand Award. But not entirely to the exclusion of the score of other theatremen whose campaigns evoked further praise and wonderment from the lips of admiring Judges.

For by such representations the Judges have not only elected two men for high honors. By their very presence at the Quigley Ceremonies, these officials have also confirmed the election of showmanship to so high a post in industry importance.

THE ANSWER IS OBVIOUS

'Sfunny thing this showbusiness. For instance, take two managers running theatres about the same in situation, size, policy, etc. They put over campaigns on the same attraction or on two different pictures with about equal boxoffice strength. One campaign is studded with refreshing ideas smartly handled and profitably applied. The other campaign also shows a lot of hard work behind it but does not measure up so well in ingenuity or high-grade showmanship that draws.

And let's say further that matching these two theatremen over a long stretch, with the same opportunities and advertising budgets, one lad will outscore the other consistently in bringing in the grosses. By every sane business law, the better producer should then get more money for his efforts than the other fellow. But if the producer wants a job in a situation similar to the one with which he is familiar and has operated profitably, his success in the previous spot is not always taken into consideration in setting his salary.

There is too much of hiring the manager by price than ability for the insufficient reason that the house involved can only pay a certain figure based often and mistakenly upon previous grosses. And where these instances occur, your able man has little opportunity to cash in on his talents and it's not hard to guess what becomes of his initiative.

The answer obviously is a percentage deal between manager and exhibitor such as is now in effect and doing well for both sides, thank you, in a number of situations. For no matter how earnest and well-meaning he may be, the deserving theatreman who is underpaid is psychologically handicapped in digging up the higher grosses his talents and abilities call for.

Smart exhibitors should realize that practical recognition of managerial superiority is often a most certain way of solving aggravating boxoffice problems.

BRING SPRING INSIDE

Baseball teams in training, seed catalogs among the best sellers, women breaking out in new wardrobes and bock beer on tap are just a few evidences that sprightly Spring is upon us. It won't be long now before the "comfortably cool" banners are dusted off.

And theatres too should celebrate the advent of the gentler season with a bit of dressing-up. Some new drapes and carpeting, a touch of paint here and there, crisp seat covers, flowers, cool-color lighting are in order as showbusiness sounds the clarion call of welcome.

There are so many things to tempt folks out-of-doors in the soft balmy weather. Your wise manager will by all means do his dog-durndest to meet this opposition by bringing the atmosphere of Spring inside his theatre.

Ten Co-ops Feature Krendel's Drive for Second-Run Date

Some 38 different ideas were listed by Manager Dan Krendel in his campaign to put over the second-run of "Magnificent Obsession" at Famous-Players Canadian's neighborhood Tivoli Theatre, and high in the scoring of the Judges who voted him the Quigley February Silver Plaque, were ten co-op ads in the Toronto papers which rolled up an impressive amount of free lineage.

Ads featured the stars, Dunne and Taylor, and covered such lines as furs, flowers, drug store chain, men's wear, furniture, beauty shops, music store, etc., with many of these establishments tying in further with windows and other aids.

Drug Chain Gives 200 Displays

For instance, the drug chain—the Independent Druggists' Ass'n—displayed window cards in 200 stores showing still from one of the hospital sequences in the picture with tie-in copy: "Don't gamble with life or health. Let our experts fill your prescriptions," bottom half of card carrying tie-in theatre copy with title, stars and dates. This was the first time, says Krendel, that the chain has used such outside advertising. There were also full fur style windows, piano displays with blowups of Dunne playing piano, entire radio windows (see photo, next page) and many others as effective in prominently placed locations, downtown as well.

Other downtown tie-ins included style stills in 20 departments of top store, book-jacket displays in 40 book stores, cards in every millinery window, hat blowups of Taylor in every men's store, cards in all beauty shops and windows.

Canadian National Telegraph printed and distributed special heralds with tie-in copy: "Your own phone is your nearest telegraph office and another important phone number is El. 3764, the Tivoli Theatre," followed by large cut and theatre copy.

Letters to doctors, stamped restaurant checks, bookmarks in libraries, candy samples in imprinted packages, imprinted menus, were other methods of coverage employed by the Canadian theatreman in addition to all outgoing mail rubber-stamped.

Shorthand Contest Effective

Reported effect too was a shorthand contest angle—message placed on one side of card distributed in office buildings to stenographers. Girls were asked to transcribe it correctly for certain number of guest tickets offered. Other side of card carried novelty crisscross straight line spelling of the title. Dan writes that nearly 400 answers were received the first day alone on the stenog idea.

Above were the highlights of the prize entry in which Krendel generously credits assistant Stan Andrews, Jimmy Cameron, of the service staff and the house personnel in general for a lot of wholehearted cooperation that helped to set the stage for this excellent subsequent-run campaign.

FEBRUARY WINNERS

DAN KRENDEL, the studious Round Tabler pictured above, has for a long time been a contributor to these pages and an active participant in the Quigley Competitions. Dan runs the uptown, neighborhood second-run Tivoli Theatre, in Toronto, for Famous Players - Canadian and has just been awarded the February Silver Plaque.

MATT SAUNDERS is a name familiar in Bridgeport, Conn., showbusiness circles where for many years he has skippered the Loew-Poli Theatre. Matt has been striving for the Plaque honors for some time back and succeeded in February by taking down the Bronze. Incidentally, this makes the third Plaque Silver and Bronze to be voted in Harry Shaw's division.

Saunders Promotes Front Page Breaks For 'Marie' Contest

Up in that Bridgeport, Ct., where the boys turn loose a lot of smart showmanship, Matt Saunders, at Loew's Poli, in Harry Shaw's division, put together his Quigley February Bronze campaign on "Rose Marie" that in free newspaper space alone added to a high of over 9,000 lines.

Topping it was a hookin with local daily that netted front page breaks and photos for seven days. Tieup was the ringer contest, paper taking shots of audiences, shops and groups outside theatre. White circles were drawn over certain of those in the pictures with guest tickets for the folks identifying themselves.

Included in the effective tiein were photos on front page that ran as large as four columns across and other helpful angles contributed by the paper on the tiein were in keeping.

Banners Delivery Trucks

Other publicity included cartoon strip in class weekly, full page feature story of MacDonald and two full page co-op ads on a Philco radio tiein. Beauty shops and General Electric dealers also planted picture stuff in their displays.

Magazine distributors' delivery trucks carried banners on fan mag. tiein and Saunders rounded up thousands of cough drop samples distributed everywhere in imprinted envelopes. Heralds were stuffed in Liberty magazines distributed by boy carriers and also in publications at local newsstands. Imprinted parking tags were also used.

Matt arranged distribution of Nelson Eddy photos at five-and-tens and at large meeting held at local high school. Music stores all featured hit songs from the picture, and radio columnists on both local dailies went to town to plug Eddy.

Lobby of the Poli being quite sizable, Saunders plants a lot of display art and on this date had illuminated shadow boxes, six-foot cutouts of stars decorated with giant stills against blue background. Two-foot cutout illuminated letters were planted over door of outer lobby.

Indian Village Flash Attracts

Featured outside stunt was a "Rose Marie Indian Village" window spotted in heart of town. Display had black and blue background of black and blue drops on which were planted silver metallic stars and illuminated moon. Sides were dressed with real birch trees and floor was grass-matted.

In center was an eight-foot Indian wigwam, bordered with hatchets, head dresses, beads and Indian relics. Fireplace illuminated with red light was made of logs with scene and star stills added for embellishment. At night, colored baby spots were used to heighten the effect. Ten-foot streamer topped the display and automatic radio-phonograph through loud speaker hookup broadcast and played recordings of song hits.

Among the other slants covered by Saunders were three-foot colored photographic standees in many of the city's best windows.

Dearth's Milkman Cutout Plugs "Milky Way"

Theatremen Extract Cream from "Milky"

Boys in the field are sure going for the dairy tieups on "Milky Way," which offer lotsa opportunities for exploitation. F'r-instance, out in Vancouver, B. C., J. Lloyd Dearth, at the Capitol tied in with leading milk distributors to print and distribute thousands of numbered heralds. Morning paper came in by running, on four consecutive days, certain numbers and 200 comps. were given to those holding heralds with published numbers.

In addition, daily contributed three-column ads to build the gag and dairy bannered milk wagon with driver made up as Lloyd taking the bally up and down the main streets.

Dearth promoted Wrigley's for a flock of sample gum sticks, these distributed by two uniformed gals supporting (see photo) life-size cutout of star. Tieup copy on back of copy was: "You'll swallow your gum laughing at," etc.

Star Wire Used for Tiein

Lloyd wired personal endorsement and blowup of this was planted in all ticket and telegraph offices, depot of Canadian National, company also printing these in miniature and stuffing outgoing messages. Imprinted blotters for juveniles plugging special Saturday morning kid show of cartoons and the feature blanketed the schools.

As date was the Canadian premiere, opening was very Hollywood with all the trimmings. Helping the good cause was a classified tieup, with three-column ad topped with message from Lloyd building up the want ads, copy stressing special weekly rate and that comps. would be given to all advertisers buying the special.

Martin Promotes 19 Dairies

Known as the Milk Council are the 19 dairies that operate in South Bend, Ind., and nearby Mishawaka and these all co-operated with Guy Martin, at the Colfax, in South Bend, to put over his "Milky Way" date. For this purpose thousands of imprinted collars decorated the Council's milk bottles, over 100 trucks carried banners and 600 retail store accounts displayed theatre cards on counters and in windows.

Cards plugging Milky Way sundaes were used by Woolworth's, and kids attending opening day Saturday matinee given Lloyd glasses. For bally purposes, Martin put "milkman" on street.

Quigley Winners

By decision of the Judges in convention at the New York Athletic Club last Tuesday, the 1935 Quigley Silver Grand Award is voted to John Armstrong, publicist, Paramount Theatres, London. Armstrong won on "Lives of a Bengal Lancer", previously awarded the June Silver plaque. Harry Goldberg, Warner Philadelphia Theatres publicist, won the Bronze Grand Award on "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Chestnut Street Opera House. Goldberg previously was awarded the October Bronze plaque.

Industry executives representing distribution, advertising and exhibition comprised the Grand Awards Committee. Complete story, judges' names, photos of the ceremonies and all winners of the 1935 Quigley Silver and Bronze monthly plaques will be found in the news section of this issue.

Armstrong and Goldberg, as guests of Motion Picture Herald, are eligible for the round trips by air via TWA to Hollywood where the Grand Awards are to be presented. Further details will follow.

Kaiser's Live Baby Ad Brings Mothers A-Runnin'

It must have had the town talking that slant of adman F. J. Kaiser, for "Country Doctor" at the Winona, in Winona, Minn., what with an ad in the Female Help Wanted column asking for five live babies to be used in a window display to advertise the Quins, copy carrying theatre and dates. Ad ran once and next day paper came out with banner across classified page calling attention to the unusual ad and results obtained from one insertion.

Then three days ahead, window in prominent spot was masked off with card: "See the five live babies on display in this window tomorrow." Spot was then dressed with three-sheet cutouts, stills, etc., and in the center the "live babies"—five baby chicks.

The gag of course got a lot of laughs but funnier yet is that Kaiser says an amazing number of people called and offered their infants for the display.

Which proves, you never can tell.

Well, How Well Do You Know 'Em

Up in South Norwalk, Ct., Al Hamilton, for "Country Doctor" at the Empress figured that no matter how often folks saw the names of the Quins in type they naturally would have a time deciding who was who without the handles. So Al planted a five-colmun five in his local sheet in which he spotted face cuts secured from the NEA of the infants.

Under each was a box in which folks were invited to place the correct names of each with comps. for the correct answers. Space was provided for guessers' names and addresses, answers to be brought or mailed to theatre.

The Show Goes On; Snow or No Snow

To show what he's had to contend with these past few months, W. L. Nicholas, Fairmont Theatre Company, Fairmont, Minn., forwards the accompanying photo of the drift on the trunk highway south of Fairmont. That black speck in the distance is an oncoming train, doubtless bringing Nicholas his current attraction. Drifts reach above top of trains in spots and that's plenty of snow in any man's country.

Few days ahead contest was planted in paper with cuts of six leading players, passes going to those who could correctly name the character that star portrayed in the picture and the name of the star. Another contest was staged and children asked to cover government postcards with Colman's name. Women's Club Plug Helps Sell "Pasteur"

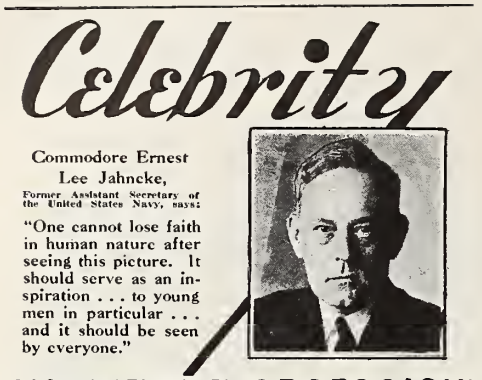
WHAT'S WHAT HERE AND THERE

BELLOWS AND MOOS. Mechanical cow bally on "Milky Way" at Warners' Empress, Owensboro, Ky., was rounded up by manager Charley Mensing to delight the youngsters. Betsy moves head and tail, bellows and moos—does everything but give milk—according to Warnerite Milton Gurian.

LOBBY DISPLAY. Sells five coming attractions, does this lobby setpiece at the Earle, Washington, D. C., the four one-sheets being transparent to heighten general effect. Responsible for the artistic creation are admen Frank La Falce and Bill Ewing, Warner Washington Zone publicists.

MILKMAN MATINEE. Bill Exton, at the Kenosha, Kenosha, Wis., invited, via letter supposedly signed by Harold Lloyd, local milk-wagon drivers to view "Milky Way", letters mailed from studios by air mail. Ushers were garbed as milkmen wearing regulation hats furnished by cooperating dairy.



DIAMOND TRAIN. For advance buildup on "Rhodes", Gaumont British's A. P. Waxman is sending out motorized outfit called the Rhodes Diamond Train to various spots where the picture is dated. Public is invited inside to view display of replicas of famous diamonds.

ORIGINAL CHAPLIN COSTUME. For window display purposes in New Haven, Conn., manager H. H. Maloney, Loew's Poli, and publicist Erle Wright promoted original Chaplin costume and form for date on "Modern Times". Local police were drafted to act as guards (or maybe they're atmosphere).

NEW ZEALAND WINDOW. Smart overseas exploitation is indicated by this effective and sizable window display in Auckland, New Zealand, in connection with the local "Curly Top" season. Tieup was arranged by Mr. Paddy Malone who sold merchants on liberal use of Temple cutouts and stills.

One of the Blair Endorsement Type Ads

Blair Uses Endorsements For "Obsession" Long-Run

Striking indeed are the endorsement ads created especially by Bob Blair, ad head, Saenger Theatres, to keep up interest in the extended run of "Magnificent Obsession" at the Globe and Tudor, New Orleans.

The ads reproduced above and below, both 65 lines on two, are two of the many and vari-sized displays, all however carrying out the same idea. The script lettering across top and photo immediately below are natural eye-stoppers and as Blair is careful enough to pick folks in various classifications the plugs do a nice job of selling to all classes of patrons.

It's a Pipe, Says Palooka

For the new series of Joe Palooka shorts, the Vitaphone folks have put out a neat four page press sheet with sufficient material to run a sizable campaign in most any spot. Tieups include sweater, baseball and boxing gloves and a square cut pipe one of which at this writing dangles from your Chairman's jowls.

Another of the Blair Endorsement Type Ads

Forester's Trick Ad Has City Guessing

That was a whale of a trick newspaper ad that Eddie Forrester put together on "King of Burlesque," at the Capitol, Grand Island, Neb., the display running on two pages with readers invited to put the two segments together without cutting or taking the paper apart. It had the folks guessing and we'll try to explain how he did it:

The original ad was a two-column on ten inches from the press book and Forester had it cut diagonally so that the top part with theatre slug and dates set crosswise of page four and fitted into four columns across and four inches down leaving a two-column triangle of white space.

The lower half of the ad was set upright on page five in two columns with theatre slug below and flush to bottom of page. Diagonal cut left another two column white triangle, and Eddie called attention to the trickery in two type boxes set in the triangles saying that the solution could be found on the classified page.

The curious were instructed there to open paper at page three, take lower right hand corner and fold diaper fashion to center so that bottom edge was even with center crease—and lo, there was the ad put together as it was before Forester gave it the scissors.

Rotsky Sells "Marie" From Many Angles

Co-op blotters with cut of MacDonald saying "I'll be seeing you soon" and carrying theatre credits were promoted by George Rotsky for "Rose Marie" at the Palace, Montreal, from tobacconists promoting new brand of cigarettes. Smoke manufacturers took care of all costs. Merchants tied stars to newspaper advertising, among them being automobile and radio dealers, milliners and beauty shops, men's stores. Tieup with RCA Victor made possible windows in 12 of the best spots in town to plug records of the song hits with some of the dealers also taking space for further buildup.

Local perfume distributor came in by offering via radio, sample bottles to first 100 women at the theatre each evening at seven, this being put on for six consecutive days, and very effective too, says George.

Newspapers as was to be expected were cordial, especially the French press which ran feature articles and photos well in advance of the date.

For "Strike Me Pink," Les constructed an attractive animated display for his lobby with Cantor's eyes constantly rolling. Coloring contest was run in papers, full page co-op ad promoted and stories were planted in dailies with art layouts.

December and overseas, the Paramount London Theatres, in June. Subsequent-run theatres won in June, July, August and September.

Besides the United States, plaques were voted theatremen in Canada and England and communities as small as Henderson, Ky., shared honors with cities as large as London.

Representation from almost every type of operation was included in the First and Honorable Mentions Sheepskins Certificates voted to the most meritorious campaigns submitted other than those winning the monthly Silver and Bronze plaques. Over 200 Mentions were awarded in 1935.

The Quigley Awards are now in their third year of successful operation and were inaugurated by Motion Picture Herald through Managers' Round Table Club for the express purpose of bringing to the attention of the industry the excellent showmanship displayed by the theatre manager and theatre publicist on individual pictures.

In 1934, the first year of the Competitions, one silver plaque was awarded monthly for the campaign put on during that month which in the opinion of the Judges possessed the most merit of all those submitted to Managers' Round Table Club.

Due to the growing interest and keen competition shown by theatremen all over the world, in 1935, the plaques were increased to two monthly silver and bronze with Sheepskin Certificates entries voted the First and Honorable Mentions.

Three different judges representing various branches of the industry served on the Monthly Committees and many of those who acted during 1934 and 1935 participated in Tuesday's finals.

As in the first year of the Awards, in 1935 presentations of the plaques to the monthly winners were made by governors of the states represented and other notables.

State heads who participated were Harold Hoffman of New Jersey, Harry C. Nice of Maryland, Phil M. LaFolette of Wisconsin and Ruby Laffoon of Kentucky.

City heads included Mayors Roy C. Start of Toledo, Jasper McLevy of Bridgeport, McNair of Pittsburgh, Key of Atlanta and G. G. McGeer (K. C.) of Vancouver, B. C. and Charles Stanton of Rochester.

Now It's Darts, Says Simons

Cashing in on the popular game of darts, Jack Simons, Poli Theatre, Hartford, Conn., on "Strike Me Pink" constructed a large board on which was bull's-eye, painted pink, face of board lettered with tie-in copy. Board was taken around to schools during recess periods, kids supplied with featured darts and invited to try their luck for tickets.

Additional Slants On "Strike Me Pink"

Life size cutouts were planted in prominent downtown windows by Ward Farrar, Loew's Theatre, Indianapolis, accompanying photo showing optician's window with animated display, eyes movable and revolving. Ace drug store devoted window to pipe display, using blowup of Cantor.

Theatre was gaily decorated with pink pennants flying from upright sign and valance around marquee. Co-op ads were secured from merchants with "Strike Me Pink" catchline and pink heralds used.

Up in Boston

Publicity director Joe Di Pesa at Loew's State and Orpheum arranged for a special luncheon at leading hotel for the press breaking advance stories on the party. Dialogue contest was planted in paper five days ahead, contestants to fill in their ideas on conversation between Cantor and Parkyakarkas as suggested by cuts. Another contest was planted five days ahead, showing stills of Cantor with leading ladies from old pictures, contestants to give title of film and gal's name.

Stan Gosnell, manager of the State and Vic Morris at the Orpheum cooperated.

And in Columbus, Ohio

Where Russ Bovim at the Ohio tied up with Underwood Typewriter, which purchased and distributed to school children Underwood-Cantor booklets, backs of which were imprinted with copy. Grocer put on a "pink" sale, mailing heralds to customers and including them in packages leaving store. Various merchants came through with neat window displays and Sunday night Pebeco broadcast plugged picture.

Farrar's "Pink" Optician Window

Above, left, is pictured Joe Salmon's sock inner lobby animated display at the New York Riverside on "Shark Island," material used being muslin and beaverboard, figure cutouts from a six, three and one. Sharks were animated appearing to jump out of the water, this worked with small motor. Pillars were illuminated. Salmon credits house electrician M. Baron for construction.

Above, right, is a shot that landed three-column cut and story in the Fitchburg, Mass., papers for Eddie Haley, at the Fitchburg, on "Country Doctor." Local couple also named Dionne with five children were guests at the show and Eddie planted the youngsters in the lobby to play with the cutouts of the famed quins. Nice going, what?

Further South in Washington

Ray Bell, Loew's Palace, distributed cough drops in imprinted envelopes, copy reading, "you'll laugh yourself hoarse at." Radio station gave preview of film, and 15-minute contest was broadcast wherein records from former Merman and Cantor pictures were played, tickets going to first 10 forwarding correct title list with brief reason why they liked Eddie Cantor.

Jimmie Wallington featured on Cantor broadcasts, arrived in town day after opening and was nabbed for interviews and material for radio section of papers.

Winding Up at Houston, Texas

Where Francis Deering at Loew's State reports placing three attractive girls in a downtown window, upper part of which was water-colored pink. Below the paint gals could be seen walking. Pink undies, etc., were displayed in window with sign reading, "you'll see more of Strike Me Pink with Eddie Cantor at Loew's Friday."

Postal Programs Aid Luedtke at Orpheum

Herewith is shown E. Luedtke's postal program gotten out at the Orpheum Theatre, Kenosha, Wis. forms being printed and cards filled out by cashiers, who type coming program in spaces provided as illustrated. Large number of forms being printed at one time brings cost to almost nothing.

A trailer is placed on the screen with the following copy: "Welcome out of town patrons, we will gladly mail our weekly programs if you will kindly leave your name and address with the doorman or cashier as you leave the theatre".

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

is the assistant manager of the Lido in the Bronx and that's close enough to club headquarters to be able to drop in on your next day off to see us. We wish that more of our members could come in and get personally acquainted. With all our friends up your way, Otto, you're going to have a step on it to keep up the pace, so get going.

manages the Wilson and El Patio Theatres in Tyrone, Pa., and says he had a love for the theatre as far back as he can remember. At the age of 12 he swore he was older in order to get his apprentice card for the booth. Harry worked after school hours for seven years as assistant operator at the Harris in Tarentum. After that he joined William L. Brown at the Palace as assistant until 1935, at which time he left to accept his present assignment.

is the assistant at the Surf Theatre, Brooklyn, N. J., starting in 1932 as usher at the Commodore, then to the Waldorf in Brooklyn where he stayed for a while and left to sell tires, then back to theatre business at the Ambassador, a little flier out of this game to work for a novelty house and back again, the old lure, to his present job.

O. G. FINLEY
managing the Park Theatre in Tampa, Fla., joins the club and sends along the application of L. O. ROBERTSON, his assistant. Between the two of them, we'll be sorely disappointed if we haven't weekly contributions of doings at the Park. You probably know some of our very good friends in Tampa theatres, so how about a little lively competition from you fellows? Robertson says he writes a little movie column called "Reeling Around" for newspapers, so maybe we'll be put on the mailing list.

is out in Berkeley, Cal., managing the Lorin Theatre. We are always interested in receiving accounts of the activities of our West Coast brother members, so remember that just signing on the dotted line doesn't discharge your obligation to the Club, we expect to hear from you at frequent intervals.

acts as the assistant manager of the Grand Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., starting in about six years ago at the Feeley Theatre in that town as usher. He was then transferred to the Capitol and later to the Grand to assist in the office evenings, at which job he continued until he was promoted to assistant.

J. LLOYD MILLER
is managing the Neptune Theatre, Seattle, Wash., starting at Mercy's Capitol, Yakima, worked at various houses there ushering and then went to Seattle at the RKO Orpheum. Thence to the Coliseum, the Fifth Avenue and the Neptune upon its reopening after complete renovation in 1935.

RACHEL BASSIN, to Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Bassin, weight seven pounds. Daddy manages the Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, Mass.

DONALD REED ZIMBALIST, another seven pounder, to Mr. and Mrs. Al Zimbalist. Al manages the Ritz Theatre in Lyndhurst, L. I.

J. J. BROWN is down in Leonard, Texas, managing the Texas Theatre there and since he's the first member to join the club from that city, we're going to put the responsibility on his shoulders to keep us posted on what's doing down there so far as the theatres are concerned. Are you with us, Brown, and can we depend on you?

is in Fredonia, Kansas, managing the Whiteway and Peoples Theatres, and he wonders how he ever survived 15 years work in a bank, when showbusiness is so much more fascinating and enjoyable. Garvin has done theatre work but a short time, starting at the Peoples in 1934 and in addition to that undertook the management of the Whiteway in 1935.

acts as city manager of the Paramount, Luna and Majestic Theatres, Kankakee, Ill. George started as usher at the Chicago, B. & K. house, then treasurer of the Belmont, assistant at the Roosevelt and Southtown. Later managed the Lama Temple at the Century of Progress and then joined Great States as manager of the Luna. Rice opened the Rialto in Waukegan and then back to Kankakee as city manager.

is in Gloucester, Mass., managing the North Shore Theatre starting in as usher at the Olympic Lynn, then doorman, chief of service, assistant, house manager and finally manager all at the Olympia and Paramount in Lynn. Apparently Art knows that territory pretty well, so suppose you tell the rest of the boys how you put your shows on up there.

manages the Main Theatre in Hamilton, Canada, and we're hopeful that he'll be jealous when he sees all the Canadian campaigns appearing in our pages and will dig down in his bag of tricks and send some in himself. Don't let us down, Lloyd.

in Philadelphia manages Warners' State Theatre, having started in showbusiness as director of the Stanley Victoria Theatre there, then went to the Savoy as assistant and on to various houses in that capacity until he was promoted to manager and sent back to the Savoy. From there he went to the Empress in Manayunk for seven years. For a while he stayed at various houses and then went into theatrical printing business about two years, but the lure of the theatre was too great and he returned to his first love.

manages the Lyric Theatre in Hamilton, Ohio, and we're waiting to hear from him, for he tells us his house is a three-hundred seater and has last run in a town of four theatres. However, he says he'll shoot in a couple of ideas to us, so we'll be waiting.

The large panel in orange with light blue lettering, shaded with dark blue.

HOME OFFICE ASKS FIELD FOR ADVICE!

Yes, Gentlemen, we're asking you!

Because "Under Two Flags" is so rich in advertising angles, it has us dizzy!

For instance, how would you bill its four great stars? . . . Ronald Colman ("Beau Geste"), Claudette Colbert ("It Happened One Night"), Victor McLaglen ("The Informer"), Rosalind Russell ("Rendezvous")? We want to shout about each one, but type isn't made of rubber.

Would you place them over or under the title, "Under Two Flags"? . . . a title made famous by Ouida's novel and play.

How about the burning love story?

How about the spectacle? . . . the cast of 10,000 . . . the limitless sweep of the Sahara . . . the hordes of blood-mad Arabs and heat-crazed Legionnaires?

And the men whose showmanship sense has come to guarantee entertainment? . . . Darryl F. Zanuck . . . Director Frank Lloyd?

Any one of the above is a great sales slant. But you tell us how to do them all justice in one ad!

INDIGNATION TO ORDER

HOW nice it would be if the movies could be permitted to make their own troubles and have no other. A sample of how the public's state of mind is continuously and artificially made up about our art and industry is revealed by the editor's prowlings into the female page of The World Telegram of New York in which Mrs. Dorothy Dunbar Bromley relates how the National Council for Prevention of War, in Washington, where "there's a young man, Mr. Albert Benham, who keeps his eyes on the movies and gets out bimonthly reports," is conducting propaganda among "church and college groups, parents and teachers' associations and women's clubs who drop a word to the producers when the latter seem to be going berserk in a military way . . . "

Any competent observer will know that the motion picture screen has no position on the subject of war, that the industry wants an undisturbed world market—also that armies, airplanes and battleships are photographic subjects.

But that has nothing to do with the fact that a young man is being paid to tell some possibly intelligent people when they should get excited. That's why "councils" are born.

PRODUCERS OF TOMORROW

IMPORTANT portent for the screen is presented in the project of Syracuse University, through its dramatic activities department, to engage in the experimental production of a standard length full-blown motion picture drama, aiming the while at professional standards.

A promising start has been made in the selection of really professional material in "Big Lake," Lynn Rigg's study of youth in Oklahoma, with a script by the author, the same whose "Russet Mantle" has come to Broadway's stage.

This project goes several steps beyond the various academic and amateur endeavours of the sixteen millimeter sector. Its contribution to the developments of the art and wider dissemination of picture technology will not be importantly dependent on the merits of the production, but rather upon the effort.

The amusement industry of the screen is to be benefited by such endeavours, in several directions, especially and immediately in anything which will tend to free the industry from sole responsibility for the screen as an instrument of expression. The commercial amusement industry will be in happier position when motion pictures stand on their own individual merits or demerits as units of expression, when the whole of the screen is no longer subjected to indictments and strictures because of factional displeasures with specific pictures. So long as the camera is in the popular mind the exclusive property of the amusement screen everything the camera does will be checked against it.

Also this Syracuse experiment suggests a process by which the motion picture can create and acquire a background of semi-professional activity, a training field and such resources as exist for the other arts. There has been and continues, from high places and under good names, much ridiculous contention that the motion picture will have to keep the stage alive as a source of material and personnel. That is of direct kinship to the logic of that classic formula for roast pork which included burning down the house.

The motion picture is the successor of the stage and in no sense a derivative from it. The omnivorous appetite of the production machine seems to have permanently confused the concepts of the commenting observers, so many of them diehard contenders for the preservation of passing media.

The motion picture is inevitably destined to as thoroughly independent position as a medium of expression as any of the older tradition endowed arts. The more rapidly the "know how" of picture making is spread among those who want to say things on the screen the earlier that complete independence will be achieved.

MR. DEPINET vs. SEX

NOT in years have we been so filled with alarm as with the news that the able Mr. Ned Depinet gave out in New Orleans—of all places—the other day when he said: "Sex has definitely lost its place in the movies. The public doesn't give a hang about sex any more if we feed it good, clean wholesome pictures with a plot. . . . My corporation is now making 'Mary, Queen of Scots!' with Katharine Hepburn as 'Mary.' . . . We haven't found an Elizabeth, yet. . . ."

If Mary Queen of Scots didn't have sex, and lots of it, we have been grossly deceived. And doesn't Mr. Depinet know about Elizabeth, the virgin queen? Virgins just have to have sex. They can not do or be without it. No sex, no virgin.

If in truth the public "doesn't give a hang about sex any more," the country is a lot worse off than we suspected.

To be sure, maybe Mr. Depinet was really talking about smut rather than sex, but to admit that would spoil our whimsy.

IF you think it's a "trend" it will be interesting to know that in fifty-one metropolitan newspapers the advertisers of 1935 used about 1,300,000 lines more of advertising in color than in the year before, an increase of 29.5 per cent. Present indications in the advertising world indicate a continuing increase in kindred ratio. In time a plain black and white advertisement will be sensational.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

Tobis Pact

Amendments to the Paris patent agreement approved in 1930 have been agreed to by German and American companies providing for payment of royalties to Tobis in local currencies, reduction in royalty charges and elimination of multiple dubbing fees. Subject to ratification by the German Government because of the currency phases involved, the revisions are expected to go into effect in 60 days. For particulars, see page 18.

Deluge

Floods took toll of the motion picture industry in exhibition, distribution and equipment branches estimated at $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 as slowly receding waters relinquished possession of towns and cities along the Atlantic seaboard. Insurance companies said flood insurance had been dropped by a great majority of property owners during depression years and only a minor fraction of the loss would be covered. For details of the disaster see page 13.

Salaries

Another report on high-bracket salaries in motion pictures has been submitted by the Internal Revenue Bureau to the House Ways and Means Committee at Washington, and disclosing that two of the large companies—Fox and Columbia—and 14 smaller companies paid 213 persons anywhere from $15,000 to $325,000 each in salary in 1934-35. Twenty-two persons received more than $100,000. Sidney Kent got $166,000, Janet Gaynor, $252,000; Winfield Sheehan, $300,000; Will Rogers, $324,000. The complete salary list appears on page 63.

Refinancing

Warner Brothers may retire a $31,924,000 issue of 6 per cent debentures due in 1939 and callable at 102. The action, described Tuesday in Hearst's New York Evening Journal, probably would take the form of a refunding program aggregating as much as $50,000,000, it was said. In addition to retiring the debentures, it was believed, the program would be scaled to take care of approximately $20,000,000 of the $50,000,000 mortgage indebtedness the company is estimated to have. Preliminary discussions reported held with investment bankers concern a new issue of 4½ per cent convertible debentures. Conversion price into common might be from $20 to $25 a share.

Stuart McDonald, assistant treasurer of Warners, said on Tuesday that action in the matter "is a long way off." He called the recent discussions with investment bankers "inconclusive." Definite action is expected to await the return of H. M. Warner from Europe about May 1.

U Transfer April 2

The date of the formal transfer of Universal Pictures from the hands of Carl Laemmle, who controlled it for so many years, to the Standard Capital Corporation interests, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, has been definitely set for Thursday, April 2d. Mr. Laemmle will come to New York for the transfer, at which time he will receive the remaining $4,000,000 balance due him under the terms of the deal.

Complete details of the transfer, and the arrangements whereby General Film Distributors of London, headed by C. M. Woolf and Herbert Wilcox, participates in Standard's acquisition of Universal, are to be found on page 66.

Exonerated

Charges of impeachment against Benjamin S. Greenstein, vice-president, and Jack Millet, business agent, of Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union, Inc., in New York, were found groundless at a hearing before the general membership Tuesday night, according to a statement issued by the union.

Both were exonerated and resumed their respective offices, from which they were suspended about three weeks ago pending an investigation of the charges and hearing.

The union said that "trumped-up charges had been brought at the instigation of disgruntled, reactionary politicians" within the organization "who, for their own mercenary motives, are vainly seeking to wrest control of Empire from the progressive elements who now hold sway."

Union officials refused to divulge the nature of the charges, but it is understood that a "rump" election was held, resulting in an announcement last week that the president and business agent had been superseded.

It was announced also that Empire State is negotiating with the Springer and Cocalis circuit of about 30 theatres for an extension of contract. Empire has figured in a triangular fight in New York with Local 306 and Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union.

School Producer

Syracuse University, in its 66th year of educating, is seeking a modern motion picture Utopia. Demanding a "free screen," the college will produce motion pictures on its own, and then will set about to revolutionize the industry's practices, aiming at duals, chance games, roadshows, block booking and such. Professor Sawyer Falk, dramatic dean of dramatics, is the motivator of the plan, which is discussed, in his words, on page 55.

In the Courts

The legality of chance games as a box office stimulant still stands in question in the courts of the land, with developments this week occurring in Connecticut, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nebraska and New York. Chance game insurance for patrons springs up again in Florida as the state of Texas declares it illegal along with Iowa. These, and other developments of the practice of giveaways in theatres, are all discussed in detail in the story found on page 60.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Deal Dropped

In a statement over his signature Winfield Sheehan, who was to leave New York for the Coast on Thursday, said, "I have discontinued negotiations with Paramount. No contract has been signed."

This pertains to his projected arrangement to produce 10 pictures for Paramount next season.

Negotiations were begun in Hollywood several weeks ago by John E. Otterson, president of Paramount. Under the arrangement contemplated Mr. Sheehan was to have produced four pictures a year personally and to supervise six others. All were to be produced at the General Service Studios. Mr. Sheehan came to New York early in March to work out details.

Mr. Otterson and Adolph Zukor were to leave New York for Hollywood on Friday to spend two weeks in conference with William LeBaron on product. The possibility tht negotiations with Mr. Sheehan might be resumed during their stay on the Coast was suggested within Paramount.

Accessories

National Screen Accessories, Inc., has been formed by National Screen Service and Charles L. Casanave, vice-president and general manager of American Display Company, to handle distribution and sales of accessories. Distribution facilities of National Screen Service and manufacturing facilities of American Display will be linked in a manner bringing the trailer company prominently into the accessories field.

Mr. Casanave will retain his present position with American Display Company and will be vice-president and general manager of the new organization likewise. It is planned to open several new branches in the near future, but locations of these have not yet been decided upon.

Passed

The Ohio state censor board has passed the revised version of "The Amateur Fire Brigade," anti-New Deal animated cartoon, obviating an expressed threat of the Sentinels of the Republic, its sponsors, to ask the Ohio supreme court for a mandamus writ to force action.

The original version of the cartoon, which satirizes the administration, had been rejected by the board because of a policy not to pass anything which ridiculed or belittled the Government or any of its branches. Where objection is raised, a new version eliminating a caricature of President Roosevelt is circulated.

A scheduled showing of the film in Pittsburgh last week was postponed because of the flood. Elsewhere the show featuring the cartoon is touring by motor caravan.

The Senate lobby investigating committee at Washington is conducting an extensive examination of the financial sources of the Sentinels of the Republic, along with 20 or 25 other anti-New Deal organizations, which indicated, investigators said, that their support came from identical contributors.

Expanding

Plans for expansion and solidification of the Warner Brothers Theatre Circuit in Chicago are developing rapidly. Having recently pooled its holdings with Balaban and Katz at Hammond, Ind., Warner has just completed negotiations on a joint operating deal with the same company in Chicago.

The latest deal combines, under James Coston's supervision, the circuit's Regal with Balaban and Katz's Metropolitan. Both are in the negro district.

In addition, Warner will start building, within the next few weeks, a new 1,500-seat theatre in an outlying district of Chicago.

Censoring

A report received by the Department of Commerce in Washington from Commercial Attache Julian Greenup in Lima states that the Peruvian National Censorship Board has been given additional authority over the newsreels of domestic events and over pictures which the board believes should be declared as unsuitable for exhibition before women and children.

GTE Plan

The plan of reorganization of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has been declared operative, subject to the approval of the chancery court of Delaware, by the reorganization committee, of which Arthur W. Loasby is chairman.

The total debentures and claims deposited with the committee is said to approximate 88 per cent of the total claims allowed. Although this is slightly less than the total required under a provision of the plan as a condition for participation in it by the Chase National Bank, Chase has waived this condition. The bank's agreement to participate includes arrangements to lend the new compny $2,000,000 to effect the reorganization and to turn over to GTE all collateral held by the bank for company indebtedness, and to grant options on a maximum of 158,313 shares of preferred and 79,157 shares of common of Twentieth Century-Fox stock. Such options are to be distributed directly to debenture holders and ather creditors depositing under the plan.

The holders of debentures and holders of allowed claims who do not deposit under the plan will be entitled to receive in the receivership proceedings only their distributive share of the proceeds realized from the sale of the company's assets, which do not include the collateral or the options.

Royalty Revision

The Dramatists' Guild is willing to revise terms of its agreement covering play sales to motion pictures to the extent of giving the Broadway producing managers 40 per cent of the royalties, Arthur Hopkins informed members of the League of New York Theatres Wednesday afternoon.

The League was to inform the Guild that it had adopted a contract of its own but is holding it in abeyance until the Guild indicates whether it is willing to arbitrate or compromise the differences. The managers' own contract is understood to be substantially the same as the one previously in effect, basing film rights participation on 50 per cent each to managers and playwrights and making other changes in the agreement recently adopted by the Dramatists' Guild.

Withdrawing

No opposition was presented this week before the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington to the Application of the Balaban and Katz Corporation for the withdrawal from listing on the Chicago Stock Exchange of 26,126 shares of its seven per cent cumulative preferred stock.

The only witness to appear was Walter M. Reiser, counsel for the company, who, after Andrew Jackson, commission counsel, had indicated there would be no objection to the granting of the application, asked that a decision be rendered promptly so that the company might be saved the expense of preparing statements which must be filed at the end of this month under the Securities Act.

Mr. Jackson said the company intended to redeem half of the stock on May 1 at $110 a share, plus accrued interest, and that the remainder would be redeemed May 1, 1939.

FILM INDUSTRY DIGS OUT FROM HEAVY FLOOD LOSS

Property Inspection Progresses Slowly; Equipment Replacement Major Item; Lost Time Variable Factor in Estimates

Floods sweeping twelve states, bringing death to 169 persons, rendering 221,500 homeless and causing damage estimated at $271,500,000, took toll of the motion picture industry in its most densely populated box office territory, the Atlantic seaboard. Early estimates of total direct and indirect loss sustained by the trade ranged between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000.

Aspects of the disaster:

Direct damage to theatre property passed $10,000,000 in early reports and threatened to grow to perhaps twice that figure as recession of waters permitted inspection of mechanical equipment, foundations, heating, ventilating and other apparatus.

Insurance executives in Hartford, Conn., insurance heart of the nation and one of the most seriously affected areas, said flood insurance had dropped to its lowest level during the depression years and a very small fraction of the losses sustained are covered by policies.

Dealers in theatre equipment have augmented stocks in order to cope with demands for replacement outfittings from theatres throughout the stricken area.

Box office losses, incurred both through enforced cessation of operation and through interruption of service in the cases of many theatres cut off from transportation facilities and forced to hold over programs on hand, are computed in terms of hundred thousands. Many houses not affected by flood or service irregularities but located within threatened communities reported receipts diminished by public apprehension.

Film delivery services resorted to boat and plane to supply films to exhibitors in isolated areas. Delay in return of prints to exchanges, due to disturbance or complete stoppage of express or other standard means of service, added to program complications in many districts.

Newsreel companies, executing plans made well in advance of the first serious inundations, brought news and views of the devastation to the country's screens in record time.

None of the 169 officially reported dead were members of the industry.

Circuit heads, distributors and supply dealers were inadequately prepared to compute with dependable accuracy the ultimate financial loss brought by the deluge.

Reports from theatre managers in several of the affected cities and towns still are necessarily incomplete.

Exchange managers have not yet been able to check completely their tangled bookings, deferred play dates, missing prints and other essential data, while the status of contracts suspended by operation of the Act-of-God clause is a matter to be worked out by a process of agreement and compromise.

Supply dealers, although reporting a rush of replacement orders, have as yet no reliable means of approximating the extent to which rehabilitation costs will run.

Uncertainty as to how long many of the more seriously damaged theatres will have to remain closed pending restoration to operable condition is another factor complicating financial forecast.

For these reasons estimates volunteered, ranging from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000, were sharply conditioned by their sponsors and revision upward or downward may be expected as more completely detailed reports are received and when thorough investigation and recapitulation has become practicable.

Exhibitors Aid the Stricken

Exhibitors, individually and in organization units, put their business interests aside to aid in every practical way the relief and rescue work which started as quickly as the extent of distress became known. Lewen Pizor, president of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, promptly addressed to members a letter reading in part: "This organization urges every exhibitor to immediately contact the nearest Red Cross chapter to arrange for fullest cooperation on flood relief either by trailers, benefit shows or other efficient and effective cooperation."

In similar vein, the 16 mm. division of J. H. Hoffberg company offered to furnish, gratis, a complete show, made up of feature and shorts, together with projector and operator, to any organization desiring to use them as a means of raising funds for relief purposes.

Many exhibitors whose theatres fringed the stricken and evacuated communities opened them to the homeless until suitable housing arrangements could be completed.

Frequently driving more than a hundred miles out of their way over all but impassable roads to reach theatres in the northwestern Pennsylvania and Washington areas, the Horlacher Delivery service, with headquarters in Philadelphia, maintained contact with points customarily served by rail, in addition to the regular truck stops. In some instances, despite this enterprise, schedules were held up as long as 40 hours.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., established an emergency parts depot in the western Pennsylvania area with a crew of engineers ready to commence installation of equipment at the moment when the waters should subside.

Pittsburgh Losses Heavy

Property damage reached a peak in Pittsburgh, where incomplete check-up places the loss at $2,000,000 in theatre damage alone. The Penn theatre was one of the most seriously affected, rehabilitation requiring at least six weeks to complete and costing $500,000. The Fulton, ordinarily closed in the summer, will not be able to effect necessary repairs in time to reopen before fall. Cost of these is computed at $100,000, while rehabilitation of the Alvin will cost $150,000 and that of the Stanley $200,000.

All of Pittsburgh's 82 theatres were forced to close for more than a week when light and power plants were put out of commission. Similar circumstances created a like situation in Johnstown, Wheeling, Etna, Sharpsburg, Coraopolis, McKees Rock, Aspinwall and Vandergrift. Derangement of play date schedules, amounting to practical loss of a calendar week, represents in this area a loss item difficult to calculate. Protection and zoning provisions are thrown hopelessly out of schedule.

Hartford Situation Obscure

Damage in the Hartford, Conn., area is even more difficult to determine, as the flood recession has been slower and complete inspection of property is delayed. Additionally, transportation facilities were even more seriously crippled here and a definite scarcity of available product prevailed for the first time in many decades. Too, the power and light supply was cut off with the rising of the water, and although several attempted to operate with emergency equipment, only the Lenox was successful.

The State in Hartford was inundated and the Poli basement was flooded. In Waterbury only the Lido was flooded, the State, inundated last year, escaping. In Norvich the Palace was chief victim of the muddy tide.

Theatres in Manchester, N. H., were ordered to remain closed for the purpose of conserving electric power.

Power Failure in Springfield

Six theatres in Springfield, Mass., were attacked by the flood and the remaining ones were forced to close when the power supply failed. Westfield and Northampton houses resumed operation with restoration of their electric supply, and the Plaza in Northampton was to be opened after approximately a week required to clean and renovate the premises. The Colonial in Haverhill, in which the water reached the balcony level, will require a longer period for cleansing and refurbishing.

As waters rose from 5 to 15 feet in Pittsburgh streets the lights here shown still in operation at Loew's United Artists Penn were extinguished, the house flooded.

Richmond Digging Out

Theatre damage of permanent character was less prevalent in the West Virginia section, but all principal houses in Wheeling were closed and many partially flooded by the 55-foot deluge. Richmond, Va., found its theatre reclamation problem largely one of digging and cleaning, to which task numbers of the unemployed were summoned. It was in this area that fear of infectious contagion worked its greatest and longest enduring hardship upon box offices, meningitis, influenza and measles having broken out.

Keith's theatre in Lowell, Mass., was the only RKO house to be put out of commission by the floods which swept the East, crippling in substantial degree almost all circuit operation. None of the seven RKO houses in Cincinnati were affected.

In Danbury, Conn., Jack Harvey, manager of the Palace theatre, put on a special Sunday matinee, with all receipts going to the Red Cross, and in Shelton Morris Handleman, manager of the Shelton, was appointed treasurer to handle all funds collected in the relief drive.

Rhode Island theatres escaped without actual property damage, although attendance was adversely affected by public apprehension and in some cases program schedules were affected slightly by disturbance of shipping routine.

City officials of Holyoke, Mass., gave exhibitors every assistance in getting theatres into early operation in the belief that entertainment would help to sustain the morale of the population. Prints were sent into the city by way of Westfield by air.

When Lewiston, Me., was completely shut off from communication, films were taken to Auburn and hence into the city by rowboat. Exhibitors from upstream rowed to Lewiston to pick up their prints at that point.

Loew's rushed pumps from New York to Springfield, Mass., when water there showed signs of receding, and crews went to work to expedite nature in its retreat and to remove the stains of its invasion. Other crews worked night and day removing seats and furnishings from theatres in Middletown, Windsor, Collinsville and Thompsonville, barely completing their preparations when the theatres were flooded.

Steubenville, Martin's Ferry and Bridgeport, in Ohio, were out of reach of train or truck for several days as a heavy snowfall supplemented the rising waters in making all roads impassable. Johnson, Cross and Solomon, and the Film Transit company, operating in the Ohio territory, reported water up 50 feet in places, but announced all exhibitors served by them had been contacted regularly and impartially, although in many instances behind schedule.

Confusion Is General

At Cumberland, Md., water rose to screen level and destroyed seats in the Liberty, Maryland and other theatres.

Buffalo exchanges were called upon in the emergency to supply prints to theatres in northwestern Pennsylvania, with bookers working on a day-to-day basis due to non-return of shipments.

Eighteen houses of the Maine and New Hampshire Theatres corporation were closed because of flood conditions and cut off from communication by power failure.

The Antonia in New Haven, Conn., continued to operate regularly in spite of the fact that the basement was flooded.

Floods in Control

As the swollen water subsided in the New England and Pennsylvania areas, dispatches from Portsmouth, Ohio, where the crest of the flood had just been reached, brought news in contrast with preceding experience. Here children were playing, men working, life and business proceeding as usual, with the water level well above the heads of a majority of the population but safely confined within protecting channel walls of steel and concrete. As the rise came to its peak at this point the water still stood two and a half feet below the top of the ramparts raised against it.

In Washington, D. C., where sandbags had been piled high along the banks of the Potomac, government agencies carried on in dry security their efforts to bring succor to the homeless and hungry victims of the deluge.

In New York the Roxy theatre reported on Tuesday that in the three days preceding its patrons had contributed $2,039.50 to the American Red Cross for flood relief and collection of volunteer contributions is continuing. Similar aid is being rendered by theatres in other localities.

Newsreel companies, forewarned by lesser floods preceding the main rush of water to sea level and by weather bureau forecasts, were well prepared both as to crews and equipment for coverage of the scenes of havoc, but not for the rain and fog which made flying hazardous, and for field emergencies which marooned cameramen at various times and frequently made return of exposed negative to home office a matter of heroic adventure.

Paramount News established headquarters on the outskirts of flooded areas and sent cameramen in by plane and by ground. Hugo Johnson flew into the Pittsburgh area and Jack Blum went in by road, obtaining his pictures and, on calling the home office for directions as to returning them, disclosed one of the few amusing aspects of the coverage. Taking refuge in a Harrisburg hotel after falling out of a boat and becoming drenched, he had given the hotel valet service his pants and the flood had risen to inundate tailor shop and pants while he talked with headquarters.

Orlando Lippert and J. M. McDade flew into the area from the South for Paramount News. Urban Santone flew over the area from New York. Robert Denton and Nelson Edwards covered the lower Potomac and Washington areas. Albert Mingalone and Harry Tugender worked down from Albany and Philip Coolidge and Arthur Menken went in from Hartford. Paramount News issued three special releases.

Cameramen Aid Workers

Local police interfered with camera operations in certain localities, but most of these problems were solved when the cameramen used their flares to provide much needed light in districts where illumination was by kerosene lamp and candle. Philip Coolidge, driving from Bellows Falls, Vt., to Boston, had opportunity to carry 14 persons stranded in a stalled bus to higher ground.

Fox Movietone News sent Len Hamond, just back from Ethiopia, into the Johnstown area on Tuesday night and Emile Montemurro of the Chicago staff was dispatched to the area at the same time by plane. Bad weather stopped him at Pittsburgh, where the flood had struck meanwhile, and he covered the devastation there. As complications multiplied every man on the Movietone staff was thrown into the story and Thursday saw men working at Binghamton, Troy, Wilkes-Barre, Harrisburg, Easton, Hartford and Springfield.

Jess Kizis, of the Movietone staff, is a native of Wilkes-Barre and saw his own home carried away by the flood as he photographed the scene. Larry Ellis, Al Gold, Ad Tice, Lew Walz and Fernando Delgado were other Movietone cameramen on the job, but when Coast Guard boats were shipped by train into the flood area Jack Painter, assigned to the studio, was loaded aboard the train and traveled 26 hours in wind and rain to their destination, at which point he was told that the boats were to save lives, not to take pictures, and put aground.

Pathe News sent nine cameramen into the Pittsburgh, Johnstown, West Virginia and Ohio sector. Four were commissioned to cover upper and western Pennsylvania. Five more were assigned to New England and a dozen more operated in other affected zones. Six planes were chartered in the coverage.

Cameramen's difficulties were two-fold in the emergency. Getting into the flooded area by plane was hazardous, by motor impossible, and boats were commandeered for utilitarian purposes in every scene of havoc. Getting negative back to headquarters was complicated by overloading of transportation lines of all kinds. Even communication was cut off in many sectors and in several cases amateurs' short wave sets were pressed into service.

Nevertheless, newsreel coverage of the disaster was prompt, comprehensive and graphic, and by their unquestioned added drawing power the newspictures may be credited with having brought into theatres over the country some measure of the revenues lost in the flooded sections and, by their emphasis on suffering and privation, to have stimulated response to relief appeals in behalf of flood victims.

No Profiteering

Quick to spike inevitable rumors of profiteering in equipment supplies and replacements at the expense of exhibitors whose theatres had been wholly or partially flooded, J. E. Robbin, head of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association, announced on Tuesday that any offender in that respect would encounter prompt and vigorous opposition from his organization. Mr. Robbin said he had heard of no specific instance in which supply prices had been raised to take advantage of the emergency and that rumors of such transgression of ethics had proved unfounded in so far as his investigations had revealed.

The association head pointed out that the dealer members had been doing business for years with customers who were well known to them and that the trade relationship established through long business dealings would be foolishly and disastrously affected by any thoughtless or ill considered attempt on the part of any supply house to attempt to wrest an extra immediate profit from the situation created by the unforeseen wholesale destruction of theatre property.

Mr. Robbin added that liberal credit undoubtedly would be made available to exhibitor customers and that supply dealers already had established deferred payment plans which could be used by theatre owners whether their need should be for a few items or for a complete rehabilitation of equipment and furnishings. Early reports indicated, he said, that most of the theatre damage was to floor coverings and seats, with the projection equipment, sound devices and wiring in most instances having been out of the reach of the waters.

Circuits Checking

Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres, was expected back in New York on Wednesday following a tour of the area around Pittsburgh, McKeesport and adjacent towns, after which the circuit would be able to approximate the loss sustained.

The Comerford interests, most seriously affected in the eastern Pennsylvania district with 14 houses hit, are making a careful survey of the damage and expect to be able to complete an audit some time this week.

Theatres in Hartford, forced to suspend operation until interrupted power supply was restored, announced plans for a benefit performance on March 29th with each theatre donating house and film for the special showings, which have received mayorial endorsement. The State theatre in Hartford was the most seriously damaged, 2,500 of the 4,000 seats being destroyed.

"ROMEO AND JULIET" ON

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

"ROMEO AND JULIET" is one of the most popular plays ever written. It has endured for centuries. For generations, during good times and bad, it has been a consistent money maker. "Romeo And Juliet" is a gallery show, not a classic, although its constant popularity over 300 years may have placed it in that category, as it is of course a literary classic.

Those are the reasons why Irving Thalberg, who has been mulling the idea over in his mind for a decade, decided to make "Romeo and Juliet."

Yet the production of "Romeo And Juliet" was no hurried adventure to meet a market vogue. For two years MGM's research department was at work gathering information and material necessary for a faithful presentation of the dramatic, romantic love story. A technical crew was dispatched to Verona, Italy, the locale, to get photographs and detail that might aid in construction of the massive settings. Before ever a line of screen play was written, Professors William Strunk of Cornell and John Murray Tucker of Harvard, noted Shakespearean scholars, were engaged in advisory capacities. When a scenarist was assigned it was Talbot Jennings, himself an authority on Shakespeare and recipient of multiple praise for his work on "Mutiny on the Bounty."

The story of "Romeo and Juliet" is simple. It's just as timely, topical and appealing as the latest happenings in the world. There's nothing dated about it. A boy and girl fall hopelessly in love. Their families object. Their relatives fight. The lovers cannot live without each other and they seek the peace of the tomb.

How is that story, as Shakespeare told it, going to come up on the screen? It's coming up against a background of impressive and costly production in which all the resources of MGM were made available. For spectacle, authentically capturing the atmosphere of Renaissance pageantry (the time is the 15th century), there is the brilliance of costuming; authentic reproduction of the Cathedral of San Zeno and the Piazza in Verona; the garden of the Capulets, the plague village, the sycamore grove and other intriguingly interesting locales.

For story, in which are incorporated all the elements that ever made any picture important, there is the passionate love of a boy and a girl. It is a story of love that surges warmly but beautifully. It moves always to a tone of dignity, nevertheless. For drama there is family intervention, feuding families who hate each other, each rigidly determined that the bond of love never shall be cemented.

There's gangsterism in the story. The families of Montagu and Capulet account for that. As tough as ever lived or were imagined, always aching for a battle, they don't have the automatics and submachine guns of their modern day counterparts, but with sword, dagger and dirk they provide excitement and thrill.

For the thing that showmen and patrons look for first—names—let's see what Mr. Thalberg and MGM have done about that important quantity. Norma Shearer, in her first appearance since "Smiling Through" and "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," is Juliet. Leslie Howard is Romeo. Roistering, fighting Mercutio is John Barrymore. A glimpse of some of the rushes indicates that Barrymore's work makes good a remark attributed to Shakespeare that he had to kill off Mercutio in the second act in order to keep him from stealing the show. Edna May Oliver is Juliet's nurse. Basil Rathbone is Tybalt; Reginald Denny is Benvolio. C. Aubrey Smith and Violet Kemble Cooper appear as Lord and Lady Capulet. Ralph Forbes is Paris (Romeo's rival); Henry Kolker is the Friar, Andy Devine the clown Peter, and Conway Tearle the Prince of Verona.

The musical accompaniment, which features dozens of ancient instruments, was prepared and directed by Hobart Stothart. Selection of George Cukor, director of "Little Women" and "David Copperfield," two pictures that helped turn the trend of present day production and exhibition, was made to insure interpretation of the story calculated to capture the interest of intelligentsia and masses alike.

TOBIS DROPS MULTIPLE CHARGES IN SOUND ROYALTIES AGREEMENT

Reductions in Payments Required of American Companies Are Provided in Pact Subject to German Approval

Modification of existing arrangements with Tobis, German sound equipment group, under which American film distributors have been releasing pictures in a number of European countries, was effected late last week, culminating discussions between representatives of the distributors and the foreign interests.

It was announced that "such matters as required clarification were satisfactorily disposed of." The agreement, which revises the pact effected in Paris in July, 1930, covers an involved international patent-economic situation encompassing patent right priorities, the flow of currency across international borders and the right of American film companies to continue to do business unmolested in central European countries.

The agreement, reached late Wednesday night, is only tentative, however, and subject to approval of the German currency control. The American representatives emphasized that it may be subject to further revisions and is by no means finalized.

Conferring at a series of meetings in the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America were: for the distributors, Leopold Friedman, attorney for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Loudy Lawrence, manager for MGM in continental Europe; Gus Schaefer, general manager for Paramount in Germany and central Europe, and S. S. Irby of the Twentieth Century-Fox legal department. The German groups were represented by Dr. Hans Henkel, head of Internationale Tobis of Holland, the parent company of the Tobis sound-film organization, and Milton Diamond, its New York attorney.

Multiple Charges Eliminated

While the American companies sought revisions of the 1930 agreement, Tobis also recognized that certain situations required clarification, Mr. Diamond said. A final decision on the agreement, which was in behalf of Tobis Tonbild-Syndikat as principal company, is expected within 60 days.

Countries affected by the agreement are Germany, Hungary, Austria, Rumania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, Jugoslavia, Sweden, Finland, Holland and Dutch East Indies.

While it was agreed that no details of the modification would be made public until final approval by the German authorities, it was learned that complete elimination of Tobis' multiple dubbing charges, reductions in the royalties paid by American companies and a compromise on arrangements covering currencies in which the royalties are to be paid were agreed upon.

May Change Dollar Payments

One of the principal differences related to the local currencies in which royalty payments to the German interests are to be made. Tobis heretofore has insisted on payments in dollars despite the fact that American distributors have large credits in the central European countries subject to the Tobis royalties, which cannot be withdrawn from those countries because of currency embargoes. The American companies have insisted that the payments to Tobis be drawn from those credits, rather than in dollars, with the result that Tobis has received nothing for some time.

Under the modified agreement, the distributors on Wednesday paid Tobis in American dollars for the royalties accrued to date. Tobis agreed to seek authorization from the German Government by which it may accept future royalties in the currency of the country in which they become due. If this is approved, Tobis will waive its demands for future payments in American dollars and the royalties will be paid by the American distributors from the funds which they may have on hand in the respective countries involved.

The agreement also provides for payment to Tobis of only one dubbing charge, regardless of the number of versions made, this superseding the arrangement whereby Tobis has collected for individual dubbed versions.

Downward revision of all charges was agreed to by Tobis, it is understood, this ranging to a maximum of 10 per cent except in special categories, and it was said this varies with individual companies. The distributors asked reductions of at least 25 per cent.

Amendments to Agreement

The adjustments are established as amendments to the agreement which has been in effect since 1930, which was for 10 years but has been extended to 1945. The basic provisions of the Paris pact governing relations between the two continents were not disturbed, however.

The currency adjustment is important to American distributors because of their inability to draw their funds out of Germany and some other countries while at the same time being required to pay royalties in dollars. These regulations have been in effect three or four years, or since the new currency laws were promulgated which placed an embargo on the export of German currency. Under the German regulations, no national can enter into an agreement with foreign interests involving currency without the consent of the government.

Agrees to Seek Authorization to Accept Future Royalties in Currency of Country in Which They Become Due

Tobis Re-enters U. S. Field

The 1930 patent agreement between American and German companies was drafted and approved in Paris at conferences at which America was represented by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; John E. Otterson, the present president of Paramount, then representing Electrical Research Products, Inc.; C. J. Ross, representing RCA Photophone, and J. C. Graham, representing certain American producers.

Mr. Hays announced at that time that the arrangements "made it possible for motion picture producers of all countries to obtain licenses to produce pictures in all countries of the world under both German and American patents and provide for interchangability of motion pictures in all countries and upon all makes of licensed apparatus of the respective parties."

The reciprocal provisions made it possible for German and American companies to enter each other's market.

Coincident with the new arrangement, Tobis is marking its re-entry in the American field, with the organization in New York of American Tobis Corporation as a subsidiary of the parent company. The company announced planned distribution here of 60 films a year selected from the output of the Tobis studios in France, Germany, Austria, Holland and Spain, according to W. E. Willem Van Beveren, general manager of the American company.

U. S. COMPANIES WIN DANISH PATENT CASE

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox have been informed by cable from Copenhagen that they were victorious in a patent infringement case contested in the supreme court of Denmark, which gave a decision Tuesday upholding their right to release re-recorded films in that country.

By the decision, which sustained the lower court and is final, the tribunal found that the two companies were not infringing the patents of Nordisk Tonefilm, the plaintiff, as charged, in the re-recording of films for distribution in Denmark.

Other than the two companies involved, the American distributors have been meeting the requirements and paying royalties. This decision may, however, alter the situation. Had Nordisk won the case, the two companies probably would have been estopped from further release of re-recorded films in Denmark and have to take out a license from Nordisk.

Otterson, Zukor Hollywood Bound

John E. Otterson and Adolph Zukor, president and chairman of the board respectively of Paramount Pictures, Inc., will leave for Hollywood Friday to discuss the 1936-37 product with William LeBaron and his associates, and with Russell Holman, New York head of the story and talent department. Mr. Holman is already in Hollywood.

A preliminary discussion of the new season's product was held at a joint meeting of the Hollywood and New York executives in Chicago last December. Following this conference it was decided to have a similar joint meeting in Chicago later for the final review of the program. Plans were changed, however, and the New York contingent will travel the full distance across the country and the meetings will be held at the studios.

TELEPHONE COMPANY GOT INTO FILMS BY ACCIDENT, FEDERAL BOARD TOLD

Started Out with Idea of New Testing of 'Phone Equipment and Talking Pictures Emerged, Says Counsel

The American Telephone & Telegraph Company this week mildly "blamed" sound motion pictures on its inventors and technicians who busy themselves with inventing gadgets and things in the giant Bell laboratories overlooking the Hudson river in New York. The sound device, it appears, came out of the laboratory in spite of the parent Telephone Company, along with artificial larynxes, horse race timers, dirge-singing devices for funerals and whatnot.

Turning finally to the four-billion-dollar corporation's participation in motion pictures, mechanically and otherwise, the Federal Communications Commission in Washington this week heard explanations of the company's "satellite" activities, in the Commission's $750,000 inquiry into the big utility. The investigation has been underway for some two weeks, and this week disclosed Telephone Company loans of millions to the motion picture industry.

The four thousand scientific workers at Bell were virtually blamed for "always inventing things" they didn't intend to invent. They started out with an idea about fixing up a new method of testing telephone equipment, for instance, and talking films came out of it.

At first, it was said, it was a new method of recording voice, and the early experiments, in the 1920's, were devoted to synchronization of sight and sound, with the company wondering and even worrying whether the public would accept the talking film innovation.

This information, and much more, was contained in a memorandum by Charles F. Hurd, special counsel for the Telephone Company, and was issued following Tuesday's hearings at Washington on the question of Telephone ownership in other lines.

The company does not deny that it has a monopoly on the manufacture of motion picture recording equipment for studios and reproducing devices for theatres. But, it claims, it was legitimately drawn into the motion picture situation when Fox Film found itself unable to meet a debt of $15,000,000 to A. T. & T. The loan had been advanced to Fox Theatres for expansion purposes, during the William Fox regime, in the late 1920's, and when Mr. Fox was unable to meet the requirements of the arrangement a board was created to manage the affairs of the Fox companies. On that board was a representative of the Telephone system.

For a time, Mr. Hurd's memo admitted, American Telephone had a production program at the Paramount Long Island studio, but "few of our features were outstanding," added Mr. Hurd.

Participation of the Telephone Company, of course, is through its affiliated Western Electric Company's wholly-owned subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., of which John Edward Otterson, now of Paramount, was president until a few months ago.

The general news press this week was watching the hearings with interest, and when Samuel Becker, special Commission counsel, called a recess on Tuesday, until late Wednesday, he was reported by the press to have completed his consideration of the "scope and structure of the Bell System," for the time being, and to have planned next to describe the company's acquisition of securities of motion picture companies, which resulted, it was reported, "in operations of motion picture studios and the production of feature pictures and shorts."

Company officials at Washington were said to have explained to the press that such participation in motion pictures was a temporary activity undertaken to protect investment in sound equipment and studio facilities taken over for non-payment of debts.

The advance of $15,000,000 by Electrical Research Products to the Fox interests in 1929 was described for the Commission on Wednesday by Samuel Meisells, assistant accountant on the Commission's staff.

Loan Through Erpi

Mr. Meisells testified that Erpi borrowed the money from its immediate parent, Western Electric. On the same day, he continued, Western Electric secured a $12,000,000 advance from its parent A. T. & T. No information could be found in the Telephone Company's records as to why the loan was not made directly by Telephone or Western instead of through Erpi.

The accountant also told of a $9,775,000 loan by Erpi to Halsey, Stuart and Company, Wall Street banker, and a $5,000,000 loan by Erpi to General Theatres Equipment, Inc. The money involved in these two advances, Mr. Meisells said, was used to pay off the original advance to Fox.

"So Erpi furnished $15,000,000 to repay itself the $15,000,000 of Fox and substitute new debtors for the old one, at the same time reducing the original indebtedness by $225,000," it was commented by Samuel Becker, special Commission counsel.

Funds from Western Electric

Mr. Meisells also testified regarding the purchase of $8,500,000 of Film Securities Corporation notes by Weco Corporation, a Western Electric subsidiary, saying that the funds were supplied by Western Electric, and $500,000 of the notes purchased were sold to Graybar Electric Company, another Telephone subsidiary.

Complete monopoly of teletypewriters in the United States, a commanding position in teletypewriter service, leasing of thousands of miles of circuits used by Postal Telegraph and Western Union, and the wholly owned telephoto service were also cited by Commission Counsel Becker as evidence of the far-flung control of the Telephone system. Radio broadcasting is almost completely dependent on Bell System's wire facilities, it was said. Columbia Broadcasting in 1935 paid Bell $1,711,628 for use of wires for network broadcasting, and RCA's National Broadcasting paid $2,296,263. Only four other companies paid in excess of $500,000 for telephone wire service in 1935, and one of these was Nationwide News Service, a race track service, which contributed $521,345. Associated Press, United Press and E. A. Pierce and Company, broker, were the other large telephone customers.

John Bickley, special chief accountant for the investigating Communications Commission, reported that the Bell System is a factor in such other industries as securities, real estate, advertising, burglar alarms, radio, motion pictures, smelting and refining, railways, subways, cable companies. It ranked third among the nation's public utility services, transportation ranking first and electric and gas utilities second.

In addition, it was diclosed, on Wednesday, by Commission Accountant Meisells, that Exhibitors Reliance Corporation, a subsidiary of Erpi, loaned various sums to motion picture companies on a straight credit basis, charging normal interest rates.

Mr. Meisells explained that Exhibitors Reliance, for instance, extended credit of some $805,000 to Picture Alliance Corporation, to finance 12 features, 9 westerns, 29 two-reelers and 10 one-reelers. Educational Productions, Inc., received credit of $400,000 for 26 shorts; Krimsky and Cochrane got $168,620 for "Emperor Jones," and Universal was financed in "Moonlight and Pretzels." Hecht and MacArthur borrowed $187,000 for "The Scoundrel" and another production. Some $3,413,400 was extended on the whole.

Credit of $50,000 was negotiated by Quigley Publishing Company, and by others.

(The following statement was issued Wednesday evening by Quigley Publishing Company:

> On June 30, 1932, at which time, on account of the depression, the normal sources of credit to legitimate business were closed, Quigley Publishing Company negotiated a credit, in amount of Fifty Thousand Dollars, with the Exhibitors Reliance Corporation, a subsidiary of ERPI.
>
> The credit above referred to was negotiated in full and mutual realization of the fact that it involved no implications or commitments beyond, or in addition to, repayment with interest at the normal rate.
> Repayment in full, together with interest, was completed on April 18, 1935.)

Drawn Legitimately into Motion Picture Situation When Fox Film Couldn't Meet Debt, Commission Informed

After suddenly finding itself, through its inventors, engaging in sound motion pictures, "the Telephone Company thought it had all its outside activities under hand and finally was about to concentrate on the telephone business again, when the Bell scientists produced their tin larynx and their plus-perfect race-timer," United Press reported from the hearing chambers. "Then they developed the hill and dale recording device. This was a little lulu—and peculiarly appropriate for playing sad, slow music at funerals. One of the A. T. & T. subsidiaries, therefore, began manufacturing such equipment.

"That wasn't all," the press dispatch added. "A modification of this same dirge device was found to be especially suitable for the manufacture of those song extravaganzas of the films. A. T. & T. engineers gave the equipment its major trial in the filming of 'One Night of Love,' featuring Miss Moore."

"This is no slur on Miss Moore," it was explained, "and probably is the revelation of a profound movie secret, but Mr. Hurd said she didn't sing a single song while the picture was being filmed.

"What all this has to do with the telephone business, if anything, Mr. Becker hopes to spread on the record before the month is up. Executives of the A. T. & T. probably will attempt to show that if their inventors could be forced to stop inventing, there never would have been developments so far afield—and probably not much of a telephone service, either."

INTIMIDATION BY COMPOSERS SOCIETY CHARGED IN CRIMINAL INDICTMENTS

Public Prosecutor in Washington State Says Monopoly Controls 90 Per Cent of Music Copyrights; Asks Extradition

With criminal indictments charging "conspiracy and intimidation in restraint of public trade" filed against officials of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in the state of Washington, the House patents committee this week resumed consideration of the Duffy copyright bill, which is being bitterly fought by the Society.

Under an agreement definitely to conclude hearings April 15, the committee in its fifth week of hearings put in the record testimony of representatives of organized authors sharply assailing the motion picture producers as "wreckers of their product." The authors called for defeat of the Duffy bill, which is favored by exhibitors.

Picturing Hollywood as a bedlam where one never knows from moment to moment what might be done and declaring there is no such thing as an "innocent" infringer, the writers attacked the measure as undermining the rights which they have won only after hard battle. Spokesmen for the Authors' League of America attacked the right of film producers to change titles or "cut to pieces" their literary work.

Writers' Complaints Heard

The remainder of the hearings this week were devoted to listening to the plaints of the writing crafts, with the motion picture industry scheduled to appear next week.

Meanwhile in the state of Washington, where ASCAP has been operating under a receivership, the fight against the Society was extended with the filing of charges against its officials in the Snohomish county superior court at Everett by A. W. Swanson, public prosecutor.

Branding ASCAP as a "monopolistic institution" controlling 90 per cent of all music copyrights, the prosecutor named Gene Buck, ASCAP president; E. C. Mills, general manager; Nathan Burkan, general counsel; Louis Bernstein, vice-president; Saul H. Bornstein, treasurer, all of New York, and John L. Stanley, ASCAP representative in Seattle. The prosecutor asked extradition of the New York men, and Judge R. C. Bell set bail at $1,250 for each.

The prosecutor charged that through threatened prosecution of unlicensed music users the Society interfered with public trade and through intimidation prevented others from following lawful occupations.

Follows Radio Interests' Attack

The action is an outgrowth of the vigorous attack on ASCAP by the state's radio interests and Attorney General E. P. Donnelly, who recently said that the officials would be liable to criminal prosecution if they entered the state. The Society is fighting the receivership in the state courts in an effort to recapture the privilege of collecting music taxes in the state.

It developed also this week that the future course of the Government's prosecution of ASCAP in the federal courts as an alleged monopoly is uncertain because of the possibility of regulatory legislation being passed in the present session of Congress.

No likelihood of a final disposition of the case is seen by attorneys identified with the action until after adjournment of Congress, at which time the fate of the Duffy bill probably will have been settled. The Department of Justice and ASCAP counsel have been working on stipulations of fact in the case since it was stricken from the calendar of the federal district court in New York last fall. The stipulations will be presented to a federal judge to determine whether sufficient causes of action remain to constitute a suit.

The authors, particularly those who have sold material for film production, unloosed accumulated grievances at Hollywood when they opposed the Duffy bill before the House patents committee in Washington.

Features of the measure that would permit freedom of editorial revision would undermine clauses establishing the authors' moral rights, it was asserted by Ben Lucien Berman. Author of "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," Mr. Berman told the committee that Will Rogers had helped him prevent mutilation of the script and that conditions in Hollywood were so confused that at one time he had feared it would be turned into a story for Shirley Temple.

"Ninety-eight per cent of the screen writers in Hollywood are taking orders from the producers who are quite incompetent to direct them," he charged.

"I would like to see a law passed," said Mr. Berman, "that would give authors greater rights over their works insofar as motion picture production is concerned. The Duffy bill would decrease even what rights we have now."

Other complaints were registered by Mary Heaton Vorse, who criticized the title "Sea Beast" used on one of her stories, starring Milton Sills, and complained that one studio used only two lines of her script.

Headed by Elmer Davis, other spokesmen for the Authors' League were George Creel, Thyra Sampter Winslow, Chester Crowell and William H. Osborne. They declared that entry into the Berne copyright convention, provided in the Duffy bill, would subordinate the rights of American authors to those of foreign writers.

Pleading for retention of the statutory $250 minimum damage clause, Luise Sillcox, executive secretary of the Dramatists' Guild, urged that if the minimum penalty is abolished so should the maximum.

A further plea for legislation to prevent picture producers from mutilating scenarios was laid before the committee Wednesday by representatives of the dramatists and screen writers.

Much of the immorality of the screen was blamed on studio executives by John Howard Lawson, who charged that high-paid playwrights were treated "like office boys" and contended that low film standards were due to the ignoring of advice of dramatists with experience.

Mr. Lawson criticized changes in stories for the purpose of obtaining double meaning dialogue and sophisticated situations.

While satisfactory arrangements have been made with legitimate producers over the revision of scripts, the witness declared that the situation in Hollywood was "very unsatisfactory" and contended that the Duffy bill would make the situation worse. He attacked the limitation of infringement penalties in current events films and said the bill was ambiguous. He also objected to the provision merging production and exhibition rights and permitting release of films before legitimate runs were concluded.

Determination to close the hearings April 15 was reached by the committee after several members protested against the apparently endless flood of testimony. It was agreed that if necessary the committee should split into smaller groups to sit simultaneously.

Sirovich Ill

Too ill to continue in charge of the hearing, Chairman William I. Sirovich left the committee to its own devices and returned home. Representative Fritz G. Lanham of Texas continued the hearings as acting chairman, announcing that to expedite matters sessions would be held four days each week instead of three.

Closing of the hearings was demanded late last week by Representative O'Malley of Wisconsin, a bitter opponent of ASCAP, but objection was voiced by Gabriel Hess, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Representative O'Malley favors the Duffy bill, but the producers and distributors want the $250 minimum damage clause retained as a deterrent to film bickcling and switching, and to that extent are siding with ASCAP in its fight against elimination.

WARNERS PROPOSE NEW FIVE-YEAR CONTRACT

A new five-year contract for the use of Warner music was offered Wednesday by the Music Publishers Holding Corporation, Warner music subsidiary, to radio stations. Exhibitors will know this coming week what Warners' policy will be with respect to music taxes for theatres, the company indicated.

The new radio contract, like the temporary agreement which has been in effect since January 1, with 250 radio stations, is based on a monthly fee.

The five-year contract is evidence of Warners' determination to remain outside the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, said Herman Starr, vice-president in charge of music.

The new agreement is based on the local quarter-hour rate instead of the national rate, since Warner considers this rate much fairer to the smaller stations.

Additional infringement suits against radio stations, hotels and cafes continue to be filed by Warners, with the score this week standing at 145 actions brought.

Organized Authors Assail Motion Picture Producers as "Wreckers of Their Product" at Duffy Bill Hearing

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Quick reference information on product started and completed and a panorama of the news of the week

50 Films in Work

Twelve pictures started in the week and eight were finished; thus Hollywood studios currently have approximately fifty pictures in work. This figure approaches the high water mark to compare favorably with the production colony's busiest seasons of the past.

Three pictures started at Warner. "Bullets and Ballots," starring Edward G. Robinson with Joan Blondell, also will present Humphrey Bogart, Barton MacLane, George E. Stone, Craig Reynolds, Addison Richards, Joseph King, Frank McHugh, Dick Purcell, Henry Kolker and Louise Beavers. William Keighley is directing. In "The Case of the Velvet Claws," being directed by William Clemons, are featured Warren William, Claire Dodd and Allen Jenkins. The cast for "Love Begins at Twenty" includes Warren Hull, Patricia Ellis, Hugh Herbert, Hobart Cavanaugh, Mary Treen, Dorothy Vaughn, Robert Glecker. William McGann is the director.

Paramount started two pictures. First and the more important is "Hotel Imperial," formerly titled "I Loved a Soldier." The production, which seems to be fighting a jinx, ran into further difficulty when Margaret Sullavan, who had succeeded Marlene Dietrich, broke her arm, causing further delay, but it is not expected that selection of another leading lady will be necessitated. Others in the cast are Charles Boyer, Akim Tamiroff, Samuel Hinds, John Miljan, Ted Oliver, Sigfried Rumann, Harry Cording, Stuart Erwin and Robert Middlemass. Henry Hathaway is directing. A second picture, "Good for Nothing," will star Virginia Weidler, with William Shea making his first bid for directorial recognition.

Hal Roach started "The Money Box." Laurel and Hardy are featured, supported by Alan Hale, Sidney Toler, Daphne Pollart, Betty Healy, Lorna Andre, Iris Adrian, James Finlayson, Arthur Housman and Wade Boteler. Harry Lachman is directing.

At Republic, "The Glory Parade" went before the cameras. The cast includes James Dunn, David Manners, Mae Clarke, Charlotte Henry, Henry B. Walthall, Frank McGlynn and Oscar Apfel. Direction is by Lew Ayres.

Three Independents

Three independent companies are listed in the group starting pictures. William Berke began work on "Desert Justice." The cast lists Jack Perrin, Warren Hymer, Maryan Dowling and Roger Williams.

Excelsior started "Ghost Valley." Tim McCoy is featured, supported by Claudia Dell, Wheeler Oakman and James Burtis. Sam Neufield is directing.

"August Week End," Chesterfield, will present Valerie Hobson, Paul Harvey, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Claire McDowell, Betty Compson, Frank Melton, Gigi Parrish, Paul Irving and Pat West. Charles Lamont is directing.

At Columbia "Queer Money" went on the stages. Cast names are Chester Morris, Marian Marsh, Lloyd Nolan, Victor Kilian, Nana Bryant, George McKay, Marc Lawrence and Earl Bunn. Erle Kenton is directing.

Warner Completes Two

Two pictures were completed by Warner. "Hearts Divided" stars Marion Davies and Dick Powell and includes Charles Ruggles, George Folsey, Henry Stephenson, Edward E. Horton, Arthur Treacher, Etienne Girardot, Walter Kingsford, Clara Blandick, Sam McDaniell, Oscar Polk, Clarence Muse and George Irving. Frank Borzage directed. In "Murder in the Big House" Craig Reynolds, June Travis, Dick Purcell, Barton McLane, Joseph Crehan, Joseph King, Carol Hughes, George E. Stone, Eddie Acuff, Mary Treen, Charles Middleton and Douglas Wood will be seen. Nick Grinde directed.

For Columbia release, Darmour Productions finished "Avenging Waters." The cast lists Ken Maynard, Beth Marion, John Elliott, Zella Russell, Ward Bond, Wally Wales and Edward Hearne. Spencer Bennet directed.

Paramount completed "Big Brown Eyes," a Wanger production. Names in the cast are Joan Bennett, Cary Grant, Isabel Jewell, Lloyd Nolan, Douglas Fowley, Marjorie Gateson, Henry Kleinbach, Walter Pidgeon, Alan Baxter and Francis McDonald. Raoul Walsh directed.

"The Witness Chair" was completed at Radio, starring Ann Harding with Walter Abel.

Color Film Finished

"Dancing Pirate," a Pioneer production in color, Radio release, also was transferred to the editorial department. It features Charles Collins, Steffi Duna and Frank Morgan, supported by Luis Alberni, Alma Real, Victor Varconi, Jack LaRue, William V. Mong, Sherman Sanders, Vera Lewis, Mitchell Lewis and the Royal Cansinos. Lloyd Corrigan directed.

Another Shirley Temple picture, "The Poor Little Rich Girl," is in the cutting room. The supporting cast for Miss Temple includes Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Michael Whelan, Jack Haley, Charles Coleman, John Wray, Snowflake, Billy Gilbert, Sam McDaniel, Tyler Brook, Claude Gillingwater and Arthur Hoyt. Irving Cummings directed.

The final completed picture, "The Mine with the Iron Door," Sol Lesser production, features Richard Arlen, Stanley Fields and Cecilia Parker with Henry B. Walthall and Spencer Charters. David Howard directed.

Independent

Although he has been an independent producer for many years, Eddie Small has changed his mind about making pictures for himself. Now an associate producer at Radio, Mr. Small's final independent production will be "The Last of the Mohicans."

"Independent production makes old men of youths," said Mr. Small. "So many elements enter into the making of a film that it is necessary for a producer to work with writers, select the cast, work on the sets with the director, and cut the picture. It is necessary to do so in order to make every penny count, in the final production.

"Good talent must be bought, or borrowed under exorbitant conditions, good authors and suitable directors must be found. As to players, talent and ability to draw at the box office are necessary. Often the independent producer must wait for weeks for a major studio to finish with players he needs in his picture. Cost of the delay is prohibitive. The time, care, money and showmanship necessary for a good picture put in by the individual producer himself is a nerve-wracking task. In association with a major studio, however, all that becomes available to the producer. The job then is to use time, money, talent and brains for one purpose—producing outstanding pictures."

Guild Protests

The Screen Writers Guild plans immediate action to combat reported British legislation barring American screen writers from working in England. . . . Leonard Goldstein has resigned as assistant to Ben Goetz of Consolidated and has started his new duties as executive assistant to George Hirliman, of Hirliman Productions. Mr. Goldstein will go to New York and England within two weeks to start negotiations for Mr. Hirliman's new color process, Hirlacolor. . . . S. Barret McCormick concluded policy conferences on the Coast and slipped out for New York. . . . Rufus LeMaire, formerly casting director for MGM, has joined Universal studios as executive assistant to Charles R. Rogers and William Koenig. Mr. LeMaire's principal duties will be to supervise the building of a Universal stock company. . . . Leo Spitz planed out for New York again. . . . Lawrence W. Beilenson, attorney for both the Screen Actor and Writer Guilds, is back from New York where he conferred with heads of the Authors League of America. . . . Joseph M. Schenck was also among Hollywood executives going east. Mr. Schenck will go to London following distribution and theatre expansion conferences with the 20th Century-Fox home office. . . . Carl Laemmle plans to go east for the April 2 pay-off by Standard Capital. . . . Pat O'Brien and Warners have patched up seeming difficulties and O'Brien has gone back to work. . . . George Hirliman will release three Spanish films, starring Jose Mojica, through MGM. . . . Fanchon Royer has resigned as a producer at Republic after two weeks on the company payroll. She immediately will form her own company.

SETTLEMENT NEAR IN SPANISH EXHIBITOR DISPUTE WITH MGM

Distributors Rally to Defense of J. Edelstein; Whispering Campaign Changed to Demand for Contract Revision

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

With the threatened boycott of MGM pictures now put into effect by exhibitors of the Region of Cataluña, which embraces the most populous industrial section of Spain, the attack upon Jacques Edelstein and the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica, S. A. E., which he heads, has spread into the realms of both national and regional politics and labor. The American, Spanish and other foreign distributors, grouped in the Mutua, or Cámara Espanola de Cinematografía, of which, however, RKO and Columbia, the affiliate companies here, are not members (though RKO this week notified the Film Board of its intention to join), have unqualifiedly rallied to the support of Mr. Edelstein in his stand against contract revision by arbitration or otherwise. Arbitration meetings this week failed to break the deadlock.

The position taken by the distributors and the solidarity shown by all of the membership, regardless of production or national or international background, very quickly brought about a change in the tactics of the warring exhibitors, of whom there are 105 in Barcelona, with 71 contractually served by MGM. From a whispering campaign of villification against Mr. Edelstein personally, their campaign changed to one of demand that the Metro contract be subject to revision. This the Metro unit, headed by Edelstein, and the united distributors refused.

When wholly uncorroborated insinuations began to be circulated that Mr. Edelstein had entered into the delicate and complicated politics of Spain and Cataluña preceding the recent elections and reached the ears of the newly seated Spanish Premier, Manuel Azaña, the head of the government wrote a personal letter to Lluis Campanys, president of the Generaldid of Cataluña, asking that political recriminations be excluded from consideration in an effort by the Catalan Government to effect an amicable settlement of the dispute.

Martín Barrera, Consejero de Trabajo (corresponding to secretary of labor in an American state government) and Ventura Gasol, Consejero de Cultura, acting upon the complaint of Zoilo Oliver (of Cinnamond Films), president of the Mutua, dispatched an invitation to Enrique Sáenz, president of the Asociación de Impresarios de Cataluña, to call at the Generalidad in this city, to discuss arbitration measures proposed by the Mutua. President Sáenz failed to respond to the invitation, whereupon a Government agent was sent post haste to summon him imperatively to the Consejería.

Upon his arrival Mr. Sáenz declared that the only arbitration acceptable would be that of revision of the Metro contracts already executed and in effect. It was insistence by the Metro executive upon fulfillment of these contracts which had occasioned the outbreak of hostilities against him. The Sáenz proposal was straightaway refused by the Metro and Mutua principals.

Despite vituperative official expressions upon the part of Mr. Sáenz in the public press, including a signed interview in "La Humanitat," the Catalan language daily of largest circulation, and in conversation and correspondence, which he has admitted to friends in the Mutua councils were "necessary for local consumption," the exhibitors' unit accepted arbitration and a commission was appointed consisting of three from the exhibitors' organization, three from the Mutua, and headed by one or more representatives of the Generalidad of Cataluña.

Sáenz Concedes Point

Mr. Sáenz, when finally he was prevailed upon to wait upon the Consejero de Trabajo, was told frankly that the exhibitors' boycott could not be regarded as other than an illegal proceeding, since any action adversely affecting the employment of great numbers of cinema operators and theatre attachés must constitute a violation of the Spanish and Catalan labor laws. Mr. Sáenz then agreed that the films contracted for would be accepted and paid for, but not shown. This, in turn, it was pointed out to him, would disrupt the Metro distribution schedule for the remainder of the season and likewise might prove to be illegal, if it had the effect of unsettling the labor balance in the big Metro studios and salesrooms in this city.

Although the managers of the American importing and distributing group, as likewise their Spanish and foreign confreres in the Mutua, both individually and collectively sympathize with Mr. Edelstein in his present position, under the bylaws and regulations of the Mutua they may not put into effect the lockout of all films, decided upon in their last meeting as the most drastic reprisal for the exhibitors' boycott, until after eight days' notice served upon the exhibitors. Meanwhile, they are supplying films to the exhibitor theatres of the Barcelona group, while the Radio and Columbia units, being without the Mutua membership, are free to do likewise.

FILM GROUP FIGHTS CENSORSHIP MEASURE

The executive committee of the Finer Films Federation of New Jersey, at a special meeting this week, at East Orange, voted unanimously to oppose passage of a bill introduced in the legislature by Senator Horace G. Prail, Hunterdon County Republican, for the appointment of a board of censors.

The bill provides for appointment of three censors at a total salary of $13,800, and authorizes the establishment of a corps of investigators and clerks. The executive committee also called a special meeting of the statewide membership for April 28 at Trenton for a concerted effort against the measure.

Insinuations of Interference in Politics Never Verified; Warner Group Acquire Modern Studio for Dubbing Purposes

Gala Premieres

Gala premieres were held on consecutive evenings of the Radio "Fería de la Vanidad" ("Becky Sharp") and of United Artists' "Tiempos Modernos" ("Modern Times") with Charlie Chaplin. Audiences worthy of an opera first night assembled for both, and public and press accorded the new pictures a most favorable reception.

The Technicolor production, at the Astoria, was Spain's introduction to the new color-relief principle featured in the film version of Thackeray's masterpiece, and there was no disguising the measure of artistic and entertainment satisfaction the picture created. The first-run was held under the auspices of the Circulo Artistico of Barcelona, which issued the invitations and whose president, J. Planas Doria, distinguished in Spanish and Catalan art and journalistic life, prefaced the initial showing of the film with a brief address. A most attractive incidental divertisement was provided by Carmen Salazar, a Spanish dancer of renown, who, supported by an instrumental septet, executed a program of classic dances.

At the Tivoli, one of Barcelona's largest and most fashionable theatres, a capacity house in gala attire greeted the latest Chaplin offering. Excellent publicity measures had aroused public interest to the ultimate degree and tickets at the regular Barcelona theatre scale were sold out long before the the premiere. The Barcelona press hailed the comedy with virtually unanimous praise and the occasion proved to be second only to the premiere of two nights previously in Madrid in the fashionable world of this, Spain's metropolis and chief seaport.

20TH-FOX 'MESSAGE TO GARCIA' GRAND THRILLER, B. O. WOW

Notable Portrayal By Wallace Beery

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA"
(20th Century-Fox)

Producer .....Darryl F Zanuck
Associate Producer....Raymond Griffith
Direction .. ..George Marshall
Story Lieut Andrew S. Rowan and Elbert Hubbard.
Screen Play W P. Lipscomb and Gene Fowler
Photography .....Rudolph Mate
Assistant Director....Booth McCracken
Cast Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles, Alan Hale, Herbert Mundin, Mona Barrie, Enrique Acosta, Juan Torena, Martin Garralaga, Blanca Vischer, Jose Luis Tortosa, Lucio Villegas, Frederick Vogeding, Pat Moriarity, Octavio Giraud.

The message of this robustious adventure picture, with its story straight out of revered American history, its triple stellar draw and its consummate production values, is one of profits and more profits at the little glass cage Darryl Zanuck has struck 12 for exhibitors again

For this is as high-tension a discharge of entertainment voltage as anyone could desire It brings vividly to life the heroic Spanish-American war story immortalized by Elbert Hubbard and known to almost every American It packs a swift succession of hairbreadth escapes that makes the Perils of Pauline and all her successors seem child's play on the front lawn And it brings to the screen a serio-comic character portrayal destined for the cinema hall of fame

Sergeant Dory, the renegade ex-marine who helped Lieutenant Rowan get through the Spanish lines and into the interior of Cuba as played by Wallace Beery, emerges as engaging and heroic a scalawag as any modern Falstaff Not since Beery's Villa has he had such a chance or enacted so superbly well-rounded and engaging a portrait

John Boles plays the undaunted Lieutant Rowan, bearer of the message to Garcia, and his too, is an impeccable portrayal, vigorous and dynamic Barbara Stanwyck is the high-bred and courageous Cuban girl of history who in the screen version not only aids the lieutenant but accompanies him on most of the perilous trip Miss Stanwyck is not an exotic Latin but she gives a forthright and unaffected performance that combines appealing beauty and convincing heroism

Events move rapidly from the very beginning and the pace never slackens Following a brief prologue in which President McKinley gives Rowan the message the lieutenant is found as a Canadian stoker on a British tug off the Cuban coast But Spanish spies have wind of him and the villainous Captain Krug has been hired to capture him at all costs Krug intercepts the boat and in the first of many chases Rowan swims ashore under a blanket of bullets

In a low Cuban bodega he is picked up by the disreputable but resourceful Dory For a price the mercenary ex-sergeant offers to get him through the lines to the ranch of the Cuban Maderos and he is forced to accept the doubtful aid. From this point onward the comical rogue dominates the story, pitting his wits against the relentless Krug.

They see Maderos shot down by Krug's men just before his lovely daughter (Barbara Stanwyck) arrives. In those circumstances they meet and the girl resolves to help the Cuban cause by seeing Rowan through. Soon the three alone are working their way through the pathless and miasmic tropical swamps, constantly harassed by the ever-following Krug.

Beery unwittingly leads Boles to the stronghold of Krug He himself is captured by the Cubans and persuades General Garcia into a ride to the rescue of the tortured Boles and, as it happens, of the wounded girl It is a gory and spectacular finish

This is a grand job of picture-making throughout and there are a host of credits earned The skillfully devised script by W P Lipscomb and Gene Fowler is carefully built on Lieutenant Rowan's own published account and a vast amount of research for picture purposes is evidenced Tact has been used to avoid wounding Spanish sensibilities as witness the employment of the foreigner Krug for everything beyond the Spanish code of honor in war

The direction of George Marshall is unsparingly vigorous in its development of never-slackening pace and menace and of pungent and telling detail at every turn, however swiftly taken The photography of Rudolph Mate, with its multitudinous problems of night lightings in uncanny places, is impressively atmospheric and he is splendidly aided by the art contributions of William Darling, Rudolph Sternad and Thomas Little

Of the extensive and admirable support Alan Hale stands out as the merciless Krug Herbert Mundin supplies a touch of comedy as a cockney tinware peddler lost, with his stock-in-trade, for weeks in the jungle This is a bit hard to take but is dramatically justified at the end The numerous Spanish parts are taken by members of the studio's gifted Spanish stock company, with handsome, young Juan Torena notable as the girl's soldier brother and Enrique Acosta as General Garcia There are also meritorious bits by Mona Barrie, Blanca Vischer, Martin Garralaga and Jose Luis Tortosa

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by the Hollywood staff of the Motion Picture Herald

Blackmailer
(Columbia)
Dramatic Mystery

In story content and commercial worth of cast names, this production has much to engage the interest of audiences and exhibitors. Essentially the story is murder mystery, but it is far from formula. That is the quality that Joseph Krumgold, Lee Loeb and Harold Buchman have sought to incorporate and make predominant in their original screen play. It is the angle which Gordon Wiles' direction continually concentrates upon.

Eight persons are gathered about a dinner table. A man whom all detest requests that the lights be darkened momentarily. There's a screen and he is found stabbed in the heart. Investigation reveals that several in the room have motive for killing the man. A woman who has been blackmailing, and her husband, might have done it; so too their daughter and the man she is in love with. The butler may be guilty, also a stable boy found prowling about. Only the host and his wife are unsuspected. The murderer must be in the room. Another man, who tries a ruse to trap the slayer, is slain. Then the fiance asks that the room be darkened, claiming that he knows the killer. A fight, the lights go on and the killer and his mother are revealed.

With dynamic and different mystery the principal selling point, inasmuch as all the action takes place within one room and all the players are continually present, appearing as the outstanding interest creating angle, name values of players bringing the story to screen realism should not be overlooked. As practically all the players are familiar to patrons and exhibitors by reason of appearances in recent pictures, the personalities featured—and each one is important in the story—are William Gargan, Florence Rice, H. B. Warner, Nana Bryant, George McKay, Wyrley Birch, Drue Leyton, Paul Hurst, Kenneth Thompson, Boyd Irwin, Sr., and Alexander Gross.

Two Against the World
(Warner)
Drama

The plot of this story is powerful drama. It calls for not one but a continued series of suspense packed situations. It concerns itself with what happened when a man whose only love was greed for money dug up the sordid details of a now respected wife and mother and by threatening to broadcast them to the world brought about the self-destruction of the woman and her husband, but in doing so his attempt at scandal mongering brought about an affection between their daughter and her fiance that resulted in a glorious love.

Geared to a theme that has more than ordinary appeal, inasmuch as it makes a martyr of a woman who had the strength of character to live down an unfortunate past, the story is told against a background that cannot help but enhance the motivating story's dramatic content. Radio broadcasting is the medium by which the chain owner would exhume the dead past. He will not heed the pleas of his manager and his secretary nor will he listen to the woman in the case. His threats to go on the air almost wreck the daughter's romance. But as her parents take their own lives, the girl's attempt at revenge is frustrated by the manager as the boy re-vows his love and the manager and his secretary find romance in another field.

Robert Middlemass has the role of the radio owner. Humphrey Bogart, the gangster of "Petrified Forest," is his manager, and Beverly Roberts, who will make her screen debut in "The Singing Kid," is the secretary. Helen McKellar is the woman, Henry O'Neill her husband, and Linda Perry the daughter. The next most important character is Carlyle Moore, Jr. Others who will be seen are Florence Fair, Clay Clement, Harry Hayden, Claire Dodd, Hobart Cavanaugh and Paula Stone.

The story is an original screen play by Michael Jacoby and is being directed by William McGann.

And so they were Married
(Columbia)
Comedy Romance

A B. P. Schulberg production, this story undoubtedly has the qualities that make for good screen entertainment. The subject matter, originally making for comedy in dialogue, action and situations, is intriguing in concept. While it builds to a light dramatic situation, the element of comedy is, nevertheless, the continually dominant factor. The story is an original by Sarah Addington. Screen play is by Doris Anderson, Joseph Anthony and Lourie Brazee. The picture is being directed by Elliott Nugent.

The time of the story is the Christmas season. The locale is a snow isolated mountain hotel. Production values are of a class to accentuate fully the motivating story theme. A widower and a widow, each of whom detests the opposite sex, are anxious to give their motherless children the fun of a white Christmas. Alone in the hotel, they make no bones of their dislike for each other, but to avoid the super-anxious make-you-welcome antics of hotel attaches, they seek solace in each other's company. The children, who battle between themselves, think their parents are going to get married. Making peace to forestall such a happening, they create a situation which makes it appear that they have been kidnaped. But when they are found, the boy and girl are happy to see their father and mother rush into each other's arms.

Melvyn Douglas will be seen in the role of the widower and Mary Astor as the widow. Edith Fellows is Miss Astor's daughter and Jackie Moran is Douglas' child. Donald Meek appears as the hotel owner and Dorothy Stickney and Romaine Callender are the very important attaches who drive their guests into love.

Murder in the Big House
(Warner)
Drama

The title graphically cues this story's character, identity and locale. Basically it is a story of desperate men that runs a wide scale of melodrama, romance, mystery, thrill, excitement and suspense. The premise of the story is odd. A reformed racketeer deliberately commits a minor crime that he may go to jail and thus be safe from gangsters who have threatened his life. His only friends are his secretary and a newspaper man. On the eve of the man's parole he is killed. As the gangsters are also former convicts they immediately are suspected. The mechanics of production carry on the illusion that this is the case until the climax which, interluded by a series of danger laden mutinies, escapes and recaptures, makes vivid use of the elements of suspense and mystery to baffle all attempts at advance solution.

The picture is based on an original story by Johnathan Finn, with screen play by Robert Adams and Joseph Hoffman. Direction is by Nick Grinde.

Save two, June Travis, featured in "Ceiling Zero" and the forthcoming "Broadway Playboy," and Mary Treen, the entire cast is made up of male actors, all of whom are familiar figures in pictures made by this company. Craig Reynolds is the reporter, about whom the story's small but important romantic angle revolves. Joseph King is the murdered man; Joseph Crehan the warden and Barton MacLane a police detective sent into the prison to investigate the slaying. Addison Richards and Charles Middleton are guards, and Richard Purcell and George E. Stone are the gangster murder suspects. Other players are Eddie Acuff, Henry Hall and Robert Keane.

Practically all the action, except a courtroom sequence, takes place within the walls of a famous penitentiary.

Mr. Deeds Goes to Town
(Columbia)
Comedy Romance

Any Frank Capra picture is an important event for exhibitors and theatregoers. "Lady for a Day," "Broadway Bill" and "It Happened One Night," the most recent of a long list of successes, established that fact.

Searching since "Broadway Bill," Capra finally found in the Clarence Budington Kelland story now bearing this title a vehicle he would like to do. When the screen play was completed by Robert Riskin, Gary Cooper engaged for the role of Mr. Deeds, Jean Arthur assigned to the feminine lead, and such names added as George Bancroft, Lionel Stander, Douglas Dumbrille, Raymond Walburn, H. B. Warner, Warren Hymer, Muriel Evans, Ruth Donnelly, Emma Dunn, Christian Rub, George Cooper, Walter Catlett, John Wray and Gene Morgan, Capra was convinced he had the vehicle, the stars and supporting players that would fully come up to all anticipations exhibitors and audience would have.

"Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" is a comedy romance story, topically unusual. A small town big shot inherits a vast fortune and is prevailed upon to shake the dust of his rural residence where he's everything from leader of the town band to chief of the fire department. In New York everybody takes him for a hick sucker and wants a bite out of his bankroll, but Deeds (Cooper) crawls into his shell. He meets a girl who tells him that she's broke and down and out. He feeds her and next day a newspaper screams with news of Deed's foibles and idiosyncrasies. Amazed, he crawls deeper into his shell, having ear only for the poor girl. Then he discovers that the girl he befriended is the writer of the sensational stories.

30 APPROVE NEW SUPPLY DEALERS' ASSOCIATION

George DeKruif and Rudolph Eisenberg, Attorney, Forming Organization; 30 Joining

Associated Theatre Supply Dealers, a new national organization of supply dealers, is being formed by George DeKruif, former National Theatre Supply executive, and Rudolph Eisenberg, attorney, at 551 Fifth Avenue, New York. Approximately 30 dealers have indicated their intention of joining the organization, Mr. Eisenberg said this week.

The prospectus of the new association sets forth seven services which the organization will perform for its members. These include obtaining of preferential discounts, bonuses on yearly sales quotas, obtaining of new lines for dealers, sales promotion work, advertising, accounting and a weekly bulletin.

In seeking members of the new association, Mr. Eisenberg said he had sent questionnaires to 504 manufacturers throughout the country.

The pamphlet contained such questions as the following:

"What do you manufacture for theatres and other forms of auditoriums?

"How do you merchandise your equipment now?

"What is the list price of your product and what is the recognized dealer discount?

"Are you interested only in theatre business, or would you like to cultivate new fields?

"What are your terms, including deposit, cash discount and installments?

"Will you cooperate in backing up the distributor by advertising and with a catalogue?

"Will you give exclusive selling rights and send samples?

"Can you guarantee delivery upon acceptance of order?

"What form of endorsement or laboratory test can you supply to prove your product is mechanically perfect, and will perform as claimed?

"How many theatres have installed your product?

"Who handles your export business?

"Would you supply free samples for a permanent display in New York headquarters showroom?"

William Fox Gets Stay Pending Appeal

A stay of that part of a federal court order which made William Fox subject to arrest for contempt of court was granted late last week by Judge William Bondy providing an appeal from the order punishing Mr. Fox is filed with the United States supreme court by his attorneys within 10 days after the record of the case is completed.

Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker, Mr. Fox's attorneys, said that the record could be completed within a week and that application for a writ of certiorari would be made to the high court within the specified time. The appeal will be sought on the complete punishment order signed by Judge Bondy and upheld recently by the United States circuit court of appeals which, in addition to directing that Mr. Fox be taken into custody, also prescribed a fine of $235,000 and $10,000 attorney fees.

Mr. Fox was cited for contempt for failure to answer a subpoena obtained by the Capital Company in supplementary proceedings in connection with an unsatisfied $280,000 judgment it was awarded against Mr. Fox for a defaulted lease on the Fox Theatre, San Francisco.

Percentage Ruling Upsets Sale Pacts

A decision which is regarded by film company attorneys as likely to have widespread effects on the designation by distributors of percentage engagements, if it stands, was won last week in the New York supreme court by Springer and Cocalis and the Consolidated Circuit in an action brought against them by Twentieth Century-Fox.

The decision would make the distributor's overage on a group of designated percentage pictures dependent upon the earnings of the entire group, rather than upon the earnings of each picture individually.

Fox was suing Springer and Cocalis on a 1934-'35 contract for 58 of the distributor's pictures at a flat rental of $2,750 per picture for 30 theatres. The contract stipulated that "on six pictures to be allocated by Fox the distributor shall receive a 50 per cent overage." Fox was suing for $18,000, plus interest, which it claimed was due it under this clause.

The exhibitor defendant admitted a profit on two of the six pictures allocated by Fox for the overage, but claimed a loss on the other four which offset that profit.

Silent Scenes Are Out, Dreher Says in Report

Hardly a single silent scene is made in films today, according to a report by Carl Dreher, head of the Radio Studios sound department in Hollywood. Radio's consumption of sound stock rose in 1935 to 7,000,000 feet, approximately 2,000,000 feet more than the averages of the three previous years. Last year nine pictures used more than 200,000 feet of sound each as against two such films in 1934.

The total footage run through the recorders since Radio began making sound films, according to Mr. Dreher's report, was more than 32,000,000 at the end of 1935. More than one-third, or 37 per cent, of all features released by Radio in 1935 contained music, with an increase expected this year.

Film Acting Is Not Acting: Howard

Motion picture acting is not acting at all, in the sense that the legitimate stage knows the art, Sidney Howard, president of the Dramatists' Guild, told members of the graduating class of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts Monday in New York. Mr. Howard, who has written both for the stage and screen, said the stage demands far more of its actors, actresses and playwrights than the motion pictures. Many screen stars, he intimated, would fail miserably on Broadway.

"I don't believe for a minute," he said, "that the great names of Joan Crawford or Greta Garbo mean that they can hold a scene on the stage. They don't know how. They have never learned their job. I have seen. I know how acting is done in Hollywood. It isn't done in front of the camera, it is done in the cutting room."

While 56 senior students, the largest graduating class in the academy's 52 years, listened, Mr. Howard warned them vigorously to choose with care between the stage and screen. Success in Hollywood, he declared, means an easy life of swimming pools and Spanish patios. The stage, he conceded, can be a succession of "headaches."

"You can't learn to act in pictures," he said. "You can't learn to act by standing in front of a camera for a minute and a half, two minutes or three minutes. Three minutes is a long time in pictures, 300 feet. You can't learn to act by doing that one or two or three times with no audience, no laugh coming, no applause, no communion with them (the audience) out there."

Charging that Hollywood "has a sinister effect on people who go there," the playwright admitted that he had experienced it himself. He did not know why, but he guessed it was the lack of an audience and of "standards and taste."

Harry Cohn Adding to Holdings, SEC Shows

Acquisition in January by Harry Cohn of 1,730 shares of Columbia Pictures common through voting trust certificates and 37 shares of the stock itself is shown by the semi-monthly report of the Securities and Exchange Commission issued this week in Washington. At the close of the month, it was shown, Mr. Cohn held 1,565 shares of common and 70,968 shares through voting trust certificates.

Reports on Universal Pictures for January showed acquisition of 100 shares of common by Samuel Sedran, New York, and the disposition by Willard McKay, New York, of 30 shares of special cumulative first preferred. The Wilkay Holding Company also disposed of 50 shares of the preferred.

Vallee Quits "Scandals"

Following a fist fight on the stage of the New Amsterdam theatre in New York and after three arbitrators in the George White-Rudy Vallee controversy had ruled that the "clash of temperament" was not sufficient ground for discharge of the singer by the producer, Hyman Bushel, attorney for Mr. Vallee, announced that his client would not continue in the production.

CHARGES FLY THICK AND FAST AT BLOCK BOOKING BILL HEARING

Threat of Demand for Department of Justice Action Made and Withdrawn in Tilt Over Theatre Policies

Threats to carry complaints to the Department of Justice and promises that the fight on block booking legislation from now on will be conducted without gloves featured thus the third week of hearings on the Neely-Pettengill—anti-block booking bill before the House interstate and foreign commerce subcommittee.

Made in the heat of argument after George Schaefer, vice-president of United Artists, had purported to show that some of the independent exhibitors who were seeking the bill on moral grounds do not operate their houses on the cultural plane which they professed to desire, the threat of Department of Justice action later was withdrawn from the record.

Meanwhile, in both Senate and House, promises of a legislative jam dammed up by the new tax bill gave indications that little controversial legislation, such as the Neely-Pettengill measure, will be possible of enactment in the remainder of the session.

Even under the best of conditions, the Pettengill bill cannot be reported by the subcommittee to the full committee and thence to the House until after the middle of April—providing, of course, that a favorable report is made by both. The measure then would run smack into the debate on the revenue bill and would be sidetracked, probably not to be taken up, if considered at all, until May, when members will be impatiently awaiting the Senate's action on taxes so that they may adjourn the session.

The possibility of cooperative action between the Neely subcommittee of the Senate and the House subcommittee to clarify the block booking ramifications appeared in Washington this week. Senator Neely, chairman of the Senate group, disclosed also that he is planning to resume public hearings, with at least one more session, because of urgent requests from a bishop and other persons who want to testify. He denied that his subcommittee had reached any decision on the basis of the hearings thus far.

Continuing his answer to the charges filed by proponents of the bill when they appeared before the subcommittee Mr. Schaefer on Monday told how his former company and other concerns concentrated on making sales even if to do so necessitated accepting bookings for less than the entire block.

The competition between the several companies is keen, and is exhibited not only in the drive for theatre outlets but in the "cut throat" competition between the affiliated houses. "It is a case of dog eat dog," he declared, explaining that it is the practice, where an affiliate

Federal Trade Commission Holds New Views on the Block Booking Question

Views on the present system of block booking of motion pictures held by the Federal Trade Commission a decade ago are not the Commission's views of today, it was revealed in a legal opinion expressed by W. T. Kelly, chief counsel of the Commission. Mr. Kelly reported to the FTC on block booking in connection with the Pettengill House hearings on a proposal to outlaw compulsory block booking and blind buying.

Although in the long-drawn-out Famous Players block booking case, which was referred to frequently during the Pettengill hearings in the past few days, the Commission bitterly attacked that method of selling, Mr. Kelly, in his opinion, now takes a more modern view of the practice and, while pointing out the propriety of quelling its use for monopolistic or improper purposes, holds it to be a sales method of many years' standing. He protests against its being designated a "crime" without consideration being given to available machinery for the control of unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Kelley's block booking opinion, considered one of the severest blows the Pettengill anti-block booking received, was as follows:

Memorandum for the Commission:

In re: H. R. 6472, 74th Congress First Session—

Pursuant to direction of the Commission, dated March 8, 1935, legal opinion on above captioned bill is herein submitted:

H. R. 6472 is titled:

"A bill to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion picture films in interstate and foreign commerce."

and may be summarized as follows:

Section One defines "Compulsory block booking," and "blind selling" as unfair trade practices, contrary to public policy, monopolistic in tendency and burdening commerce.

Section Two contains the customary and adequate definitions of "film," "lease," "person," "distributor," "exhibitor" and "commerce" common to the motion picture bills.

Section Three, using the phraseology of the Commission, declares block-booking unlawful.

Section Four declares unlawful the leasing for exhibition of films over two thousand feet in length, unless a synopsis of outline and treatment is furnished "at or before the time of making such lease." This section also creates a civil right of action for damages arising from "substantial difference" between synopsis and film.

Section Five incorporates practically unchanged, the penalty and injunction provisions of Sections Two, Four and Five of the Sherman Act. Violation of Section Three (block booking) and "knowingly" making false statement in synopsis (Section Four) are made misdemeanors subject to $5,000 fine and one year imprisonment, or both.

Section Six preserves validity of sections remaining in case some are found unconstitutional, and the final section, Seven, specifies effective date.

OPINION

Section Three subsection (1) is valid. Using the definition worked out by the Commission, compulsory block booking is declared unlawful.

Subsection (2) regulating the transportation of films intended to be leased in violation of subsection (1) is within the powers of Congress. The Supreme Court in passing on this particular power, has upheld legislation regulating traffic in narcotics, lotteries, white slaves, and prize fight films. These classes held illicit and harmful have come to be known in the law books as the "out-laws" of commerce. A question arises whether the instant subject of regulation is a commodity sufficiently "tainted" as to come within such classification.

Second:

The synopsis requirement of Section Four, first sentence of which reads:

"It shall be unlawful for any distributor of motion picture films in commerce to lease or offer to lease for public exhibition any motion picture film over two thousand feet in length unless such distributor shall furnish the exhibitor at or before the time of making much lease or offer to lease a complete and true synopsis of the contents of such film," is, we think, arbitrary and discriminatory. There is reason to believe that this is contrary to the protection guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment against depriving "of life, liberty or property without due process of law."

The synopsis condition, to say the least, is a burden upon the sale or leasing of a future. Sales of futures are a recognized incident of property ownership.

U. S. v. N. Y. Coffee and Sugar Exchange, 263 U. S. 611.

Board of Trade v. Christie, 198 U. S. 236.

From the latter, at page 247, come these classic words of the late Justice Holmes:

"Of course in a modern market contracts are not confined to sales for immediate delivery. People will endeavor to forecast the future and to make agreements according to their prophecy. Speculation of this kind by competent men, is the self adjustment of society to the probable. Its value is well known as a means of voiding or mitigating catastrophes, equalizing prices, and providing for periods of want."

It is common knowledge, and a fact recognized by the courts, that the successful operation of motion picture theatres is basically linked with the practice of advance booking. It requires no great stretch of the imagination to foresee reliance upon the Constitutional Guarantee by both exhibitors and producers. The following quotation from Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578 at 589 may well serve either contender:

"In Allgeyer v. Louisiana the court defining liberty, said:

" 'The liberty mentioned in the Fourteenth

An Amazing Fact

PETTENGILL QUESTIONS SCHAEFER

is in competition with an independent, to protect the latter, either by splitting product between them or by refusing to sell the affiliate.

"The affiliated houses are in the most cut-throat competition there is in any industry," he asserted, adding, "this is the 'monopoly' of which the proponents of this bill complain."

Taking up the question of selling, Mr. Schaefer submitted the figures which had previously been given the Neely subcommittee, showing that in the first 400 cities less than half of the contracts were for full blocks. He also cited other statistics that in the Atlanta territory, 148 exhibitors took from 27 to 60 pictures and 77 took 26 or less; in Dallas, 71 took more than 26 and 65 took less; in Denver, 89 took 27 or more and 42 took 26 or less, while in Des Moines the figures, respectively, were 77 and 47, in Kansas City, 128 and 76, in Minneapolis, 160 and 89, and in St. Louis 94 and 46.

"It seems to me" Chairman Pettengill commented, "the present line of argument is a two-edged sword. You say block booking is a necessity and then you say that in town after town you are not selling in blocks."

"I do not say that block booking is a necessity, but that I object to this bill because it puts shackles on the seller and leaves the buyer to do as he pleases," the witness replied.

"Can you make any suggestion that will work both ways?" the chairman asked.

"I would vote for Mr. Kent's suggestion that you put the same shackles on the exhibitor as you do on the distributor," Mr. Schaefer said.

"If your industry can live in a situation where many buy less than 26 pictures, how can you argue that without block booking the industry cannot live?" Representative Pettengill continued.

"The greatest revenue this industry gets is from the larger situations," the witness explained, "and this bill would deny me the right to go to a customer of long standing and offer my entire product. He would say, 'Under this bill you cannot sell me all your product. I want to take my selection.' If I refuse to let him select, it is unlawful, even though another exhibitor is willing to buy. The mere fact I have offered him my product in accordance with a practice as old as the industry and he says 'I won't buy,' becomes an unlawful act."

Much of Mr. Schaefer's testimony on Monday was directed to an explanation of the method of handling percentage films and classification. He explained that percentage was adopted when the cost of pictures became heavy and many exhibitors felt they could not pay the higher prices.

Mr. Schaefer aroused the resentment of the chairman when he said that a provision was included in contracts calling for Saturday and Sunday showing of percentage films because of "sharp practices" by a few exhibitors, who ran the pictures on the poor days because they could fill their houses over the weekend with any sort of film.

He admitted that originally the contracts did not specify the play days, but pointed out that contracts with the big circuit houses required them to play a certain proportion of films on weekends and contended that general adoption of that provision merely put all exhibitors under the same restrictions and gave the distributor a chance to get back the best return for the picture.

Pictures are not changed in classification when an exhibitor cancels, he declared in answer to a charge that such shifts were made. Exhibitors frequently do not cancel because of moral objections, he said, but to get from under a high priced picture. Further, he added, a picture may be in different classifications in different territories because it may be a big hit in one and a flop in the other.

Mr. Schaefer also discussed the question of pictures which are distasteful to nationals of other countries, particularly a suppositional film which the chairman had referred to, showing Italian and African scenes, which might be offensive to Italian populations and to colored audiences.

Mr. Schaefer touched upon testimony that United Artists had refused $75,000 for New York showing of the latest Chaplin film, and explained that the offer had come from people who proposed to exhibit simultaneously in a burlesque house and a legitimate theatre and that the company did not think such outlets were proper. He disclosed that the company actually got about $134,000 for the picture when it was placed in New York.

A letter from Mary Pickford, president of United Artists, opposing the bill on the ground that the picture industry is not one which can be regulated like a mass-production trade, was put into the record by Representative Peyser of New York.

The flareup over the threat of Department of Justice action came Tuesday when Mr. Schaefer gave members of the subcommittee copies of what he said was a stenographic version of a decidedly "off color" stage show which he charged had been played by two of the independent exhibitors who were among the strongest advocates of the Pettengill bill as a moral measure, one of them Nathan Yamins.

A heated colloquy between Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied States; C. C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Representative Cooper of Ohio followed Mr. Schaefer's suggestion that the committee might not wish to have the material appear in the record.

Declaring that the hearings had degenerated to a new low level, Mr. Myers took issue with Mr. Schaefer's statement and promised that "when it comes to our turn, we are not going to pull our punches in regard to Mr. Schaefer and we are going to put in matter which should be called to the attention of the Department of Justice."

"How can any man appear before this committee and advocate decency when he permits any such show as this to go on in his theatre?" Representative Cooper demanded.

"I feel very confident that if anything like

Federal Trade Commission's New Views on Block Booking Question

Amendment means not only the right of a citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the engagement of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation; and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned. In the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, or of acquiring, holding and selling property, must be embraced the right to make all proper contracts in relation thereto.'"

Third:

The last paragraph of Section Four reads:

"If a motion picture film which has been leased in commerce is substantially different from the synopsis hereinabove required, whether in respect of the outline or the manner of treatment, the exhibitor may cancel the lease as to such film without liability for breach of contract and may recover all damages suffered by him because of such difference, or he may retain the lease and recover damages as for a breach of warranty."

We merely point out that the creation of such new right of action is customarily accompanied by designation of machinery for its exercise. (Sec. 7 Sherman Act; Sec. 209 Packers and Stockyards Act.)

The injunction procedure of Section Five, while fitting Anti-Trust cases, seems out of place and of doubtful practical value for the conditions toward which this bill is directed. The commodity, while one of quickly depreciable values, involves no such monetary value to call for the court procedure specified.

We conclude by calling attention to a general incongruity of the bill. Defining the new unfair trade practices, the bill pursues the principle of law initiated in the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-nut Packing Co. 257 U. S. 441, at 454:

"If the 'Beech-nut System of Merchandising' is against public policy because of its 'dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly' it was within the power of the Commission to make an order forbidding its continuation."

Following which there is a long line of cases recognizing monopolistic acts violative of the Sherman Law, as being unfair methods of competition coming within the purview of Section Five of the Federal Trade Commission Act. This is recognized jurisprudence, having in mind the Federal Trade Commission as a body "neither punitive, nor corrective, but rather preventive." The current bill, however, takes a business method which has grown up with this two billion dollar industry during the past twenty years, stamps the business method as a monopolistic practice, and overlooking available experienced administrative machinery for treatment of such practice, proceeds to definite it as a crime. The present legislative designation of those current extensive practices as being unfair, ought not to brand them as being inherently more malum in se than the classification of unfair competition cases defined by volumes of court decisions. They would seem very properly to come within the competence of the Federal Trade Commission and its precedents, rulings, and decisions on price, sales promotion, and trade relation policies.

Respectfully submitted,
W. T. KELLEY, Chief Counsel.

The sun-tanned winter tourists may be leaving Miami by the train load but there are still enough thousands of ticket buyers crowding the State Theatre and giving THESE THREE a new high, and even topping the previous highs set by Goldwyn pictures.

PETTENGILL BILL CALLED DECEPTIVE

that was said on the stage and came to Mr. Yamins' attention he would not permit it to go on," Mr. Myers responded.

Pettijohn Accepts Challenge

"Since Mr. Myers has made the statement that he is going to call matters to the attention of the Department of Justice and is not going to 'pull his punches,'" Counsel Pettijohn interjected, "we won't do so, either. There are some things that I have that I was not going to put into this hearing, but I am going to put them in. I want to say right now we accept Mr. Myers' challenge."

"I am not in the least intimidated by what Mr. Pettijohn said, but in the interest of fair procedure I will withdraw what was said about the Department of Justice," Mr. Myers said after the committee had refused to accept the script.

Demand by Ed. L. Kuykendall of Columbus, Miss., president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, for a cancellation privilege of "at least 20 per cent" elicited from Mr. Pettijohn a statement that "So far as I am concerned, I would take the position of Sidney Kent that for moral and social reasons the exhibitor should have a 100 per cent cancellation privilege, but when it comes down to the question of canceling because of the lack of box office attraction the matter must be settled within the industry."

Tells of Projected Conference

The interchange of views came after Mr. Kuykendall told the committee that as a result of action at the recent Miami meeting of the MPTOA board, a conference was planned with representatives of the producers and distributors at which it was hoped a number of disputed points would be ironed out. The organization already has drafted its demands, which he promised to provide for the record.

The MPTOA head attempted to clarify the confusion which existed among members of the committee as to the difference between independent, affiliated and circuit houses, declaring that those names never have been clearly defined, even within the industry. There are a number of theatres which are neither affiliated nor unaffiliated, he said, in which the distributor's interest runs from a majority interest to as little as one-half of one per cent of the stock, but where the management is completely outside the control or influence of any distributor. The term "independent" is even more confused, sometimes meaning it is not subject to any distributor control and other times that it is not a part of a circuit of four or more houses under the one management.

There are over 400 circuits with a total of 5,656 theatres, he told the committee, only five of which, with 1,094 houses, are national affiliated circuits. These are also 1,098 houses under local management in which a distributor has a minority interest.

The average seating capacity of all theatres in the country is 610, ranging from an average of 515 for theatres individually operated to 897 for independent circuits and 1,445 for national circuits.

The industry was aware of the deplorable condition of its pictures before the Legion of Decency was formed, Mr. Kuykendall said, and was planning as long ago as 1933 to improve the quality of the films.

He made to clear that he was opposed to "compulsory" block booking, but said that the various trade practices which the exhibitors do not like can best be settled within the industry and are not matters in which the public or Congress has any real interest.

No improvement in these respects can be achieved by the Pettengill bill, he argued, nor can the moral tone of films forcibly be improved. He pointed out that practically all pictures are shown in every town of any size, for competitive reasons and without regard to any block booking or other abuse, and the objectionable pictures will not be eliminated merely by changing the method in which films are to be sold.

The bill itself, he said, "is a deceptive and misleading piece of legislation" which will not end block booking or "actually accomplish any of the purposes set forth by its advocates." It will increase film rentals for the smaller theatres and lessen the possibility of a continuous supply of pictures, "provide a Roman holiday for the lawyers in endless costly litigation" and rapidly spread unfair and disastrous non-theatrical competition throughout the country, he argued.

The provisions for control of the differential on a picture when sold separately or as part of a block will be unworkable, he contended, and will throw upon the courts the burden of determining what is a fair price for a picture. So drastic is the bill, he told the committee, that "no distributor could afford to put his head in the noose" by offering a lower price per film on group buys.

As a result, it will force the sale of pictures one at a time and the exhibitor will have to pay more, as he does in the case of United Artists pictures, which are sold singly.

Opposes "Full Line Forcing"

"We are opposed to full line forcing, think that it is a short-sighted, stupid business practice that should be abandoned," he said, and most theatres would still buy pictures in blocks and just as many pictures would be played and box office receipts and rentals would certainly increase.

But, he added, "we are opposed to the legislative cure-alls that have been proposed, which would perhaps cure block booking, but would impose such severe hardships and burdens on the small exhibitor that he would be destroyed. This commercial practice cannot be improved through legislation, any more than censorship laws can improve pictures.

"We propose to continue our determined efforts to bring about an unconditional minimum rejection privilege in all exhibition contracts of at least 20 per cent of the number of pictures licensed. We firmly believe that this is the only practical solution of the problem.

"If this bill becomes a law, we are convinced not only that it will not work, but that it positively will completely destroy any possible chance to secure a minimum rejection privilege to the exhibition contracts by a voluntary modification of sales podicy. We think the distributors, brought under a rigid criminal statute such as this, will certainly follow the statute as best they can, and will have every reason to refuse to go beyond the statute itself in granting any rejection privilege or selective contracts."

Mr. Kuykendall submitted for the record briefs in opposition to the bill on behalf of Hugh W. Bruen of Seattle, president of the Northwest Theatre owners; J. Emanuel, Philadelphia, film paper publisher, and M. A. Lightman, president of the Theatre Owners Association of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The privileges given exhibitors depend upon the reputation they have established with the distributors, it was declared by Ray Morrow, Malden, Ark., president of the Arkansas Theatre Owners Association.

Explaining that he never had been compelled to run a picture not fit for his audience and has been able also to eliminate many commercial failures, Mr. Morrow told the committee that so far as the exhibitor in the small town, who has no competition, is concerned, block booking and cancellation present no difficulties.

"If I can't get along with a distributor I have a good remedy," he said. "I do not have to buy from him next year." This might not apply to the larger communities where there is keen competition, he admitted, but it works out fine for the man who has the only house in town.

The Pettengill bill is designed to give the exhibitor the power to reject an objectionable picture, he pointed out, but it does not make rejection mandatory and therefore offers no assurance of improvement in moral quality.

Box Office First Factor

Exhibitors are interested mostly in the box office, it was agreed Wednesday by Judge Roy L. Walker of Lampasas, Texas, president of the Theatre Owners' Protective Association of Texas. They are not interested primarily in individual pictures, but in the star value of what they buy.

He discussed the question of sound equipment at the request of the committee, explaining that it can be bought outright or leased and that the sound companies are not connected with the producers.

The most colorful witness to appear, E. D. (Jack) Miller, president of the Chicago Association of Exhibitors, told the committee the bill will not stamp out immoral pictures and assailed the "weak-kneed exhibitor who doesn't have the nerve to admit he runs a picture because it makes money for him."

Immoral pictures would not bring in money for any length of time, he pointed out. Mr. Miller differed from Mr. Kuykendall on the

HITS VIEW FILMS ARE FOR JUVENILES

Arguments advanced against block booking by representatives of church and educational organizations at the Pettengill subcommittee hearings in Washington are "based on a totally false assumption, to wit, that motion pictures are manufactured chiefly for a juvenile market," declares Edward Carberry, film commentator of the Cincinnati Post.

"To hold that the cinema industry should be permanently confined to making pictures that are fitted to 12-year-old minds is little short of idiotic," Mr. Carberry believes.

"The overwhelming majority of regular movie-goers are not children. I think one look at an average audience in a downtown theatre will settle that point. Must adults then submit to being governed by rules fitted to youngsters merely because parents want to shirk their responsibilities?"

P.S. Even though this picture is so good that your patrons will stay for 2 or 3 performances—you'll still make money... because "THESE THREE" is doing "builder-upper" business all over the country!

cancellation question, taking the stand that where a picture proves to be less of an attraction than expected, the exhibitor should share the loss with the producer.

A similar attitude was displayed by Morton Thalheimer of Richmond, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Virginia, who said any cancellation clause which works a hardship on the producer will not be found practicable.

The work of the department of secondary education of the National Education Association was outlined by Dr. Ernest D. Lewis of New York, who declared that photoplay appreciation classes are spreading rapidly.

Stage Show Testimony Erased

Testimony by George Schaefer regarding the stage show played at Nathan Yamin's theatre was expunged from the record upon receipt by Mr. Myers of a wire from Mr. Yamins, now at Miami Beach, explaining that the Capitol Theatre, where the stage show appeared, was under the management control of William Purcell, who had changed the policy from all pictures to Saturday vaudeville while Mr. Yamins was away.

Immediately upon learning of the change, Mr. Yamins said, he had wired Mr. Purcell threatening to take possession of the house unless vaudeville was discontinued, which was done immediately.

"I had as much to do with the booking of 'Sunkist Review' or as much knowledge of it as Schaefer," he declared in his wire. "It is just another despicable German poison gas attack to come as a smoke screen to conceal the vicious effects of block booking."

Pettijohn Files Brief

A brief assailing the constitutionality of the four block booking bills now pending in Congress was filed by Mr. Pettijohn, in which he said:

"Motion picture producers and distributors are engaged in an entirely private business and in the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly have the right to select their own customers and dispose of their film in wholesale lots of two or more at prices which in their judgment are adequate and also to enter into contracts for the future delivery of such film in advance of either production or delivery. This right is denied by all four of these bills.

"The motion picture industry," he contended, "is not a public utility but a purely private enterprise engaged in furnishing the public a service of amusement and entertainment and is not affected with such a public interest as to justify federal regulation and control.

Called Unconstitutional

"I assert that the Congress does not have unlimited powers," he declared. "It has such powers and only such powers as are granted in the Constitution, among which is the power to regulate interstate commerce. But there are certain well defined limitations to these granted powers, among which is the Bill of Rights, and whenever in the attempted exercise of granted power the Congress invades the Bill of Rights, it will be stopped by the courts. The denial of the inherent right of motion picture producers and distributors to market their film in wholesale lots by future contracts at such prices as they themselves desire is such an unconstitutional invasion of the Fifth Amendment."

Meeting the charge that eight companies constitute practically the entire industry, he cited trade paper schedules showing that there are 86 distributors and that last year only about 340 of a total of 800 features were distributed by the "Big Eight"—which, he said, really number nine.

Witnesses advocating adoption of the bill, he declared, fall within one of three classifications: "Those who have no competition and are not concerned with what the competitors will get, if they can get what they want and how they want it. For example, Mr. Yamins, who has Fail River, Mass., tied up, and Mr. Samuelson, who has no competition in his town.

Calls First-Runs Vital

"Secretaries of exhibitor organizations who are not concerned with either the success or the future development of the business, few of whom have as much as five cents invested in the business itself, or:

"Those who love to wear badges and enjoy being president or general manager of anything that bears the semblance of an organization."

Mr. Pettijohn referred to charges that the first-run houses pick their pictures and pointed out that these houses use only from 40 to 52 films a year but pay from $5,000 to $25,000. "Without those theatres the producers could not make the pictures with which 16,500 theatres are kept open and permitted to exist each and every year," he declared. "The big first-run theatres must be successful. They are the real life blood of the business and without them the little theatres would have nothing but 'flickers' and 'cheapies' made for them."

Referring to the charge that contracts have been written prohibiting 10-cent admissions, he explained that this clause was in contracts of exhibitors who pay from $6 to $15 per picture, to protect the better theatres in the same town who are compelled to charge 25 to 50 cents for first-run showings and also to keep some theatres from advertising, "Why pay 25 to 50 cents to see your favorite motion pictures when you can see them a few weeks later at our theatre for 10 cents?"

"It sounds good for an exhibitor to stand here and say that he wants to pick and choose his pictures," he continued. "But what about his competitors? Most of these exhibitor witnesses have admitted that they were not philanthropists and that what they call a good picture is a box-office attraction and what they call a bad picture is one that did not bring the people in to their theatres. They did not claim that there was any moral or social problem involved. They are engaged in the motion picture business for profit."

Mr. Pettijohn submitted the Legion of Decency list for March 12, showing only three pictures in Class C, none of which were made or distributed by major companies. He also submitted trade paper lists showing 32 studios in Los Angeles engaged in production and 98 independent producers, and a table from Motion Picture Herald of January 25, last, showing the growth in the number of theatres.

Denying that block booking had reduced the number of productions, distributors or theatres, as claimed, he said: "Now let me discuss what would happen if this bill became a law in so far as exhibition is concerned.

"If pictures are to be sold one at a time that means the 'auction block,' and the big theatre will take away from the little fellow what he believes to be box-office attractions and without any moral or artistic standards involved. If the large theatre in a town is to be able to bid over all competition for the box-office attractions, you would have as much interest and competition in the exhibition of motion pictures as you would have in baseball if Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, the Dean Brothers and all the big stars were on one team."

Mr. Pettijohn called the attention of the subcommittee to a speech made on the floor of the House last August by Chairman Pettengill, expressing apprehension of the gradual extension of Government in the field of private enterprise, and declaring that private enterprise is leading the nation out of depression, referring to the automobile industry and to films, saying: "The development of sound and speech in motion pictures was wholly an American invention, worked out in American research laboratories and developed and adapted through the risk of many millions of American dollars."

The hearings were to be concluded on Thursday with the time divided between Mr. Pettengill and Mr. Myers for final argument.

HOOVER LAUDS FILMS' AID IN WAR ON CRIME

Meeting the attack on so-called gangster pictures, C. C. Pettijohn read into the record at the House hearing on block booking a letter to him from J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as nonpartisan testimony.

"At the beginning of this particular cycle of films," the chief "G man" wrote, "there were several that I thought could be improved upon from the viewpoint of the enforcement officer. I promptly took up my thoughts on that subject with the organized industry heads and I received their most prompt and splendid cooperation. You are, of course, familiar with those facts because it was largely through you that these very fine results were obtained.

"In my opinion, motion pictures were a most important factor in bringing home to the American people the facts that: (a) crime is an organized business; (b) a gangster is a rodent that must be eliminated from American life; (c) respect and cooperation of the public with law enforcement officers was materially advanced."

Family Program or Legal Bridle Called Exhibitor's Alternative

Cooperation All Around Held Solution to Regular Family Shows

by EDWARD S. SCHWEGLER, D.D.
Director, Buffalo Council, Legion of Decency

"Cannon to right of them,
Cannon to left of them . . . "

"Forty - eight Motion Picture Bills Launched in Thirteen States."

There may be poetry in the first quotation, but there is certainly none in the second—at least not for the motion picture exhibitor.

And in the midst of the present renewed cannonading on the perennial legal front, a challenge of the writer to MOTION PICTURE HERALD that it present to its readers an article "outlining exactly what might be done in a cooperative program to provide suitable family entertainment" is lightly tossed back to him in the form of an invitation to do the article himself.

Said writer is neither a producer nor a distributor, nor an exhibitor, nor a trade journalist. However, he has had a good bit of contact with all elements and angles of the industry, and so offers the following sincere convictions, after much thought, for what they are worth.

We will only consider that type of legislation which has as its subject the attendance of children at the motion picture theatres.

Special Performances

Different states already have a certain amount of regulation along these lines. It takes the form mostly of prohibiting children under a certain age from attending the movies unless accompanied by an older person. This particular angle of the matter also we will not discuss. We will simply treat in general of legislation that would seek to regulate, or legalize, or both, special performances for children.

Such legislation is being considered in the state of New York at the present time. If it goes through, one may be sure that it will be followed by similar legislation in other states.

Let it be premised that in New York state, as things now stand, children under sixteen may not be admitted to a theatre without parent or guardian, and that the law is almost universally disregarded, especially at matinees. Of the current New York proposals, that of Assemblyman William T. Andrews provides a separate section reserved for children, a matron for each two hundred children, and written approval of the mayor, "or other similar official, or a commission," for the pictures shown. The bill introduced by Senator Lazarus Joseph and supported by Mayor LaGuardia stipulates local option, separate sections, one or more matrons, and the possibility of further local ordinances. In child welfare circles this second bill is looked upon as a minimum

CHURCH INITIATES PICTURE CAMPAIGN

The initiative in a campaign for "high class movies" in Maryville, Missouri, has been taken by the Winmore class of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

This religious group is sponsoring a study guide which gives information to adults, young people and children, as to pictures especially worth seeing. The guides are posted in the entrance to the church and on the bulletin board of the YMCA building at the State Teachers' College, in Maryville.

—an opening wedge for more definite state or local regulation.

There are therefore two principal issues here, and they may be considered typical of the country at large as regards the problem of children at the movies. One is the segregation and supervision of the children at designated performances. The other is regulation of the programs shown to children

The former issue does not concern us here. It is the second issue which we wish to consider.

There is, by common consent, a definite difference between films suitable to all audiences, including children, or at least not morally or socially harmful to children, and those definitely for adults only (herein and hereafter to be called "family" and "adult" pictures respectively).

This difference is recognized by all thoughtful parents, teachers, clergymen and the like, and by all social groups previewing pictures. Even responsible elements in the motion picture industry concede that such a distinction exists.

Thus, if you will turn to the back of the very publication you are now reading, you will find "audience classification of production" designated by the symbols "(A) Adult" and "G (General)," in "The Release Chart." Similarly, the "Hays Office" has been publishing for some years now a booklet called "Selected Motion Pictures," which contains summaries of what some eight outstanding national preview groups think about the audience suitability of current pictures.

Distinction Founded on Fact

So the distinction between family and adult films is certainly founded on fact. Of course, there can be notable disagreement at times as to what constitutes suitable family fare in a given case; but more often there is a decided majority, and even a unanimous opinion, holding that a picture is for adults only.

And that leads directly to the point.

Exhibitors should give public and practical recognition to the undoubted distinction between family and adult pictures by regularly making available every week at least one family program. (We are talking now about neighborhood and small town theatres.) Please note the words: a family program, not a special children's performance or a "junior matinee." Which is not to say that there may not be, occasionally or regularly, special children's performances in addition—provided they are chosen with an eye to their suitability to the junior audience.

But it is here contended that the family program should exist regardless of whether there are such special performances or not. Further, the family program should be on a definite day each week, and should be available throughout the entire day's performance, including the matinee. If it happens that on this same family day there is a special program for children, so much the better. What is here set down is an irreducible minimum for family entertainment.

Now why?

For several reasons. Because children attend shows regularly outside of special matinees. Because parents who want to go with the children often cannot give the time in the morning or afternoon. Because a definite day each week makes attendance of children and family groups most simple and convenient. Because pictures precisely and particularly suited to children may not be available for children's matinees each week. And because many children are apt to dodge the special children's performance. One manager known to the writer had the utterly painful experience (for a manager), of watching "the kids," bless 'em, turn up their noses at his specially arranged matinee and go on to the house of his competitor "to see a real show." And the experience is frequent of finding the children staying over the matinee's conclusion and waiting to see the evening performance. The same show all day eliminates this, and automatically takes care of the matinee, if there is one.

Day for Family Program

But further: the family program, to be practical and effective, should be scheduled on a day when the family trade—and that means especially the children—usually go to the shows. Those days are without question Friday, no school next day, Saturday and Sunday, school holidays. On at least one of these days, which are and always will be the real family days, a family pro-

O'Malley of the Mounted

(20th Century - Fox - Lesser)

Outdoor Comedy Drama

An outdoor action picture, dealing with the subject that the mountie always gets not only his man, but the girl and everything else he goes after, this production is full of the qualities that make thrill pictures perenially popular. Well directed, convincingly acted, the show is a spirited blending of drama, love interest, comedy, plenty of bad man villainy, quite a bit of dangerous adventure, a dab of mystery, the whole of which is held together by a well threaded vein of suspense as it develops thrill, excitement, surprise.

In the story, Mountie O'Malley, anticipating a vacation, arrives at headquarters to find that a fellow officer has been slain and that Bud Hyland is held on suspicion. To get the facts, O'Malley disguises himself as a criminal and is assigned as Bud's cellmate. There, after meeting Bud's sister Edith, he understands that the boy is just being sacrificed by a gang of bad men. Spurred on by love of justice and also a tender feeling for the girl, O'Malley worms himself into the confidences of Red Jagger's gang. Though Red is suspicious of him, his participation in a holdup sets him in right with the gang, but in wrong with the girl. A bank raid planned, O'Malley makes it possible for Edith to overhear plans. When the mob rides into town, police and citizens are awaiting them and all but Red are nailed. Taking up his trail, there's an action packed first fight before the bandit chief is subdued. Back in headquarters, Red's confession clears Bud, and as O'Malley is revealed as a resourceful Mountie to Edith, there's a romantic fadeout.

A different kind of action adventure, the picture seems to have plenty of the thrill and excitement quality that holds audience interest. In story content and production background, it also is suggestive of many good ideas on which the exhibitor should be able to base aggressive advance publicity.

Moonlight Murder

(MGM)

Mystery Drama

This picture, as the title graphically denotes, is murder mystery drama. It does not, however, follow the formula trend of this type picture. Plot of the story is different, although it does entail the idea of many persons being suspected of the principal crime. The background is unusual. Practically all the action takes place in the Hollywood Bowl during a rehearsal and presentation of an outdoor grand opera. This permits, as a pleasing contrast to the basic mystery and drama, the introduction of an elaborately staged choral sequence from "Il Trovatore." The feature was more or less a surprise and, judging by its enthusiastic reaction, a bit of diversity much appreciated by the preview audience.

In the story, D'Acosta, noted tenor, is warned that if he sings at the performance he will die, preliminary action being a buildup of D'Acosta's romantic philandering propensities and thus establishing motive for several to wish his death. As a supplemental element, a deranged composer, Bejac, threatens the singer because he will not read his score. D'Acosta dies upon the completion of the aria. Ambitious detective Farrell enters the case, brings with him a girl science assistant, Toni, to effect love interest contrast. With Bojac, the herring that is dragged across the trail to divert suspicion, it becomes evident that two women members of the company, Diana and Louise, together with their husbands, Pedro and Chiltern, have motives for and may have caused the man's death. Comedy is injected by the antics of Farrell, police chief Quinlan and valet William. When it looks as if Bejac, who has escaped officers, must be the culprit, there is a quick shift that reveals a totally unsuspected character as the killer and explains a novel motive for the crime and an equally novel method with which the murderer brought about the killing.

The basic showmanship of the picture is that it is one so told and produced that it defies solution until the last few minutes. At the same time, musical content and the unusual production effects it makes possible should not be ignored. It is more than possible that by paying some little extra attention to this, patrons not ordinarily interested in straight mystery thrillers may have their attention drawn to the attraction.

Previewed in Westwood Village Theatre, class neighborhood house. The picture kept the audience sitting on chair edges, paying careful attention, throughout.

Little Miss Nobody

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Drama

Although the supposedly necessary element of romantic love interest is ignored in this picture, it does not suffer thereby. There's plenty of a different kind of love interest in it, as it concentrates audience affection and sympathy upon a little girl. It has comedy that provokes smiles and laughs. It has drama with a melodramatic tinge. Its underlying human interest is accentuated with a vein of pathos that mingles smiles with tears. In comparison with previous Jane Withers pictures it seems to retain all the factors necessary to capture juvenile enthusiasm; at the same time it provides much to engage the attention and interest of adults.

The picture is the comedy drama of Judy Devlin, orphan home inmate, who has a penchant for getting into mischief. There's fun in all the escapades that keep her in hot water with the institution's matrons, Teresa Lewis and Jessica Taggert. There's drama in the situations whereby, discovering her own identity, she contrives to have her orphan pal adopted by a Mr. Dexter, who she knows is her own father.

There's a combination of comedy, melodrama, human interest with its pathos accompaniment when, fleeing the home, she finds shelter in the care of John Russell, an ex-convict bent on going straight. All builds to suspense packed melodrama, when Russell's gangster mate, Dutch Miller, bent on forcing him into further crime and looting the home of Dexter, is partially baffled by Judy. The power of emotion stirring human interest hits its high spot in the district attorney's office when Judy, fearing to implicate Russell, refuses to snitch as to who the criminal is. It turns to a team shrouded happiness when Dexter learns that Judy is his own daughter, but she, unwilling to shatter Mary's happiness, insists that Mary be considered his child as long as she can live with her.

Not a big picture, but yet an interesting and entertaining one, the production makes possible a line of unusual appealing exploitation.

Previewed in Uptown theatre, Los Angeles, second-run neighborhood theatre. The audience gave demonstration that, though grasping the spirit of gayety that underlies the story, it was alternately moved by the comedy and drama.

Charlie Chan at the Circus

Detective Mystery

To all the staple means of exploiting the sequence of Charlie Chan detective mysteries which Warner Oland has run into something of a record series in its class, showmen may add at this time special emphasis on the comedy aspect. In this production, to greater extent than previously, the laugh-producing potentialities of Detective Chan's numerous progeny are capitalized to the full and without in any degree detracting from the suspense or drama of the murder mystery which is, as usual, the basis of the story.

Exploitation may include also the whole range of vigorous and colorful stunts always on tap for use with circus pictures, because the circus setting in which this story is placed is big time in every respect and there is ample ring, tent and train stuff to back up advertising predicated on this phase of the attraction. Of course Warner Oland's characterization, which has become a screen standard, takes spot emphasis in all promotion.

This time Detective Chan takes his wife and fourteen children to the circus, holiday bent, and is called into consultation by Joe Kinney, one of the owners, who has been receiving threatening letters. He promises to look into the matter but Kinney (Paul Stanton) is murdered before he has an opportunity to tell Chan his story. Chan's eldest son, Lee, played by Keye Luke, attempts to solve the mystery by methods learned from his father but consistently follows erroneous leads.

Suspicion is directed first at John Gaines (Francis Ford), the dead man's partner, but this theory breaks down and confusion is multiplied when a discarded sweetheart of the dead man produces a marriage certificate and doubt is cast upon its authenticity. The younger Chan and a local police officer develop a theory that an ape known to have been out of his cage at the time the murder was committed is responsible. Then an attempt is made on the life of a trapeze performer with whom the dead man was in love and Detective Chan stages a pretended emergency operation on the circus grounds to trap the killer. This succeeds and the man who has been wearing an ape disguise in working out his evil designs is killed, clearing up all angles of the mystery.—WEAVER, New York.

Sutter's Gold

(Universal)

Biographical Drama

Essentially this is the biography of John Sutter, who fought his way from Switzerland to California to build an empire and become rich, only to have his world crumble about him with the discovery of gold on his land. Its secondary quality is a picturization of one of the most vivid chapters in the history of the state of California.

Edward Arnold portrays Sutter, other important cast positions being filled by Lee Tracy, Binnie Barnes, Katharine Alexander, Addison Richards and Montagu Love. Direction is by James Cruze.

Arnold's characterization is etched as sharply as his Diamond Jim. He makes the legendary Sutter's dream of empire real and compelling in the sequences which build up to the dramatic discovery of gold, and his pathetic struggle to regain his lost possessions in the final reel are emotion-stirring.

Arnold's work and the vivid chapter of American history involved in the picture are its principal selling points.

Falsely accused of murder in Switzerland, John Sutter flees his home and seeks refuge in America. In New York he learns of California and decides to settle there and start anew. But before making the trek west he throws in his lot with Pete Perkins, who later proved to be a true and fast friend.

A pause is made in the story of hardships and trials to relate Sutter's romantic adventure with a Russian Countess in the person of Miss Barnes.—BAEHLER, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal Pictures. Produced by Edmund Grainger. Based on the novel by Blaise Cendrars and a story by Bruno Frank. Directed by James Cruze. Ring Around the Moon

(Chesterfield)

Domestic Drama

Showmen exploiting outstanding characteristics of features on a par with or above star names have opportunity here to advertise the element of the unexpected, for practically nothing in the picture works out in pattern manner and audiences accustomed to guessing how a picture is going to turn out will have to revise their guesses many times before the end comes. It would appear that avoidance of the usual was uppermost in the minds of all hands in production of the picture.

Donald Cook and Erin O'Brien Moore head the long cast, and other members may have special value in individual situations. The character of the story, which sets up and disposes of various matrimonial problems, also lends itself to unusual treatment.

Mr. Cook is cast as Ross Graham, a newspaper reporter, and Miss Moore as Gloria Endicott, his publisher's daughter, in love with him and intent on marrying him in spite of the fact that he is in love with Kay Duncan, a girl reporter. Gloria persuades her father to discharge Graham and he, while drowning his grief in drink, accepts her proposal of marriage. Kay takes poison but recovers.

Married to Gloria, Graham finds himself still in love with Kay and so informs his bride, who agrees to divorce him after a suitable interval during which they will pretend to live together. Meanwhile Kay falls in love with Pete Maitland, unsuccessful suitor of Gloria, and is happy.

Gloria's father loses his money and commits suicide, leaving her destitute, a fact she conceals from Graham, who has found success as a playwright. When, after many misunderstandings and misfortune, Gloria admits her poverty, Graham tells her he loves her and they begin their married life anew.—WEAVER, New York.

Drama

Radio, with its behind the scenes views of a national broadcasting station, its technical phases, all aided by detectives, G-men and authorities in general, keynote the exploitation of this picture. Although not a pretentious effort by any means, the picture does have several action and thrill packed sequences upon which showmen may well capitalize.

As the film opens, radio technicians, aided by the police, G-men, and Army and Navy authorities, are trying to locate the source of a mysterious interfering wave which turns the finest broadcasts into whistling, shrieking bedlam on the nations' receiving sets. The elusive master criminal mockingly informs them over their own studio instruments that he will continue jamming their programs until paid a staggering sum.

Suspicion points to Neil Bennett, a discharged employee of the great American Broadcasting Company, who has disappeared. Neil, however, is being held prisoner by the real culprit, Beau Gardner, and Gardner is using Neil's name. Gardner plans to kill Neil when the final payoff is made, especially since the radio engineer is his rival for the affections of Fay Stevens, blues singer.

But, although by means of a cleverly contrived message Neil gets a clue to his whereabouts through to his friend and former helper, Eddie, the jamming continues and no rescuers arrive. In desperation, the broadcasting company makes the demanded payment and as Neil is about to be murdered his pal unknowingly stumbles across his whereabouts.

With a portable sending set Eddie shoots a message to headquarters and several police radio cars are sent to the rescue. The real criminals are thus brought to justice, Neil is restored to his job as head engineer of the broadcasting chain as well as to the arms of Miss Stevens.

Exhibitors, by concentrating on the radio angle as well as on the typical material that is here as well as in other action dramas of this type, should obtain suitable exploitation campaigns.—BAEHLER, New York.

Yellow Dust

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy Drama

In the key but not the manner of the William S. Hart western dramas that found response uniform in metropolitan and rural centers, "Yellow Dust" comes to the showman as a soundly commercial transcription of "Mother Lode," the stage play by Dan Totheroh and George O'Neil, with the names of Richard Dix, Leila Hyams and Andy Clyde for marquee purposes. By character and construction it is well suited for test purposes in situations where westerns have not been shown for some time, and to take strong billing in communities where the old west is staple program merchandise.

Gold and the quest therefor in the mid-sixties are, of course, the bases for the title. But in action and treatment the picture retains a temperate demeanor, neither dwelling unduly upon nor over-emphasizing the necessary gunplay, escapes, rescues and related incidents. Similarly influenced, the star achieves a naturalness welcome after his more deliberate, studied performances in past productions.

Exploitation logically may include all of the tricks in the barrel labeled "sure fire western," from stage coach ballyhoo to bullion lobby displays. Testimonials from local oldsters, to whom the picture should bring back plenty of memories, might prove especially valuable. Performances by the three players named above warrant any reasonable use of their names. Also, Cliff Reid, associate producer of the medal-winning "The Informer," is likewise associate producer of this picture.

Richard Dix is Bob Culpepper in the picture, a Tennesseean come west to seek gold, who saves the life of prospector Solitaire (Andy Clyde) and shares with him discovery of a rich gold vein. Starting to town to file claim, they come upon a stage coach holdup and rescue Nellie Brian (Leila Hyams), who has come west to sing at a hotel and gambling house operated by one Hanway (Onslow Stevens), plotting head of the stage coach robbers and the community's outlaws generally.

Hanway and Culpepper compete for Nellie's favor. Hanway tries to jump Culpepper's claim but is prevented by Nellie, who files it herself to protect falsely imprisoned Culpepper's interest. Culpepper, learning of this and misunderstanding her motive, breaks jail, abducts Nellie and takes her to the mine, where they are met by Hanway and his gang, who hold Culpepper while Hanway takes Nellie back to town and attempts to force her to marry him. Solitaire effects Culpepper's escape. He returns to town, shoots it out with Hanway and wins Nellie.—WEAVER, New York.

Going Places No. 20

(Universal)

Very Good

With Lowell Thomas as usual commentating, No. 20 of this series takes the audience to the beautiful city of Havana. From Morro Castle, guarding the harbor, the camera travels through the streets of the city. The well made buildings are all constructed of limestone, the backbone of the island, since laws passed in 1772 required it. Shown also are such points of interest as the monument to the battleship Maine, "Sloppy Joes," famous during prohibition as the stamping ground of tourists, the Country Club, and a party for children given by Cuba's man of the hour, Colonel Batista.—Running time, 9 minutes.

For the Love of Pete

(Vitaphone)

Competent Comedy

Robert Norton as Joe Palooka and Shemp Howard as Knobby, his ring manager and trainer, are nicely balanced principals in a smoothly paced, effective, rural comedy good for a number of laughs in most communities. The comedy starts slowly in a small town where Joe is employed as baggage smasher at the depot and handy man at Knobby's haberdashery, until a boxer scheduled to meet heavyweight champion McSwatt becomes ill and Knobby commissions Joe as a challenger. In the fight McSwatt punishes the laconic Joe unmercifully until Joe is reminded of the champion's needless cruelty to a dog on his arrival in town, after which Joe knocks out the champion and wins the title. Shemp Howard as Knobby carries the burden of comedy ably and the fight sequence generates dramatic as well as humorous interest. Lloyd French directed.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction No. 19

(Universal)

Oddities

In keeping with the high standard of this series of news events that are novel as well as instructive, No. 19 brings to the screen such novelties of the day as: a church in Columbia, Cal., every brick of which contains gold to the value of 80 cents; a ferry between Needles and Boulder Dam, which consists of $25,000 worth of cable and an old automobile chassis; a man in King County, Wash., who is barber, insurance agent and justice of the peace to the county; a miniature four-cylinder gas engine, built by a nineteen-year-old boy; a geyser by the seaside, a collector of salt shakers, an airplane constructed barrel fashion and a man who deals in wildcats.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Wash Your Step

(Vitaphone)

Satisfying Musical

Combining the best devices of stage and screen musical comedy, Director Joseph Henabery has managed to endow this short feature starring Hal Le Roy with rich program value. Most or all of the six principal musical numbers are originals. Settings are well above standard for the short feature field. The story has point and plausibility in addition to humorous possibilities and is logically, effectively worked out.

Hal Le Roy's singing and dancing is the best content item, naturally, although the Eton Boys are prominent in vocal support and a competent dancing chorus attends. Cherry and June Priesser, an oncoming sister act, have speaking roles in addition to doing their singing and dancing routine. Nanette Flack, Harry Lang and Charles Martin are other participants. The plot has to do with the competitive merits of two washing machine lines sold in turn by salesman Le Roy, whose ability wins him the girl and the job and so forth. The feature, a Broadway Brevity, deserves special mention in program advertising.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Playing For Fun

(Universal)

Good

Taking advantage of the country's current craze, the game of Monoply, this Mentone production presents a group of vaudeville acts introduced by players of the game. Seated at a table, the players throw the dice and move their positions. The first player pays the penalty of going to jail. In jail White and Jones, dancers, do their act. The next player is required to play the radio. Peter Higgins, tenor, is singing. Taking a chance results in a song and dance by Armida. Others introduced by way of the game are The Varsity Sight, a double male quartet; the Robbins family, tumblers, and slapstick comedy by the team of O'Donnell and Blair. The short is entertaining and is further aided by the novel introduction.—Running time, 15 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction No. 18

(Universal)

Of Interest

Interesting novelties in No. 18 of this series include the "House of Haunts," an unfinished ranch house owned by an eccentric and rich old lady who kept carpenters busy building odd doors and stairways for fear she would die if the house was completed. A startling sight is a comber of foaming water that rushes up the narrow bay at Hangchow, China, to the Chientang river during certain seasons. The harnessing of the sun's rays to produce power is accomplished by banks of mirrors, arranged in an arc to follow the sun's course and concentrate them. Other oddities are a church encased in glass, a woman plying the art of blacksmithing and the process that produces gold leafs.—Running time, 9½ minutes.

Winter Sports

(RKO-Radio)

Seasonable Review

To the many who prefer seeing winter sports to taking part in them, Bill Corum's comments on the rigorous activities photographed for this Van Beuren subject are calculated to supply adequate vicarious exhilaration. The high spot, as to skill, is reached in closeup shots of figure skating, although the subject also contains shots of curling, dog sled racing and other winter interests.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Vaud-O-Mat

(Universal)

Fair

In this Mentone production the set is arranged to resemble an automat. Biglow and Gerald, a tumbling team, visit the Vaud-O-Mat and by dropping their coins in the various slots are recompensed with a variety show consisting of Toto, the clown; the Donatella Brothers, accordian duets; the Smart Set Foursome, singers; Adele Lawrence, singer; Edith Mann, dancer, and their own Biglow & Gerald tumbling act.—Running time, 16 minutes.

An Oldfashioned Movie

(RKO-Radio)

Reminiscent Humor

The Easy Aces, she with a toothache and he with little or no sympathy, take their place in a theatre audience as the screen reveals a silent drama of the 1912 vintage (which seems older) and their comments footnote the stilted acting and halting action of the picture. The coincidence of modern wisecrack with old-fashioned melodrama is conducive to chuckle rather than guffaw and a closing flash-back to the Aces affords an unexpected laugh finish. It is among the better offerings of the Aces under the Van Beuren insignia.—Running time, 12 minutes.

Paris in New York

(Vitaphone)

Musical Comedy

Elaborately staged, intelligently directed by Roy Mack and effectively performed by a numerous and able cast, this Broadway Brevity is top grade. Irene Bordoni appears in it as a bored musical comedy star who misleads a producer, George Franklin, into believing the boat they are on has docked at Paris and, instead, stages for him in Greenwich Village, New York, a Parisian revue which he incorporates into a show he is producing. The illusion is handled in adequate manner and Miss Bordoni has opportunity to sing three of her songs, "There's Danger in Your Eyes," "Maybe, Perhaps" and "Pompadour," in her best manner. Pansy Sanborn, John Guy Sampsel, Ames and Arno, Will Aubrey and Frank Mazzone and company appear in the Greenwich Village revue. In character, production value and screen quality the subject is well above par.—Rnnning time, 22 minutes.

Gentlemen's Sports
(RKO-Radio)
Average Topical

Bill Corum's series of sports reels for Van Beuren has touched considerably higher levels than registered here in a summary of gentlemen's sports predicated on an inquiry to the narrator as to what he would do first if he inherited a million dollars. As scenes of sulky racing, skeet shooting, speed boating, glider riding, billiards, hunting and polo are run off, some of them from previous Corum subjects, the sports editor speculates as to which he would take up and concludes with an inconclusive remark about derby winners.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Beauty Shoppe
(Universal)
Average

An average Oswald the Rabbitt cartoon. Here Oswald, employed as a keeper at the zoo, sets about capturing three AWOL monkeys. The monkeys meanwhile have taken possession of a beauty shoppe. General havos is wrought before Oswold succeeds in outsmarting the monkeys after their excursions among the curlers, cosmetics and other paraphernalia of the shoppe.—Running time, 6½ minutes.

Jack Little and Orchestra
(Vitaphone)
Average Revue

Jack Little and his orchestra are costumed as sailors for the purposes of this unit in the Melody Master series and to their justly popular music are added the singing and dancing talents of Mildred Fenton, Dot, Donna and Teddy, and Jack Smith. Bandleader Little does a lot of leading and singing before getting down to the keyboard for the best bit in the picture. Six members, none original with this subject but all hits in their day, are played or sung or both.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Land of Evangeline
(RKO-Radio)
Interesting Travel

Introduced and narrated by Alois Havrilla, this Van Beuren travel picture reveals in its present status the region around Grand Pré, scene of Longfellow's poem from which the subject derives its title, presenting descendants of the Acadians in their present not greatly changed occupations and going on to depict contemporary Nova Scotia in interesting detail. The photography is excellent and the selection of material careful and intelligent. Narrator Havrilla is at his best.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Vitaphone Spotlight
(Vitaphone)
Routine Vaudeville

Staged without particular distinction and with "dumb acts" predominating, this subject may supply a useful program element in theatres where lack of stage entertainment is source of audience demand for material of the kind. In it the Five Elgins, the Balabanow Accordeon Revue, Frank Conville and Sunny Dale and Helen Reynolds' Skating Champions do their acts in routine fashion. There is no attempt to correlate their offerings by other means than sequence.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Blow-Out
(Vitaphone)
Commonplace Cartoon

Less humorous than speedy and less inspired than labored, this Looney Tune cartoon may have a proper place on a certain kind of program at a certain time or for a certain purpose. It is not a subject to combine recklessly with other items assembled for a juvenile audience. The central figure is Porky, the pig, and his major activity consists in pursuing a sinister figure, an anarchist addicted to bombing buildings, to return to him an infernal machine the dynamiter has planted. The chase results in capture, but the treatment of the subject doesn't afford sufficient comedy to offset the nature of the material.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Tomorrow's Halfback
(RKO-Radio)
Football Sidelight

Sports columnist-commentator Bill Corum early in this Van Beuren subject gives way to Lou Little, Columbia University football coach, who intercedes in behalf of a small boy (tomorrow's halfback) whose mother will not let him play football or own a pigskin until persuaded by the coach, who invites the family to witness squad practice and learn the training precautions against injury. Corum resumes the narration as big plays in famous games are projected and as training table diet, gym preparation of player for field and related data are pictured. Some of the material is unfamiliar and all of it is pertinent.—Running time, 9 minutes.

I'm a Big Shot Now
(Vitaphone)
Technicolor Cartoon

Singing "I'm a Little Big Shot Now," the gangster boss of Birdville engineers a bank robbery, hides out from the winged bluecoats, engages in a terrific gun fight with them and, captured, sings a dolorous paraphrase of the same chorus plainly indicating contrition. The subject, a merrie melody, is brilliantly colored and smoothly, intelligently animated, making its points in orderly dramatic sequence and clinching the conclusion so that the juvenile mind cannot escape its significance. It is equally diverting for adult eye.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Neptune Nonsense
(RKO-Radio)
Color Cartoon

Krazy Kat and King Neptune share prominence in this unterrifying but colorful, as well as colored, imaginative flight wherein Krazy Kat invades the deep and brings up, after numerous adventures, a companion to share his goldfish bowl with its until then lone and lonesome occupant. Nothing in this Van Beuren Rainbow Parade Cartoon will disturb the dreams of its juvenile observers and no attempt is made to shoot subtly over their heads at adult comprehension. It warrants place on almost any kind of program.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Beery Sued for $80,000

Wallace Beery has been sued in Los Angeles for $80,000 by the agency of Berg, Stebbins, Allenberg and Lamb, Inc., for commissions claimed by the latter company which it is said the actor refused to pay.

FAMILY SHOWS OR LAWS

gram should be regularly and definitely scheduled.

If the program changes on each of these days, Friday might be chosen as family day. If, as in many places, the Friday and Saturday programs are identical, then they could be of the family type.

But what of Sunday? Undoubtedly, often more children attend the Sunday performances than the Friday and Saturday shows combined. Should we not therefore insist that Sunday be entirely devoted to family pictures?

Exhibitor's Problem

Suggest that to an exhibitor and he immediately begins to get white around the gills. He will tell you that he cannot take the suggestions of amateur screen experts in making up his Sunday program. Sunday, says he, brings him forty per cent of his business! He must put into his Sunday program what he thinks will draw the most people. Any consideration about family entertainment, film suitability, etc., is just so much gibberish to him. Do you want to put him out of business? (If, anywhere, Sunday shows are illegal, apply the argument to the other best days of the week, financially speaking).

There is also another side of the story to be considered. Since Sunday is the biggest day for box office grosses, distributors naturally try to have as many of their own pictures shown on that day as possible. Sometimes exhibitor and distributor do not see eye to eye, and then there is an argument, and an eventual compromise.

Meanwhile, the socially minded advocate of family programs has not been given even a thought.

Here again there is need of a parenthesis, as also, probably, in other parts of this paper. Due to the extremely varied and complex nature of motion picture exhibition, what is true of one place or circumstance may not be true of another. Thus, some exhibitors may get such a reaction from their audiences that they simply cannot show a certain type of picture on Sunday.

Generally speaking, therefore, Sunday as a consistent day for family pictures seems hopeless.

So much the more reason for concentrating on another day or days! If the exhibitor does so, he gains the good-will of parents, authorities and social groups in his community. If he does not, he will cause them eventually to throw up their hands in despair and trek to the legislative halls.

With a regular family program the exhibitor can say to parents and social groups: "If you want to be sure of family entertainment for yourself and the children, or for the children alone, come or send them on Friday (or Saturday, or both). On other days you must use your own judgment." And he can say to the lawmakers: "We don't need any law. We put on family programs regularly, approved by representative people in our community. They're satisfied and we're satisfied. Fold up you law till it's proved to be necessary."

But now let's paint the whole picture and put in the background and all the subordinate elements. A program for definite and regular family entertainment by voluntary action calls for cooperation all around.

The Producer

The cooperation of producers in voluntarily elevating the moral level of their product has been remarkably manifested during more than a year and a half by their adherence to the Production Code. One evidence of this is the large number of family pictures now being shown. For instance, the current Legion of Decency list places over half its titles in the family class. As further evidence of good will the producers might try to be especially careful about eliminating matter objectionable for children from pictures otherwise strongly appealing to them, for instance, Eddie Cantor and "Strike Me Pink." The children hear Eddie on the radio continually and are just "rarin' to go" when he comes to the neighborhood house. But this picture had once dance scene that, in the opinion of a number of sane and influential previewers, made it objectionable for family entertainment.

The Distributor

When there is a decided opinion from groups or elements in the community that a given picture is not in the family category, the distributor should not insist on a preferred playing date if that date conflicts with the presentation of family programs. By agreeing to another date he may be losing money in the particular instance; but he should remember he is gaining a great deal of goodwill for the industry of which he is an important element, and that he is doing his part to ward off possible legislation, the expense of which would be paid for by the industry.

The Exhibitor

His part has already been indicated. Further, with regard to programs other than those on the regular family days (for these also will enter the general question of family entertainment at times), he should try not to annex to a program containing a picture of outstanding appeal to children, shorts or another feature which could be considered harmful for them. There is nothing more exasperating to parents and socially minded people than to take children to see something particularly appealing from the childish point of view, and then to come across something else on the same program that is "simply awful!"

Outside Individuals and Groups

These should be sensible and reasonable. They should not make themselves pests. They should remember that the motion picture is the product of an industry employing many thousands of workers, and intended primarily to entertain. They should not insist that family films are only those of the "Alice in Wonderland" or "Skippy" variety. They should have their information at their fingers' ends, and be ready to produce it whenever called upon. They should help advertise the family program and encourage it by their attendence.

So there, gentlemen, is a program. It is not an attempt to tell you how to run your business, but a friendly suggestion from a tremendously interested outsider. It is based upon community responsibility, social consciousness, voluntary cooperation, public sentiment.

It is representative, fair, practical and wholesome.

It is not the legislative way.

It is the American way.

NEW HAVEN CRITERIA FOR FILM VALUE SET

New Haven film study groups in the public schools criticize current pictures, as follows: (1) Does the picture come up to the boasts of their producers? (2) If it is a well-known novel, are the familiar characters portrayed as the author had intended? (3) Are minor points over-emphasized; are major points treated with indifference? (4) Do we find in the picture that the moral viewpoint, if there is any, is put across in the right way?

The criticisms are combined into a recommendation which is posted so that the school may be guided in its choice of current films.

Swiss Home Industry Moves Toward Action

The much-discussed project of establishing a local film producing industry in Switzerland may be settled in the next few months, according to a report from the American consulate general in Zurich to the United States Department of Commerce.

Proposals include a plan to erect large studios with the aid of Government and cantonal funds and, for the present, rent them to foreign producers, eventually creating a home industry. The highest type of equipment would be utilized, according to the report.

Establishment of a domestic industry through collaboration with a French producer has an impetus in the filming of a typical Swiss subject, intended to have an international appeal, in a French studio.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

They say that competition is the spice of life. Sometimes it can be quite humorous, too, as in Philadelphia where the Casino and Colonial theatres, neighborhood competitors, unknowingly ran into a situation where each had a George Arliss picture booked for the same day, "Mr. Hobo" playing the Colonial and "The Last Gentleman" holding forth at the Casino. A tooth-and-nail publicity fight between the two houses came to a climax when the Casino sent a sandwich sign bearer into the streets carrying this message: "Why see George Arliss as a hobo when you can see him as a gentleman?"

Louis Sobol sends back from Hollywood Gregory Ratoff's story about Warner Baxter and his double, Frank McGrath. Mr. Baxter, it appears, made the assertion that he would like to plunge heavily in stock of Twentieth Century-Fox but the only thing which held him back was the fact that, in his opinion, it is "practically a one-man organization — Darryl Zanuck." And if Zanuck died, then, Baxter inferred, he would lose. "Go ahead and make your stock investment in Fox," comforted McGrath, "and then take out life insurance on Zanuck."

Someone has misinformed the management of Dartmouth College in New Hampshire as to the present status of motion pictures. Mr. Nels Rosberg, in Hollywood, is scheming to win the aid of California producers in extending economic unrest. He would replace all corn flakes as snow with real snow from a snow-making machine. The corn flake manufacturers will resent bitterly Mr. Rosberg's claim that with his mechanics the temperature of a studio set where winter atmosphere is required can be kept sufficiently low so that the breath of persons or animals will be visible at all times. Mr. Rosberg even promises to provide "icicles of clean water frozen in place." Corn flakes have been used for years in Hollywood to resemble snow falling, but, of course, they could not be hung for an icicle, nor could their atmospheric radiations ever be made to make the breath visible at any time.

'Round and around the world in search of authentic natural process backgrounds, Mr. Tay Garnett, for instance, will probably be disturbed if he ever hears of anyone in Hollywood succumbing to Mr. Rosberg's prospectus of snowy superlatives.

THEY'RE TELLING US

Universal Pictures has for weeks been busily engaged preparing for production a feature story by Louis Foster. Two days after J. Cheever Cowdin gave "Uncle Carl" $5,500,000 for the purchase of the company, with indications that Universal henceforth will have smooth financial sailing, the title of the Foster story was changed from "It's A Small World" to "Money from Heaven."

When Carl Laemmle walks for the last time through the exit of Universal City in California, turning the keys over to Mr. Cowdin's people, as he will on April 2nd, he will pass under a huge sign that he had erected years ago bearing this message: "Use the Brains God Gave You and You Will Surely Come Out Ahead." —(Signed) Carl Laemmle.

ODD McINTYRE was resurrecting the other day some of his impressions of the splendor of the footmen who stood in the doorways of New York's Fifth Avenue mansions in the 1900's. Mr. McIntyre's reminiscing took him through Memory Lane from the haughtiest butler he ever encountered to the experience of our own Will Rogers in a related incident.

The very Odd McIntyre's haughty-butler story had as its setting the Fifth Avenue mansion of Charles F. Morse. It was the sort of mansion, he remembered, where they draw up the portcullis swinging iron gate and let down the drawbridge to get the morning paper or put out the cat. McIntyre had been sent there as a reporter; Mr. Morse had fallen afoul of the law and his fortune and honor were tottering. McIntyre's zing at the bell was answered by a Bolton and Wodehouse musical comedy Parkins with side whiskers, braided tail coat and elbowed starchiness. He inquired for the master. The butler wanted his name, got his card, squinted at it and murmured: "Low pressman," and closed the ponderous brass door in McIntyre's face. And maybe Odd didn't feel low. He "could have walked under the foot-scraper on the bottom step, wearing a high silk hat and stilts."

Next to a full-blown English butler nothing is so awe-inspiring to a gawk as those night clerks in full dress in de luxe hotels, which brought Mr. McIntyre to the Will Rogers story. Will, in the days when he was not so well known, stepped up to one of those overdressed hotel clerks to inquire if a Senator from Kansas was stopping there. After a little nail polishing, necktie adjusting and mirror peeking, the clerk looked Rogers over again. "Was there something?" Rogers gave a little start, cuffed back his forelock and replied: "There was something I came for, but you've prettied me out of it," and he turned on his heels and walked out.

This department recently explained that the origin of "Mark Twain" as Sam Clemens' pen name came from the late Sam's habit of telling the bartender of his favorite barroom to "mark one," but, more frequently, "mark twain" on a blackboard behind the bar on which were listed the names of customers asking for credit—the "mark twain" meaning chalk up two drinks on the credit board in the picturesque lingo of the river days.

Now Roy Adams writes from his Mason theatre, at Mason, Michigan, that this is at variance with Mark Twain's own account of the matter, as related in chapter 50 of Mark's "Life on the Mississippi." Mark Twain himself, in his book, Mr. Adams advises, says he borrowed the name from Captain Sellers, dean of all Mississippi River pilots, who had arrived when Mark started on the river. The captain wrote short comments on river navigation, predictions as to high water, etc., which were published in the newspapers over the pen name "Mark Twain," a phrase that the captain had borrowed from the leadman's call when taking soundings on the river.

"Sam Clemens wrote a skit over the same name, 'Mark Twain,' burlesquing the captain's style of composition, which earned the veteran pilot's undying hatred for young upstart Clemens. When Clemens was doing newspaper work in a western mining town after the Civil War, he read of the death of the original 'Mark Twain' river pilot, and adopted the title as his own pen name," quotes Mr. Adams from Sam Clemens' book.

AVERAGE FILM ACTRESS HAS 4/5 OF A HUSBAND, headlined an Associated Press dispatch from Hollywood. We were flabbergasted at the idea of a husband shortage causing a division of husbands into five equal parts in order to give each lady an even allotment of the available supply. However, further investigation disclosed that "the average" Hollywood actress's husband is a fraction because in computing averages many Hollywood ladies were found never to have been married, while several others have had more than the "usual allotment" of husbands. Associated Press did not establish what the Hollywood standard is for "the usual allotment."

LONDON'S 124-ACRE HOLLYWOOD AT DENHAM IMPROVES ON NAMESAKE

Alexander Korda's Five Million Project Includes 30 Acres of Buildings, Laid Out on "Feed" System for Immediate Utility

by JACK OKEY*
in London

Hollywood has come to London. Its name here, though, is Denham. Denham is a property of 124 acres about 20 miles west of London. There are barren hills and tree-covered hills, meadows, a lake and a trout stream. There are wide lawns in front of an old mansion with walled rose gardens (there are 2,000 rose trees on the property) and tree-lined avenues which provide almost endless ready-made situations for an unforeseen variety of exterior shots. On this property was constructed a replica of "Everytown," the city which is destroyed in the earlier sequences of H. G. Wells' picture, "Things to Come." Also constructed on this property was a tower 100 feet high from which shots were made of the "Space Gun" and various other modern architectural constructions which are seen in the world of the future as shown in "Things to Come."

Studios on "Feed" System

On one part of the grounds a complete Scottish castle was built for the Robert Donat picture, "The Ghost Goes West." Other exteriors have been taken on the property for "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" and "Conquest of the Air."

The studio buildings themselves will be the core of the new Hollywood. In and around them will be made an average of 30 pictures a year.

With unlimited funds available (the total cost may reach an estimated $5,000,000) these studios will be the very best in the world. They have been laid out on the "feed" system. One department will feed another in closeknit cooperation. Dressing rooms will adjoin the stages so that even the humblest "extra" will have only to walk through a door to be on the set. There will be one great shop for trick effects alone, and it will have its adjoining departments for wood work, steel work, model buildings, plastering, and so on.

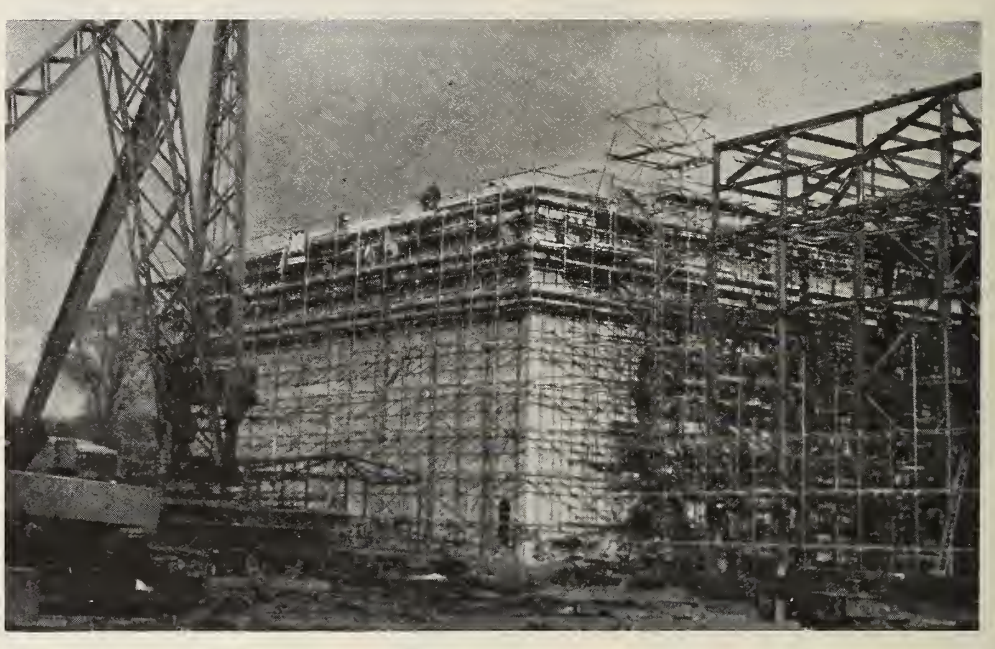
Eight Diesel Engines

Eight Diesel engines, each of 1,000 horsepower, will generate electrical power, and they will be erected in a special power house with its own staff. The staff in turn will have their own quarters arranged for their particular convenience.

There will be a building for color film development where cameramen, chemists and other experts will be able to work without disturbance.

There will be a complete negative developing and printing factory.

There will be a dozen small projection rooms, a small theatre for the showing of films to small groups of exhibitors, salesmen and others connected with the film trade.



There will be a complete cinema in which all the previews of London Films productions will be held after this year.

30 Acres of Buildings

About thirty acres of the Denham property will be covered by the buildings, the most important of which, of course, are the four sound stages, each 200 feet wide and each large enough to house the Graf Zeppelin. These stages will incorporate every modern film device. They will have great galleries along which camera cranes will be able to run for traveling overhead shots. The ceilings will support equipment for lifting and moving every set as easily as a man lifts a chair. There will be cables and lighting equipment more than sufficient to flood the entire indoor space to a degree of blinding brilliance. There will be enough light and power available at the entire studio to illuminate a town of 100,000 inhabitants.

Thus will Hollywood come to London, a Hollywood which I can truthfully say will be superior in many respects to the California film capital because its planning and construction will embody all the values and none of the shortcomings of the West Coast film center.

* Jack Okey, American studio construction engineer, for nearly a year has been at work on the building of Denham studios for London Films, an enterprise which Alexander Korda is sponsoring.

in which Twentieth Century-Fox Film has a 42% interest. Consolidated net income of National Theatres Corporation and its voting controlled domestic subsidiaries was $2,192,194 for the entire year ended Dec. 28, 1935, irrespective of dates within the year when some of the subsidiaries were acquired. If the portion of net income applicable to periods prior to ownership of such subsidiaries were eliminated the net income would be reduced by $408,135 to $1,784,058. The 42% interest of Twentieth Century-Fox net earnings for the entire year of $2,192,194 would be $920,721. If this amount were added to the consolidated net earnings of Twentieth Century-Fox aggregating $3,563,087 for the fiscal year, the resulting figure of $4,483,808 would be equivalent to $3.30 for each share of preferred stock outstanding and after deducting a full year's dividend on the preferred stock would leave $1.99 per share on the presently outstanding common stock.

"Gross revenues for the 52 weeks ended December 28, amounted to $43,942,678 compared with $37,546,586 for the previous year, an increase of $6,396,092.

"Twentieth Century-Fox Film's consolidated balance sheet shows current assets of $26,644,572 which includes cash—$7,110,003; receivables —$1,840,968; inventories—$15,701,643 against current liabilities of $6,260,522. The current liabilities include $1,696,600 five year, 6 per cent, convertible debentures maturing April 1, 1936.

"Investments and advances to affiliated companies, after deducting the reserve for revaluation of $14,500,000, stand at $16,721,446.

$10,179,300 Fixed Assets

"Fixed assets after deducting reserves for depreciation total $10,179,300. The only long term debt is the funded indebtedness of subsidiary realty companies which totals $2,023,200.

"The net worth of the corporation, as shown by its consolidated balance sheet at December 28, was $43,679,123 including earned surplus accumulated since April 1, 1933 of $6,096,947."

Commenting on the acquisition of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., during the year, Mr. Kent reported: "As a result of this transaction your corporation was strengthened by the addition of an executive management of production and studio personnel of high standing and proven ability. This has been demonstrated during the period since reorganization by increased demand for our pictures both in the United States and in foreign countries."

Eastman Net $15,913,251

The Eastman Kodak Company and wholly owned subsidiaries reported yesterday for the fifty-two weeks ended on December 28 last a consolidated net profit of $15,913,251 after taxes and reserves. After dividend requirements on the preferred stock the earnings were equal to $6.90 a share on the outstanding common. The year before the company earned $14,503,247, or $6.28 a share on 2,250,921 common shares. Income from operations totaled $18,461,416, compared with $16,646,475 in 1934.

Current assets on December 28 were $95,177,147 and current liabilities $17,312,176, compared with $91,522,873 and $15,109,870, respectively, at the close of the previous year. Cash was increased to $20,975,501 from $14,683,443. Inventories of $39,758,980 compared with $39,076,080. Earned surplus was $83,763,345 against $80,600,101.

"The volume of business continued to increase during 1935, sales showing an increase of 8.5 per cent over 1934 and 24 per cent over 1933," F. W. Lovejoy, president, said in his letter to stockholders.

"The greater part of the improvement in 1935 occurred in the United States. Income from operations increased $1,814,940, or 11 per cent. Earnings for 1934 were benefited by a substantial profit from sales of securities, whereas only a small amount from this source was realized in 1935.

"In the report for 1934, reference was made to the delivery of a substantial portion of the silver bullion stocks of your company to the United States Assay office under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. This transaction resulted in a profit of $1,550,045, which was carried to general and contingent reserves. Following the reduction in the silver stocks of your company, they were replaced to a considerable extent, but at somewhat higher prices, the market price of silver ranging from 55 cents an ounce on Jan. 2, 1935, to a high of 81 cents in April, 1935.

"A sharp decline in the London silver market during December brought about a reduction in silver prices in this country from 65 cents an ounce to 49¾ cents. It was, therefore, necessary to revalue the bullion on hand at current market prices on Dec. 28, 1935. This resulted in a net write-down of $626,689, which, following the

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY REACHING OUT FOR A UTOPIA IN MOTION PICTURES

Educational Institution Plans to Go Into Picture Production on Its Own with Objective An Unrestricted Screen Policy

Sixty-six-year-old Syracuse University, ranking 34th among America's 270 principal colleges, demands a "free screen" and a better one and will move to gain a cinema Utopia by producing theatrical motion pictures on its own. Too, a complete revolution of trade practices is in mind.

Percolating through the usual campus gossip at Syracuse and into the university's timeworn halls and corridors is the chatter of some 4,750 enrolled students on the subject of the school's invasion into the domain of Hollywood for the stated purpose of furthering the cause of "essential truth" through an uncensored and unrestricted screen. It is the first instance on record in recent decades where a university will attempt to uplift the motion picture by producing its own.

Syracuse, though its dramatic activities department, of which the energetic, enthusiastic Professor Sawyer Falk is director, will immediately produce a full-length talking picture.

Selected for the experiment is "Big Lake," Lynn Riggs' study of adolescent youth in Oklahoma. The scenario is being written by the dramatist, whose "Russet Mantle" is now a Broadway play success. If possible, Mr. Riggs will forsake Broadway for a brief spell to assist the university in the task of translating his brainchild into motion pictures.

Encouraging "Free Screen"

Chester Bahn, motion picture editor of the Syracuse Herald, reporting on the invasion of production, quotes Professor Falk as reflecting, among other things, a "desire to encourage a 'free screen' in much the same way that there is a 'free stage.'"

The Professor's experiences as exhibitor-showman-educator, at Syracuse, are explained by Mr. Bahn as "attracting national attention, in educational circles no less than in the amusement world."

"We believe as well-bred citizens we have taste and discrimination and we resent the dictation of groups either from the Left Wing or Right," Professor Falk told Mr. Bahn for his newspaper. Furthermore, "We believe it is a fundamental in the credo of true Americanism to evaluate intellectually and emotionally attitudes, moods and points of view which are different from ours." The Falk school of thought at Syracuse University evidently thinks little of Hollywood's performance in this connection, for, he adds, if the "essential . . . artistic justification" be lacking, "no matter how valid the cause nor how cogent the argument, we are not interested,"

Revolution of Practices Sought

"Of course," he continued in his explanation to Mr. Bahn, "we must as practicing showmen necessarily avoid deliberate controversy; it is better not to arouse, intentionally, any sleeping dogs. On the other hand, it is impossible for us to submit to the conditions which the commercial (movie) houses must of necessity follow. It is part of our function (at Syracuse University), as a vital theatre, to arouse, disturb and frequently aggravate an audience."

The Professor appears to have in mind, too, an eventual revolution of motion picture trade practices. He said:

"We hope, by force of opinion, to show that certain films of merit are 'good box office'; we hope to break down the double bill policy; we hope to discourage the 'road-showing' (so-called) of film at exorbitant prices ($1.65 is too much to charge for any film, any time, anywhere, Max Reinhardt or no Max Reinhardt).

"We hope, too, to express our disapproval of block booking; we hope to encourage a better advertising of commendable short subjects; we will use our opinion against 'Monte Carlo,' 'Banko,' 'Screeno,' free china, free turkeys, free groceries. In a word, we will fight with and against the theatre managers for a better theatre. It will be a long fight and a hard one and we are going to suffer innumerable bruises.

"We have a job on our hands," Professor Falk dramatically admitted, "but as Mattie in the play 'Ethan Frome' says, 'That's a very interesting thing to think about.'

"For a university theatre to follow slavishly at all times the 'accepted and approved' is a sign of impotence," the Professor continued in explanation of the university's reasons for moving productionwise. "Moreover, we should strive to make our audience as international minded as possible."

The Professor said, "We detest the smug chauvinism of our local Hearst newspaper which said in substance: 'There is no need to bring foreign films to Syracuse. There are plenty of good American ones.' It is just because the commercial theatres are definitely conditioned by this type of reasoning that we feel obligated to exhibit foreign films. It is, briefly, our responsibility to bring to our community worthwhile cinemas that the other houses will not dare (for box office and other reasons) to bring. The films they present we have no interest in presenting—nor any reason for presenting.

"And still these same commercial theatres cry 'Competition.' We are not wittingly competing with them; we are offering items which they have for years denied our university community. We are fostering a social need by taking the situation into our own hands."

Professional Standard Set Up

While essentially a laboratory project, Chester Bahn reported, utilizing students enrolled in a special summer cinema appreciation course for both players and technicians, Professor Falk proposes to make every effort to meet professional standards. Leads in all probability will be selected from the University's Summer School Players personnel, while the camera work will be supervised by William Stanmyre, Syracuse alumnus. Mr. Stanmyre, formerly with Paramount as a cinematographer, is the inventor of several sound camera devices, according to Mr. Bahn.

"Big Lake" will be filmed on professional 35 mm. stock, and will be six reels in length. The story is adapted to the University's needs, being largely set in exteriors. One of Central New York's picturesque lakes which best meets the background requirements will be the "location."

In disclosing the University's entry into the cinema production field, Professor Falk also announced that the dramatic activities department would continue to operate the Civic theatre for a second year, despite the admitted trials and tribulations such expansion has brought.

Theatre Lease Renewed

Discussing the forward policy which saw the University acquire the Civic under lease from the Albany Savings Bank and its operation as a social manifestation and not a sheer money-making enterprise, Professor Falk told Mr. Bahn:
